"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

Died at Canifton.

Mr. Marshal Haight, who had been for many years a resident of the village of Canifton, died last night, aged 81 years. Deceased had been in feeble health for a considerable time. Previous to removing to Canifton Mr. Haight resided in Prince Edward County. He was formerly a member of the Friends denomination, but of late years had been identified with the Methodist Church. A family survives.

Child's Narrow Escape.

A two-year-old son of Mr. Fred Clapper last evening had a narrow escape from being seriously, if not fatally, injured. The little one was playing on the road on Pinnacle street, when it was knocked down by a passing vehicle. The wheels fortunately did not pass over the child. Its injuries consisted of a bruised shoulder and cuts about the face. It is reported that the horses were being driven at a high rate of speed. Who the driver was has not been ascertained.

A FAMILY NECESSITY

Is a remedy capable of affording immediate relief to the hundred and one ailments that constantly arise. It may be a cold, perhaps toothache, neuralgia, pain in the back—use Nerviline; it's more penetrating, pain subduing and powerful than any other liniment. Nerviline is at least five times stronger than ordinary remedies and its worth in any household can't be over-estimated. For man or beast Nerviline is a panacea for all pain and costs only 25c per bottle. Buy Nerviline to-day.

REMAINS WERE TAKEN TO PORT HOPE TO DAY.

MASONS TOOK CHARGE OF FUNERAL OF LATE TALBOT METCALFE.

The remains of the late Talbot Metcalfe, of Port Hope, who died here suddenly yesterday afternoon, were, to-day, after being prepared for burial, sent to his late home for interment. Deceased was a member of the Masonic fraternity, and Mr. H. Reid, of Port Hope, who is identified with the lodge in that town, came down last evening as a representative of the lodge and assisted in making arrangements for the taking of the body home. At 10 o'clock this morning a service was held at Thompson's undertaking establishment, conducted by the Rev. G. R. Beamish, Rector of St. Thomas' Church. Mr. Metcalfe was exceedingly popular in Port Hope, where much regret is expressed at his sudden taking off. Whilst the exact cause of death is not definitely known, it is generally conceded that heart disease was responsible, and that Mr. Metcalfe was dead when he fell into the water.

Damage by Lightning.

(Madoc Review.)

During the thunderstorm of Monday night a barn belonging to Mr. Ellis, near Hazzard's Corners, was struck with lightning. Mr. Ellis was in the barn at the time and succeeded in getting out his horses, but everything else was lost.

(Stirling News-Argus.)

This locality was visited last night and this morning by a rather severe electrical storm. The lightning struck the dwelling occupied by Jno. M. McGee, in the east end of the village, early this morning,—entering the chimney and tearing out the flues, but otherwise did not do any further damage, except giving the inmates a good scare.

(Marmora Herald.)

During the storm Friday, lightning demolished a chimney on the house of Mrs. Dunlay, Forsythe St., and also set fire to the sash and blind factory of the Pearce Company. Fortunately it was extinguished before much damage was done. The English church was also struck and nearly every telephone in town was burned out and a number of electric lights "put out of action."

Autos in Prince Edward.

The following, under the heading of "To Whom It May Concern," appears in the Picton Times:

Those persons who ride through our country in automobiles should remember that we who ride behind horses deserve first consideration. The man in the "auto" is safe; the man in the buggy, let his horse be ever so docile, is in danger from the moment his horse spies the monster coming down upon him. Last week a Bloomfield woman was driving from town. She had a little child with her. She saw an auto coming and she quickly made her escape into Mr. R. Sherey's yard. We are not all so lucky as to find ourselves opposite a driveway, and there are places on the highway where it is next to impossible for a woman to turn a frightened horse about, unless she be very expert with the reins. We have heard of the death of Mrs. Price last week. A runaway wheel frightened the horse, and though Mr. Price had the reins, Mrs. Price was instantly killed and her husband seriously injured.

Please stop at a safe distance (?) and lend immediate assistance or find an escape from the highway. We were here first.

A Convincing Experiment.

A merchant who had two stores in small villages tried an experiment. He put a bargain counter in each store containing the same articles at exactly the same prices. In the newspaper of one village he advertised his special counter. In the paper of the other village he did not advertise and sold goods amounting to $984. In the store the same month in the village where he did advertise he sold goods amounting to $1,723. In commenting on the result of his experiment that merchant says: "People who got the advertisement would pass by my one store and drive miles to the other for what they could have gotten for the same price in my store at their door."

BRITAIN'S ARMY REFORM.

Peace Footing Reduced and Conscription Proposal Discarded—War Secretary Arnold-Forster Outlines His Plan.

London, July 15.—War Secretary Arnold-Forster made his long promised statement as to his proposed reform of the army when the House of Commons went into committe yesterday afternoon on the vote for the war office.

The secretary said he did not propose to touch the militia, as public opinion was not ripe therefor, neither would the royal artillery be decreased nor the number of cavalry regiments be reduced. He proposed to reduce the regular infantry forces by fourteen battalions, leaving forty or fifty battalions for home service, after providing for India and the colonies.

The army would be divided into two parts. A certain number of battalions would be kept at home. These would be reduced to five hundred men, 400 of whom would be enlisted for two year's service, and would afterwards enter the reserve for six years. These would be in reality territorial battalions and the object of the short-service system would be to build up the reserve.

The volunteer establishment would be reduced to 180,000 men, and much larger grants would be made, so as to make the volunteers an effective force.

From 15,000 to 16,000 regular troops would be kept at Aldershot, ready to take the field as a fighting force. Provision would be made for a permanent garrison at 21,500 men in South Africa.

In view of the progress made in submarine boats, he hoped to make a considerable reduction in the expenditure on the aquatic establishment. He discarded the conscription proposal, as it would cost an additional $130,000,000 yearly for the same number of troops as now forthcoming.

WINNIPEG WON EASILY.

London, July 15.—(C.A.P.)—The Thames Cup race at the Metropolitan regatta brought out three competitors—the London R. C., Thames Rowing Club and the Winnipeg. The course was from Putney to Hammersmith. London took the lead at the first, but at the London boat house, Winnipegs came over to the centre of the river, after which the race became a procession.

At the end of a mile, the Canadians led by a couple of lengths, and at Harrods, the visitors were only paddling. The official verdict was "won easily," and the time was 8 minutes, 1 second.

The Sportsman says the feature of the regatta was the appearance of the Winnipegs, who once more proved the usefulness of Third Trinity at Henley. The Winnipegs are certainly fine oarsmen, and, if trained at Putney for a few months, could not show finer all-round form, although a word of advice from one of our professionals would have helped them out.

Leave Good Memories Behind.

London, July 15.—(C.A.P.)—The Telegraph, referring to Winnipeg's victory, says that London was not in the hunt without speedy Canadian visitors. They will sail home on the 21st inst., and it is hoped they would carry back half as good memories of the old country as those they leave behind them for a better crew of oarsmen has seldom crossed the Atlantic.

Canadians Lost at Perth.

London, July 15.—(C.A.P.)—The Canadian bowlers were defeated at Perth by 17 shots. The scores were: Canadians 94, Perth 111.

HARD BLOW FOR WILLIE

Canadian Commissioner Warned to Keep Quiet or Quit.

W. T. R. Preston Told That Civil Servants' Discussion of Controversial Political Matters Will Not Be Permitted—W. F. Maclean's Amendments to the Railway Act Were Again All "Lost on Division" —Met With Considerable Favor.

Ottawa, July 15.—For airing his views on the Dundonald incident in the columns of London newspapers, W. T. R. Preston has been given a sharp call down by the Dominion Government.

The following letter, addressed to Canada's Commissioner of Immigration by the Minister of the Interior, instructs Mr. Preston in the duties of a well-behaved civil servant:

"The attention of the Minister of the Interior, was called in the House of Commons on the 6th July by Mr. Clarke, member for West Toronto, to the fact that a letter appeared in The London Times newspaper of the 18th June over your signature, dealing at length with questions now involved in a political controversy now in progress in Canada. A careful perusal of the letter as printed in The London Times makes it clear that it is intended as a defence of the position of the Government and as an expression of opinion antagonistic to the position taken by the political opponents of the Government. The Minister of the Interior stated in the House when the matter was mentioned that it would receive the consideration of the Government at an early day. The matter has since received the careful consideration of the Privy Council.

"The Minister instructs me to advise you that in the opinion of the Government your action is a serious breach of official decorum. I am further directed to advise you that in the opinion of the Government, the contribution of letters or interviews to the press by a member of the Civil Service dealing with or discussing subjects which are matters of controversy between the political parties cannot be permitted, and the violation of this rule in the future will be accepted as an equivalent of your resignation from the Civil Service. I have the honor, etc.

(Signed.) "P. G. Keyes."

MR. MACLEAN'S AMENDMENTS.

Four amendments to the Railway Act presented to the House by W. F. Maclean were formally declared "Lost on Division," after a solid discussion extending over several hours. These amendments were considered in connection with Mr. Fitzpatrick's bill to amend the Railway Act.

The third reading of the bill will be moved on Tuesday next, when the House will be divided on each of the four amendments, which were voted down yesterday. Briefly stated the amendments were as follows:

1. To bring express companies under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission.

2. To deprive the chairman of the Railway Commission of the power to decide all questions involving points of law.

3. To give independent telephone companies access to railway stations on payment of compensation for damage actually incurred in entering on the railway company's premises.

4. To apply the Michigan law of gradual passenger rates to Canadian railways.

Considerable Encouragement.

Though the Government set itself against each of the foregoing amendments, Mr. Maclean found considerable encouragement on both sides of the House. The immunity of the express companies from any form of Government regulation seemed to strike the House as a peculiarly undesirable condition of affairs.

Mr. Fitzpatrick, who seemed shocked at the mere suggestion of Parliament laying violent hands on any form of contract must have grown uneasy as he observed the tendency of prominent Liberal members to disagree with him. Archie Campbell, C. B. Heyd and Frank Oliver were among the Liberals who condemned the contract between the telephone company and the C.P.R. as a deliberate assault on public rights, and declared in favor of legislative action.

The amendment which aims to bring about lower passenger rates came in for only a brief discussion. More will be heard concerning this question when the bill comes up for consideration next Tuesday.

The provisions of the bill were then taken up and passed in quick order.

Doukhobors Rounded Up.

Winnipeg, July 15.—A despatch from Dauphin, Man., yesterday morning says that the march of the first band of Doukhobors ended Wednesday night at Fisher's Siding, on the Canadian Northern, where mounted police rounded up the pilgrimmage and loaded them on a special train which was waiting. They will be taken back to their colony at Thunder Hill, in Eagons.

The Orange Tree.

The orange tree is regarded as a prince among trees and the emblem of genius. A peculiarity of this tree is that it bears fruit and flower at the same time. Its leaves are evergreen, and as it grows older it grows in beauty and fruitfulness, its blossom filling the air with its fragrance. It is indeed a fit emblem of marriage promise and hopes. The orange tree is considered typical of love because, though its fruit is golden and its flavor and scent delicious, its rind is bitter, and, as every one knows who has experienced it, Cupid's dart causes pain. The orange is emblematic of gratitude as well as of genius and love.

OOM PAUL KRUGER DEAD.

Clarens, Switzerland, July 15.—Paul Kruger, former President of the Transvaal Republic, died here at 3 o'clock yesterday morning from pneumonia and supervening heart weakness. Mr. Kruger lost consciousness Monday. His daughter and son-in-law were with him at the time of his death. He had been out only once since his arrival here, at the beginning of last month.

The ex-President's body was embalmed, and will be placed in a vault pending funeral arrangements. Application will be made to the British Government for authority to transport the remains to the Transvaal. In the meantime they will be temporarily interred here.

Mr. Kruger, who was staying at the Villa Du Boichet, had been gradually failing for a long time, but he was able to attend to affairs, read the newspapers and receive visits until Saturday. A change for the worse set in on Sunday. He became unconscious Monday and remained so until his death. Besides the Etoffs, Mr. Kruger was attended by his own physician, Dr. Heymann, and by his secretary, Mr. Redel.

On several occasions Mr. Kruger has expressed a desire to be buried beside his wife, in his own country.

The post-mortem examination of the body showed that he died of senile pneumonia.

His Career in Brief.

Stephen J. Paul Kruger was born at Colesburg, Cape Colony, on October 10, 1825. He emigrated across the Vaal in 1839, and became Commandant General of the South African Republic in 1863. In 1872 he was a member of the Executive Council and visited England in 1883 as delegate from the Transvaal, devoting the next year to traveling in Holland and Germany. His election as President of the Transvaal took place in 1882, being confirmed in 1883, and his re-election followed in 1888, 1893 and 1898. His term as President ceased in 1900 in November of which year he took refuge in Holland. His literary efforts consisted in the publication of his memoirs in 1902. He was married several times, his third wife dying at Pretoria during the recent war.

LIBERAL UNION COUNCIL.

Rt. Hon. Joseph Chamberlain Chosen Chief of the Organization.

London, July 15.—Joseph Chamberlain was elected president and Lord Lansdowne and Lord Selborne vice-presidents of the newly constructed Liberal-Unionist council, at a meeting in London yesterday, which was attended by 1,700 to 1,800 delegates from all parts of the kingdom.

A resolution was passed in favor of a complete reform of the British fiscal system; approving the Premier's demand for increased power to deal with hostile tariffs and "dumping" and expressing sympathy with the proposals for preferential arrangements between the colonies and the Motherland.

The resolution was adopted with practical unanimity, and Mr. Chamberlain, who presided, pointed out that it must fairly represent the views of the Liberal-Unionists, as no fewer than 278 separate associations were represented at the meeting.

Immense Meeting at Night.

Mr. Chamberlain presided over an immense meeting in Albert Hall last night under the auspices of the Liberal-Unionist Council.

Mr. Chamberlain, who received an ovation, said that the object of the Liberal-Unionist Council was primarily the maintenance of the union between Great Britain and Ireland under the control of one supreme Parliament. There is nothing in the present circumstances to justify the relaxation of vigilance in this direction.

Mr. Chamberlain said the council was impressing upon the Government the necessity of reform in Irish electoral representation.

Mr. Chamberlain concluded by ridiculing the Opposition.

Vote of Confidence Carried.

Lord Tennyson moved a vote of confidence in the Government and the approval of its fiscal policy, which was unanimously carried.

Lord Lansdowne briefly acknowledged the resolution and said it would greatly strengthen the hands of Premier Balfour. Referring to the fiscal question, he said it must be discussed freely and fully, and they might see that which at present was only an idea pass into the region of accomplishment and reality.

THE DOCTORED LISTS.

Judge Morgan Hands Out His Report on Toronto Assessment Frauds.

Toronto, July 15.—Judge Morgan's report on the investigation conducted by him into the Assessment Department, with respect to the falsifying of the Markham Place assessment roll, was handed to the Mayor yesterday noon. The judge finds that there is nothing in the charge that Commissioner Fleming had anything to do with the falsification in question, that the Department is carried on now in as accurate and as satisfactory a manner as is possible, that Page's memory was inaccurate and unreliable, that the names were added to the rolls at the instance of Ald. Woods by Page, and that that clerk had been remiss in his duty in not informing Mr. Forman immediately that he had a suspicion that the names presented by Woods were not accurate. Ald. Woods is censured, the Judge saying that it is hard to see how Woods could justify such an act by the excuse that such things have been done in the past by others.

Immigrants With Trachoma.

A 15-YEAR OLD HEROINE

Loses Life Near Judd Haven Trying to Save Drowning Boy.

Distressing Double Drowning in Muskoka —Miss Nano Ward, Daughter of J. D. Ward, Treasurer of the Department of the Provincial Secretary, and Ritchie Powell, a Toronto Boy, the Victims—Heroic Girl Probably Took Cramps.

Muskoka Wharf, July 15.—A most distressing double drowning occurred yesterday afternoon about a mile and a half from here, near Judd Haven, the unfortunate victims being

Miss Nano Ward, 15 years of age, daughter of J. D. Ward, treasurer to the department of the Provincial Secretary, Parliament Buildings, Toronto, and

Powell, along with some companions, was in bathing, and getting out far beyond his depth was unable to swim back and sank. Miss Ward, who was standing by, saw the boy go down and immediately jumped in and swam out to rescue him, but before she got far from shore she also sank and did not rise again.

Suddenly Seized With Cramps.

Miss Ward was a good swimmer, and it is supposed she was suddenly seized with cramps. Her body was recovered within twenty-five minutes after the accident, but all the old remedies, combined with medical skill were unsuccessful in restoring consciousness.

Searchers began at once to drag the lake for the boy, but at a late hour last night his body had not been recovered.

The dead girl was the eldest daughter of Mr. Ward, who for the past thirty years has been connected with the Provincial Secretary's office. About a month ago the family took a summer cottage at Muskoka Wharf.

Toronto, July 15.—Both Mr. Powell and Mr. Ward left on the midnight train, accompanied by R. V. Stone, of the W. H. Stone undertaking establishment.

A Triple Drowning.

Halifax, July 15.—A triple drowning accident occurred near West Bay, C.B., yesterday afternoon. Alex. J. McLeod started in a sail-boat for Marble Mountain. He had with him his nephew and niece, Angus and Marjorie Ross, aged respectively 12 and 14 years. When half way down the boat was seen to turn over and go down, carrying with it McLeod and the two children. They were not seen afterwards, and no doubt were drowned.

Will Secure Reparation.

Gyangste, July 15.—The advance of the British mission on Lhassa, the capital of Thibet, has commenced.

Col. Younghusband has issued a lengthy proclamation that it is the intention of the British Government to secure reparation from the Thibetans for their "Overt acts of war" and that any interference with the progress of the mission "will meet with condign punishment and only result in making the terms demanded more exacting and the measures to enforce them more severe."

Broke His Neck on "Corona."

Toronto, July 15.—George Davis, 55 years of age, engaged as pantryman on the Corona, fell down the pantry steps at about 7 o'clock yesterday morning while the boat was lying at Lewiston, and dislocated his neck. He expired almost instantly. His body was removed to a local undertaking establishment, where a claimant is awaited. Deceased, who had been employed on steamers, for the past seven years, had no known relatives. He roomed at 134 York street.

Leg Shattered By Horse.

Bowmanville, July 15.—Robert A. Treleven was kicked by a horse in a runaway Wednesday, and his right leg fearfully shattered and broken in two places. The injury is very serious, and amputation may yet be necessary.

Gasoline Kills Two.

Buffalo, July 15.—By the explosion of a can of gasoline in a shed at the rear of a dwelling at No. 13 Hawley street last night Mrs. George W. Carbine was instantly killed and Mrs. Alice Buckley, who worked for Mrs. Carbine died shortly afterwards from burns and other injuries which she received.

Where It Is Always Leap Year.

In one part of "all the Russias," the province of Ukraine, it is always leap year as far as the female privilege of proposing is concerned. It is said to be customary there when a young woman falls in love with a man for her to go to his father's house and in the most tender and pathetic manner plead with the young man to take her as his wife. She promises the most submissive obedience to his will if he will but accept her. If the young man says, "I beg that you will excuse me from this," she tells him that she is resolved not to depart until he shall promise to take her for better or worse. She accordingly takes up her abode there and remains until he is wooed and won or until he ends the siege by fleeing to parts unknown.

Easier Than a Halo.

"Being continually held up as a horrible example is about as monotonous as the music of an automatic piano," says a cynic, "but it is much less strain on your nervous system than trying to balance a halo on the back of your head."

The Poor Bull.

He—Wonderful shot, that of Henry's! Why, he hit the bullseye nine times in succession yesterday! She—Yes, but just think of the sufferings of that poor bull! Men are such brutes!

SORE FEET

Inflamed, Itching, Burning, Sore, Tender and Perspiring.

ONE NIGHT TREATMENT.

Soak the hands or feet on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of Cuticura Soap. Dry and anoint freely with Cuticura Ointment, the great skin cure and purest of emollients. Wear on the hands during the night old, loose gloves, and bandage the feet lightly in old, soft cotton or linen. For red, rough and chapped hands, dry, fissured, itching, feverish palms, with brittle, shapeless nails and painful finger ends, or sore, tender, inflamed or itching feet, this treatment is simply wonderful, frequently curing in a single application.

Complete local and constitutional treatment for every humour of the skin, scalp and blood, with loss of hair, may now be had of druggists. Bathe with hot water and Cuticura Soap, to cleanse the surface of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle. Dry, without hard rubbing, and apply Cuticura Ointment freely, to allay itching, irritation and inflammation, and soothe and heal, and lastly, take the Cuticura Resolvent Pills to cool and cleanse the blood. This treatment affords instant relief, permits rest and sleep in the severest forms of Eczema and other itching, burning and scaly humours, and points to a speedy, permanent and economical cure of torturing, disfiguring humours, from pimples to scrofula, from infancy to age, when all other remedies and the best physicians fail.

Cuticura Resolvent, liquid and in the form of Chocolate Coated Pills, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap are sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27 Charterhouse Sq.; Paris, 5 Rue de la Paix; Australia, R. Towns & Co., Sydney; Boston, 137 Columbus Ave. Potter Drug & Chemical Corp., Sole Proprietors.

LORD DUNDONALD SPOKE IN HIS OWN DEFENCE.

His Lordship Before the Most Representative Audience Ever Seen in Massey Hall, Toronto, Denied That His Report of 1902 Contained Extravagant Proposals Necessitating Undue Burdens on Canada—An Incident Showing Who Endeavors to Suppress Free Speech in Canada.

Toronto, July 16.—Lord Dundonald arrived in the city yesterday morning and spent all forenoon receiving welcoming deputations from the Army and Navy Veterans and the ex-members of Strathcona Horse. He was met at the station by Mr. J. F. Ellis, President of the Board of Trade, and Major Robertson, Secretary of the Reception Committee. At noon he was the guest of the committee at luncheon at the Toronto Club.

AT MASSEY HALL.

In the evening he was greeted at Massey Hall by the most representative audience ever seen on a public occasion here.

It was announced that the demonstration at Massey Hall would be of non-political character; but this laudable intention proved to be in the nature of endeavoring to bind the leviathan with a cord. The speeches of the chairman, ex-Mayor Shaw, Rev. John Potts and Mr. Barlow Cumberland were non-political, but strongly Imperialistic in tone. One incident that gave an indication of the sentiment of the audience was the tremendous applause with which a mention of the name of Chamberlain was received.

But it was Lord Dundonald's own speech that determined the character of the meeting. It was from start to finish a vigorous attack on the Laurier Government and a vindication of his own policy. And it was quite clear that this was what the audience wanted. It applauded the speaker rapturously, and the name of Laurier was received with some hisses and cries of traitor. It must be said that the latter demonstration was confined to a few persons, but no counter-demonstration was attempted.

Presentation of Address.

An address was presented "To Major-General the Right Honorable Douglas Mackinnon Baillie Hamilton Cochrane, Earl of Dundonald, C. V. O., C.B., from the citizens of Toronto in public meeting assembled at Massey Hall, the 15th of July, 1901," and recounting his deeds, abroad for the Empire and in Canada, concluded with these words: "In leaving us you carry with you the good wishes of all classes. The people of Canada will watch your future career with much eagerness and rejoice in your success. We wish you godspeed."

LORD DUNDONALD'S SPEECH.

When the Earl of Dundonald rose to receive the address the cheering was universal all over the hall. Handkerchiefs waved and one little Englishman waved one in either hand as he stood up on the seat to make himself the better seen. When the cheering subsided Lord Dundonald said:

"I thank you, ladies and gentlemen, for the kindness of your welcome. Words do not come readily to me to express to you what I feel. You have mentioned, sir," turning to Major Robertson, "that I have done well in South Africa. (Voice "You did," and cheers.) I may tell you, ladies and gentlemen, that generals get far too much credit. If it were not for the men under them—if it were not for gallant men like the Strathcona Horse—we would get monstrous little credit." (Cheers and laughter).

A Nation's Well Being.

"I do not consider that it is necessary to trouble you with many words with regard to the particular incident which led up to my summary dismissal from the command of the militia. (Shame, shame and hisses). There is perhaps hardly anything which more intimately concerns the well-being of a nation than that its defences should be placed in as efficient a condition as possible.

"I was myself convinced that matters in this connection were far from satisfactory, and I TURNED ON THE SEARCHLIGHT—(loud applause and cheering)—TO SHOW THE PEOPLE OF CANADA THAT THERE WAS AN EVIL THAT WAS INJURING THEIR DEFENCE FORCE. What followed? All eyes were turned towards the light. All saw the evil and realized that the light revealed what was true, BUT THERE IS NOTHING THAT SOME PEOPLE HATE SO MUCH AS THE TRUTH—(applause)—even tho that truth may be in their own interests. Some of these have turned their anger upon me, upon the man who was letting light into dark places. The people have been told that I was trying to dragoon them, endeavoring to over-ride the civil power, acting contrary to the spirit of the constitution, when IN TRUTH IT WAS NOT I BUT OTHERS WHO WERE TRAMPLING UPON THE SPIRIT OF THE CONSTITUTION, that great Magna Charta whose essential principle is freedom and even-handed justice to all men regardless of political party.

Importance of Non-Interference.

All right-thinking persons realize the vital importance of non-interference with those high officials who administer justice between man and man; surely the defence of the country, the selection of the military leaders of the people are as important as the administration of civil justice, and the man who endeavors to do his duty in an impartial manner in this respect should have his hands strengthened rather than weakened.

This question of leaders may appear to be of little importance to those who do not realize what it means, but I would urge them to ask any friend who has had actual experience of war and he will tell you how often it has occurred that lives have been needlessly sacrificed and mourning and sorrow brought to many a home without any real benefit to the nation by blundering incompetence. (Applause.)

"Cause and effect follow one another with astonishing rapidity in political matters. If the people are careless and indifferent with regard to the administration of their military system, so in the end they will get a lax and worthless system, however much the true interests of the country may suffer.

"Those who administer a militia force are only human and will probably resist interference with their duties only up to a certain point. Some may have wives and families dependent upon them, some men may desire a quiet life—which I do—some men may be mere automata to carry out the behests of a particular political party, but if their duties are not carried out with a single eye to the benefit of the force, irrespective of any other considerations, but efficiency, the results must be disastrous, and in the event of war arising, dangerous, if not fatal, to the safety of the nation.

"Now, ladies and gentlemen, there is a certain class of persons in the world to whom it is a matter of indifference whether they use truth or misrepresentation as a weapon of attack. Voice, ("Give it them.")

"This class of person has been busily explaining to the people of Canada for the last few weeks that in my report for the year 1902, which the minister did not publish—(laughter and cheers)—there were extravagant proposals necessitating great and undue burdens on the people of Canada.

Believes in Confidences.

"First of all let me say that I believe in taking the people into confidence, and in this connection I believe in allowing the people to know what their expert adviser thinks is desirable for their safety. All that he thinks desirable need not necessarily be adopted, but if there is nothing in a report that it is prudent for international reasons to keep private, why on earth should not the people be taken into confidence? It is their business; they have to find the money or they have to refuse to find the money. But if the facts are concealed from them how are they to be in a position to consider as to what is requisite for the proper defence of the country.

"And let me say here that it has been entirely optional with the minister of militia to carry out proposals published in the reports of previous general officers commanding, as a reference to published reports will conclusively show.

"The most extraordinary feature of the controversy with regard to the recommendations in my report for 1903 is the very remarkable fact that the main features and recommendations in it, so far as paper organization is concerned, have been already adopted, and are now in force in Canada.

Government Lethargy.

"But the publication of this report would have shown the people of Canada that in addition to the recommendations which have been carried out, other matters which urgently call for action should long ago ere this have received attention from the government. For instance, in 1902 I urged as my predecessors had previously done, that it was highly undesirable that the whole supply of ammunition and warlike material should be derived from any one place and recommended that an ammunition factory should also be established in the Province of Ontario, so as not to have all our eggs in one basket, AS IN THE EVENT OF QUEBEC BEING CUT OFF BY AN ENEMY THE REST OF CANADA WOULD BE HELPLESS.

AMMUNITION WOULD LAST BUT HALF AN HOUR!

The present condition of the Canadian Militia is thus semi-officially stated:

"The Militia consists of about eighty battalions of infantry, fifteen or twenty regiments of cavalry, and about twenty batteries of field artillery. In time of national danger such battalions would have about 1,000 men, each cavalry regiment about 500 men, and each battery about 200 men. The total would be about 100,000 men. In peace time the battalions are kept down to a strength of three or four hundred men, and the enrolled strength is from 35,000 to 40,000. The number attending drill is stated at 20,000 men.

"To arm these 100,000 men we have rather less than 40,000 magazine rifles.

"For every rifle in store we should have at least 500 rounds of ammunition. It would be safer to have 1,000 rounds. That is standard military practise, and it appeals to common sense. The Boers had huge stores of ammunition laid when they quarrelled with Great Britain.

"The 40,000 Canadian Militia now enrolled could fire away every Lee-Enfield cartridge in the country in half an hour.

"When soldiers get into action, each man carries about 150 rounds on his person in bandoliers and pouches. Ammunition carts follow each battalion with a reserve supply. To get the cartridges from the carts to the firing line mules usually are employed. They are fitted with pack-saddles, and on these saddles are fitted the boxes of cartridges.

And this is the condition to which the Hon. Doc. Borden has reduced the Canadian Militia!. Only 40,000 rifles to arm 100,000 men, and only cartridges enough to last half an hour. The Hon. Doc. should follow the example of the Chinese Empress and order archery practise among his soldiers. But that is not all. In order to still further degrade the service, he proposes to abolish the office of G.O.C. and make himself chairman of a "council" (to be selected by him) which shall govern the Militia! Then shall we have dog biscuit contracts galore.

MUST BE TREATED THROUGH THE BLOOD AND NERVES.

One of the Worst Cases on Record Cured Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

St. Vitus' dance is a nervous disease chiefly afflicting children. There are a number of signs by which it may be detected such as a twitching of the muscles of the face, shaky hands, or a jerky motion of the arms, a trembling or a dragging of the legs, irritability and restlessness. St. Vitus' dance is caused by disordered nerves and blood—that is why it is always cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The pills fill the veins with pure, rich red blood, which in turn soothes and braces the nerves, making the sufferer well. Mrs. Luffman, Poucher's Mills, Ont., tells how Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cured her daughter, Louise. "I do not think it possible," says Mrs. Luffman, "that anyone could be afflicted with a more severe form of St. Vitus' dance than that which attacked my daughter. Her arms and legs would twitch and jerk, her face was drawn, and finally her left side became numb as though paralyzed. Her speech became thick and indistinct and she could neither stand still nor sit down. Two doctors attended her, but gave her no benefit. The last doctor who attended her told me she would never get better. It was at this discouraging time we decided to give her Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. After taking two boxes we could see an improvement; she could sleep better and the spasms were less severe. From that on she steadily grew better, and after using eight or ten boxes she was as strong and healthy a girl as you will find anywhere, and she has not had the least symptom of the trouble since."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the surest cure for St. Vitus' dance, hysteria, neuralgia, nervous exhaustion, paralysis, and all the nervous troubles of men, women and children. But you must get the genuine with the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," on the wrapper around every box. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent post paid at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SMART HABERDASHERY.

The man who wants the latest thing in a shirt, the right thing in a tie, smart gloves or hosiery, will be sure to find at Quick & Robertson's what he's looking for. While we're clothiers, of course, we still give our haberdashery department the greatest care. Everything must be correct or we'll have none of it. Hats also. Don't forget that we sell hats.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Dundonald is a soldier bold, as everybody knows
He dearly loves the Empire and is ready to come to blows
With anyone who'd like to see Great Britain lose her might
But he couldn't stand Syd, Fisher, so he's going out of sight
He has been in many battles and was never known to run
But Laurier wanted no "foreigners," so Dundonald's work is done.

The pasteboards were distributed among the Aldermen and city officials. The arrangement must have been gratifying to the people who got the tickets, but the ratepayers, what of them?

Poor old Mark Twain, bent and broken with age and grief, has arrived back in America, bringing with him the body of his dead wife. When she is laid in the tomb the humorist's heart will be buried with her, and the man who made millions laugh will smile no more. Old Sam Clemens and his beloved wife lived a real Darby and Joan existence. She was his inspiration. Now that she is gone we may expect no more bubbling mirth from him. But all true men and women, who are worth the shoe leather they stand in, will breathe a brief prayer for the greatest humorist that ever lived, now broken and shattered by the heaviest blow that mortal man can know.

The Canadian Militia, it would seem, will, when the new Militia Bill passes, be Soldiers of the King no longer. In future they will be Soldiers of the Canadian Government, for, as those who have studied the new Bill know, the name of His Majesty has been deliberately expunged by Laurier, Borden, Bourassa et al. Alas! for the good old song which set all our pulses throbbing when the war was on in South Africa, and our boys were fighting for Queen and Empire. Must we sing it no more? Well, we'll see after the next election.

Seeing Distances.

About 200 miles in every direction is the distance a man can see when standing on a clear day on the peak of the highest mountain—say at a height of 26,668 feet, or a little over five miles above the level of the sea. An observer must be at a height of 6,667 feet above sea level to see objects at a distance of 100 miles. The distance in miles at which an object upon the surface of the earth is visible is equal to the square root of one and one-half times the height of the observer in feet above sea level. Some allowance has to be made for the effect of atmospheric refraction, but as the refraction varies at different heights and is affected by the various states of the weather, no precisely accurate figures for general purposes can be given. Probably from one-fourteenth to one-tenth of the distance given by the formula would have to be deducted, owing to the refraction of the atmosphere.

Dutch Noses.

A study of Jan Steen's pictures of Dutch home life some 200 years ago proves to conviction that in his day the noses of his country folk were quite as fantastic as they are now. Without their pendulous, heavy, mirth inspiring organs of smell, the artist's tipsy fiddlers and peasants, quack doctors and housewives would not make one smile half as much as they do. It is well that the average Dutchman is a good natured fellow. No matter whether his amiability be due to his phlegmatic temperament or to the reasoned discipline in his soul, the result is the same to the outer world. If he were naturally disposed to be a prey to his passions, there would be something horribly discordant in the broad comedy of his face.

From the Chinese.

Here is a famous passage from the writings of a Chinese philosopher. More than twenty centuries ago it gained the author the sobriquet of "Butterfly Chung." The philosopher tells of a dream: "Once upon a time I, Chung Tzu, dreamed I was a butterfly, fluttering hither and thither, to all intents and purposes a butterfly. I was conscious only of following my fancy as a butterfly and was unconscious of my individuality as a man. Suddenly I awakened and there I lay, myself again. Now, I do not know whether I was then a man dreaming I was a butterfly or whether I am now a butterfly dreaming I am a man."

A "HEROE'S" TONIC

For soldier or civilian South American Nervine proves itself the greatest of system toners, nerve healers and blood cleansers.

A battle-scarred veteran just home from the war in South Africa, who was all run down and weak, the aftermath of that dread veldt fever, says: "I found South American Nervine a remarkable medicine and heartily recommend it to everybody in need of a good tonic." It's a grand remedy for all "run down" people. One bottle gives great relief. A few bottles never fail to cure. 50

OUT OF ORDER

The great evils which are often wrought by small ills can be no more clearly and effectively demonstrated than by the troubles of an automobile driver. How well he knows the disastrous effect of negligence or failure to give proper care to each and every detail. A single small part out of order affects the entire mechanism.

And so it is with the infinitely more delicate and intricate mechanism of the human frame. Affected kidneys put the entire system out of order. They are the direct cause of lame back, sick headache, sallow or deathly pale complexion loss of memory, loss of ambition, dyspepsia, melancholy, tired feeling, swollen joints, puffed face, rheumatism in any of its various forms, loss of appetite, and many more troubles. Have you any of these symptoms?

Bu-Ju is for sale by druggists, or will be sent by mail on receipt of price, 50 cents per box.

Uncle Terry

....By....

CHARLES CLARK MUNN

Copyright, 1900, by LEE & SHEPARD

halted at the head of the island, and he saw the smiling face and muffled form of Uncle Terry standing on the wharf alone.

How vividly came to Albert every detail of his last parting from Telly, framed as she was in a background of scarlet and brown foliage! He could see her as he last saw her, standing with bowed head and tear wet face, and feel a tinge of the keen pain that pulled at his own heartstrings then. He could almost hear the sad rustle of the autumn winds in the dry leaves that had added a pathos to their parting.

But the way was long and Uncle Terry's old horse slow, and the road in the hollows a quagmire of half frozen mud. Gone were all the leaves of the scrub oaks, and beneath the thickets of spruce still remained a white pall of snow. A half gale was blowing over the island, and when they halted in front of Uncle Terry's home the booming of the giant billows filled the night air, and by the gleam of the lighthouse rays Albert could see the spray tossed high over the point rocks.

With Telly it had been a long, dreary winter. Her only consolation had been the few letters from the only man who had ever uttered a word of love to her, and how eagerly they had been read again and again.

At times, when the cold desolation of winter was at its worst, only maidenly reserve had kept her from writing him that her loneliness and heart hunger were more than she could bear.

She had no inkling of his coming, and when Uncle Terry bade him enter the house she was alone in the sitting room laying the table, while Aunt Lissy was in the kitchen cooking supper. She heard the click of the front door latch and, stepping into the little hall as the door slowly opened, she met the man who for five long months had never been absent from her thoughts.

A glad cry escaped her, and then—

When Aunt Lissy came in and greeted Albert, if she noticed Telly's red face and neck no one was the wiser.

When Uncle Terry came in, and after Telly, as usual, had brought his house coat and slippers, what a happy little party was seated at the table. What if the ocean surges thundered so near and at times tossed their angry tears against the windows! Inside were light, and warmth, and love, and trust, and all that is holiest in human emotions.

After supper Uncle Terry and Albert smoked and talked, and when the evening was two-thirds past, Albert said: "Now, my good friends, I have a little surprise in store for you." Drawing from an inside pocket a bulky envelope, and crossing the room to where Telly sat, he handed it to her with the remark:

"I have the honor and exquisite pleasure of presenting to you, Miss Eteika Peterson, sole surviving heiress and descendant of one Eric Peterson of Stockholm, your paternal grandfather, these legal documents certifying to your inheritance of about $130,000, besides various pieces of real estate as yet unappraised."

The effect of this announcement upon the three listeners was not exactly what Albert had anticipated. They seemed dazed, and Telly, holding the big envelope gingerly, as if it might bite her, stared at Albert. Aunt Lissy was the first to speak, and "Good Lord a-massy!" came from her in an awed whisper.

"Thank God, little girlie, you've got yer dues at last!" was Uncle Terry's remark, and then, as the probable end of Telly's life with them cast its shadow athwart his vision, he bowed his face upon his hands and added, "I knowed it 'ud come an' we'd lose ye, soon or late."

A glad cry escaped her, and then—

For an instant Telly looked at Uncle Terry, and then she thrust the envelope into his hands and clasped his arm.

"I won't take it, father!" she exclaimed. "Not one penny of it! It's all yours, and I'll never leave you so long as you live!" Then she began to sob.

"Thar ain't no cause fer worryin' 'bout that yit, girlie," he answered, placing one hand on her bowed head, "an' no need fer ye to leave us 'thout ye mind to. We want ye allus, long as we kin keep ye, make sure." Then, noting the dumfounded look on Albert's face, he added, "Ye mustn't mind Telly's ways, Mr. Page; it's upset her a little an' made her histeriky. She don't quite understand yit what it all means. She ain't much used ter havin' a fortin drapped in her lap."

And then, rising, he added, "We'd best go to bed now, Lissy, an' mebbe Mr. Page, bein' a lawyer, can 'splain matters to Telly."

When they had left the room Albert seated himself on the sofa beside Telly and said: "I am a trifle puzzled and a little disappointed, Telly, at the way you feel about this inheritance. It is rightfully yours and will enable you to do much for the future comfort of those who are devoted to you. I had hoped also it would relieve your feeling of obligation a little."

"No money can do that," she answered quickly, "and all this won't be worth to father the care he has grown accustomed to from me."

"But won't this money do more for him than you can, Telly? Is there any need of his remaining here to putter over lobster traps and drive a wagon, rain or shine? He is getting too old for that, anyway. Why not build a home for them in Boston, or, better still, share ours there?"

"We haven't a home there yet," she answered, turning her face away.

"But we will have, darling, and as soon as you consent I shall begin to make it ready. I want you, darling, and I want a home. Life to me with you buried here is only desolation, and how much so to you the past five months can only tell. I know how you feel toward these good people, and your care for them shall be my care."

Telly hid her face behind her hands, and as she yielded a little to his clasp he whispered: "Do not say 'no' again, Telly! Do not rob yourself and me of love and home and happiness any longer! Make what plans for them you wish. Do as you will with your heritage. All I plead for is you." As he paused, holding her close while he waited for her answer, only listening love heard it whispered.

And outside the billows that years before tossed her ashore and had woven their monotone of sadness into her life still tolled their requiem, but she heard them not. She had entered the enchanted castle of illusions.

CHAPTER XLII.

WHEN June had again clad Sandgate's hills and village with green and spangled its meadows with daisies there occurred two events of sacred import to four young people.

The first was a wedding in the village church where the sweet voice of Alice Page had oft been heard and where now as a bride she walked timidly to the altar.

Her pupils, aided by their parents, had turned the church into a bower of green, brightened by every flower that grew in field or garden. Even the old mill pond contributed its share, and the altar was white with lilies. Almost every resident of the town was present, and the aged miller sat in one corner and watched with wistful eyes. The Nason family, with Aunt Susan and Albert, shared the front pew.

Two weeks later occurred the other event, when the Gypsy steamed into the Cape harbor and a select party became the guests of honor at Uncle Terry's home. Long tables, decked with flowers and loaded with the best Aunt Lissy could prepare, stood under the trees in front. The little porch was a bower of ferns and clusters of red bunch berries, and every man, woman and child that dwelt on the island was there.

Then, after Albert and Telly had halted in the fern covered porch to utter the simple but sacred words that bound them for life, the gladsome party gathered and made merry at the tables.

The sun was low in the west ere Telly kissed the tear wet faces of Uncle Terry and Aunt Lissy and the Gypsy sailed away. Far to seaward the purple line of coming night was slowly creeping in, and side by side on the little knoll where stood a low white headstone those two sat and watched her pass out of their lives. When only the wide ocean was visible and the line of shadow had crept up to the wave washed rocks beneath them, Uncle Terry arose.

"We'd best go in, Lissy," he said.

And she saw that she must lead him, for he was blinded with tears.

The human ape of the Hippodrome is not without its parallel in former days. An eighteenth century chronicle tells us that in 1738 "a most uncommon creature was brought from Carolina. It was a female, whose height was about four feet and in every part formed like a woman except the head, which nearly resembled an ape. She walked upright and sat down to her food and fed herself as a human creature. It was supposed to be the female of the creature which is called chimpanzee, or the mock man." A charming touch is added in the remark, "She expressed great respect for a boy who was on board the ship with her and seemed very unhappy at his absence."—London Globe.

HOT WEATHER DANGERS

More little ones die during the hot months than at any other season. At this time stomach and bowel troubles assume their dangerous form, and sometimes a few hours delay in the treatment means the loss of a little life. Baby's Own Tablets is the best medicine in the world to prevent these troubles, or to cure them if they attack the little one unexpectedly. Every mother should have a box of these tablets in the house—their prompt use may save a child's life. Mrs. Arthur Cote, St. Fortunat, Que., says: "My little one was greatly troubled with colic and bowel trouble, but since using Baby's Own Tablets the trouble has disappeared, and she is growing nicely and has good health." These tablets are guaranteed to contain no opiates and are safe for a new born baby or a well grown child. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent by mail at 25c a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Up to the hour of going to press (we went to press early to-day) there had been no more auto accidents reported. Everyone with whom we have spoken expresses entire approval of The Intelligencer's remarks on the subject. Some motorists, we are told, think they should, on the non-business streets of the city, be allowed a little license in the matter of exceeding the regulation speed. Nothing of the kind should be allowed. In the city limits the officials should see that the statutory speed is not exceeded, and any motorist who fails to do all in his power, by common sense means, to prevent runaways, should be exposed and punished. That is the only way to meet this really grave peril. The lives and property of our citizens must not be jeopardized to gratify the whims of anybody, who, though an unhealthy craving for excitement, feels a desire to "scorch" along the highway.

• • •

A case in point occurred yesterday. A party of tourists were in the city. They drove up and down circumspectly enough and then left via the bay shore road. Passing McCoy's livery they began to "hit it up" in style, and shortly after that an eye-witness alleges their speed to have been at least 15 miles an hour. It is against such reckless people as these that the machinery of the law should be set in motion, how we do not pretend to say, but it begins to look as though autoists, if they wish to run at a high rate of speed, must build roads of their own and keep to them. Then they can run as fast as they like and break their necks as rapidly as they wish, but until that is done they should be made to conform to the laws which govern all the rest of us, and which give no one the right to jeopardize the safety of any fellow-subject of His Majesty the King.

• • •

If Borden and Laurier want a more thorough dressing down than they got last night in Massey Hall, they can, no doubt, obtain it upon application. But we don't think they do.

• • •

And the true inwardness of Col. Ponton's quickly-terminated persecution comes out at last. Thanks, Lord Dundonald, for your manly efforts in behalf of one of our best and fairest officers. We looks towards you.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation—Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 68 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloes, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

ALLEGED CARELESSNESS.

HACK UPSET ON WILLIAM ST. LAST NIGHT — NO ONE HURT.

Last night, while Mr. Adolphus Burgoyne, hackman, was coming from the station, with a passenger inside, he had rather a strenuous experience. There was an excavation on William St., which, it is alleged, was not properly lighted, the result being that the hack drove up on to the rock and earth and was upset. The driver and passenger both tried to find language to do justice to the situation, and it is said that the latter, a dignified gentleman, displayed marked agility in getting out of the hack. He has no desire to take part in any more "loop the loop" experiences. Fortunately there was no damage beyond the shock.

SIR MACKENZIE'S VIEWS.

OBJECTS TO "CLAP-TRAP" THAT IS A "DRIFTING AWAY FROM BRITAIN."

Ottawa, July 14.—In the Senate yesterday there was a warm discussion in regard to matters in the Yukon, and in the course of a speech Hon. Mr. Scott spoke of Canada as a "nation."

Sir Mackenzie Bowell, replying, specially objected to the idea deduced from Mr. Scott's speech, that because Canada is a nation each department of the Government should manage its own business. Canada is no more a nation than she was 20 years ago. She is an integral part of the British Empire. All this talk of our being a nation was an indication of a gradual drifting away from the parent stock and setting up an independent flag of our own. He hoped that would never happen, and condemned all this clap-trap about being a nation. His proudest boast was that he was a British subject."

A HAVELOCK HEROINE.

WHAT MISS MARY DINEEN DID IN CONNECTION WITH THE RECENT FIRE.

Havelock apparently has a heroine, in the person of Miss Mary Dineen, and a citizen of that village writing to the press refers to her as entitled to a piece of Andrew Carnegie's "Hero Fund." The citizen writes as follows:—

"At the recent fire which destroyed so much valuable property in our village there was an incident which was probably not noticed by many, but which, I consider, calls for more than a passing comment. I allude to the heroic actions of Miss Mary Dineen, who displayed such wonderful pluck and endurance by remaining at the pumps, pumping water without any protection whatever from the seething flames, which had already made many strong men run. Not only that, but she put many of the stronger sex to blush by the manner in which she passed bucket after bucket, to those on the roof above, and when we take into consideration that this young lady has not the free use of her limbs as other women have (being slightly crippled), the credit due her is tenfold. To my mind the actions of this young lady call for something more substantial than merely writing it on paper, and if I understand it rightly, such an act as above referred to would entitle her to some consideration from those in charge of the "Hero Fund" lately established by Mr Carnegie. In justice to this young lady, and in order to show our appreciation of her heroic actions in saving property, I think the Reeve and Council should lay this matter before Mr. Carnegie and those in charge of this fund, and I am confident that Miss Dineen will be handsomely rewarded, which she justly deserves."

STORY OF JAP DEFEAT.

London, July 16.—The Tokio correspondent of The Times, in a despatch filed at 9.45 p.m., July 15, says that the St. Petersburg story of a Japanese repulse with heavy casualties at Port Arthur, July 10, is wholly discredited at Tokio, where no such reports have been received. It is believed that the story originated in Shanghai.

Losses on July 11.

London, July 16.—A despatch to a news agency from St. Petersburg says the War Office announces the receipt of a despatch from Port Arthur containing the report that the Japanese sustained considerable losses on July 11, the exact particulars of which have not yet been ascertained. According to the despatch the Russians recaptured all the positions lately taken by the Japanese.

Fight at Port Arthur.

London, July 16.—The Shanghai correspondent of The Morning Post, cabling under date of July 15, says: "A naval engagement took place today off Port Arthur."

The same correspondent says that The Chicago Daily News despatch boat Fawan has been seized by the Russians and towed into Port Arthur.

Russian General Wounded.

St. Petersburg, July 16.—General Rennenkampff was wounded, but not seriously, in a skirmish near Samateza. A bullet passed through the calf of one of his legs.

The Japanese are still entrenched south of Tatchekiao. No further advance has been reported.

The general staff has not yet received confirmation of the report of the occupation of Newchwang by the Japanese.

25cts. PAID THE BILL.

A man in Whitby was so badly troubled with sweaty feet that he had to bathe them 3 or 4 times a day and change socks each time. He bought "Foot Elm" and can now wear a pair of socks a week with comfort. "Foot Elm" makes feet healthy and removes unpleasant odors.

DON'T CASH MONEY ORDERS FOR STRANGERS.

POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT SENDS OUT A WARNING TO BOTH POSTMASTERS AND PUBLIC.

The Postoffice Department has issued the following warning:

"Postmasters are informed that an organized gang have been operating in Canada and the United States, raising the amount of money orders. It is requested, therefore, that strangers who apply for orders for small amounts be closely scrutinized, so that it may be possible to identify them afterwards if such action should be found necessary."

The notice is more in the nature of a caution than a warning, as no complaints of a serious nature have been received from Ontario points.

Inspector Henderson said last night that the object also was to caution people against cashing postal orders or notes for others whom they know little about.

"It is an easy matter for an unscrupulous party," he explained, "to get an order for, say $1, which he raises to $10 or even $100. Of course, no attempt is made to cash this raised note at the postoffice, for the advise note would give him away, but he takes it to a retail merchant in the town, purchases a small amount of goods and tenders the note in payment. It may be even that he cashes it at a bank."

Saw a Deer Near Canifton.

Mr. Goodfellow Campbell, whilst en route to the city this morning, saw a good sized deer which was grazing in the woods a little north of Canifton village. The swift-footed animal did not move far away until Mr. Campbell drove close to it, when off it started at a lively gait eastward.

PLEASING MILLINERY.

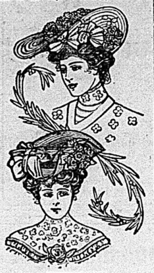
A bit of cleverness is this picturesque chapeau of parma violet straw, the brim curled up slightly at one side and bent down close on to the hair at the back, the crown encircled by a closely packed wreath of parma violets, into which small pale pink roses are tucked at intervals, a perfected simplicity that is the real acme of smartness.

Attractive originality stamps the little tricorne of navy straw as a treasure in its way. Decidedly chic and unique are the two flat, elongated bows that catch up the brim at the crown, the one of navy ribbon, the other in delicate mauve. A cluster of mauve rosebuds supports the right side of the front, a longer wreath of shaded pink blooms performing a like service to the other.



EFFECTIVE HATS.

Turbans to match the tailor made street gown are quite the most correct thing, while the broad picture hats are also popular. The white hat promises to be a delightful feature of the season and is carried out in straw or lace or, newer still, figures as the charming "lingerie hat" in mull, batiste or chiffon.

The deft manipulation of the ostrich feather by which it is made to curl over on its back, is drawn through the hat brim and otherwise disposed in most unusual fashion is one of the novel millinery features of the season.

How to Clean and Pack Woolens.

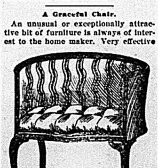
For cleaning clothes that are to be packed away select a sunny, windy day, advises Table Talk. Put every garment on the clothesline and after the pockets have been turned inside out, the garments whipped free from dust, let them hang for two or three hours in the sun. There is no better disinfectant than sunshine and fresh air. If a garment needs sponging have on hand the following preparation: Japanese cleaning cream, one-quarter pound of castile soap, one-quarter pound ammonia, one ounce ether, one ounce alcohol. Cut the soap fine and dissolve in one quart of boiling soft water. Add four quarts cold water and the other ingredients.

Dress skirts will wrinkle less if folded right side out. Dresses should be carefully folded in newspapers, each one separately, and placed in the drawers or trunks, with a good sprinkling of cloves between them. In folding men's garments care should be used. Fill the sleeves with folded newspapers and put a few cloves in each pocket.

A little investment of time and labor will bring good returns in the fall, or even such packages may be left for years without fear if they are not needed for use. Seal all boxes air tight by pasting strips of paper about the cover. It is a good plan to put away a few articles every week as they are laid aside and cleaned. This makes the work far less of a task.

A Graceful Chair.

An unusual or exceptionally attractive bit of furniture is always of interest to the home maker. Very effective in the way of a chair is the oval specimen here shown. With graceful frame of polished mahogany and most delicate silk covering it will fit delightfully into almost any scheme of furnishing.



OVAL OCCASIONAL CHAIR.

Transparent Picture Coats.

Transparent gowns that may be worn over a variety of linings or slips are quite familiar. Now, comes the smart little transparent picture coat to be worn over the silk waist and forming, with the skirt, a useful and stylish afternoon costume. An attractive one is in silk veiling of that faint grayish biscuit tint which for some reason promises to be one of the "smart" colors of the season.

Summer Clearing Sale of Odds & Ends In China.

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly—in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

After The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices.

Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen, for we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

THE LONDON TIMES.

Some Interesting Pages From the Life of Great Britain's Journal—How It Preserved Peace.

The London Times has made an arrangement whereby yearly subscribers may now have the paper delivered at a cost of two pence per day.

It is no vain compliment to say that The Times is part of British civilization, says a writer in The Daily Mail. For a hundred years it has belonged, with the Established Church and the British Constitution, to the historic greatness of the race.

"You cannot buy The Times," its editor proudly said when a powerful man sought to silence its thunder, and the words might well be written in letters of gold across the portal of Printing House square.

It has been so from the beginning. The Times was a child of four when its founder, the first John Walter, was put into jail for censuring the Duke of York. But they could not imprison The Times, and even while John Walter was in Newgate he was sentenced again for severely criticizing the Prince of Wales and accusing the Duke of Clarence of leaving his ship without leave.

The Government withdrew its advertisements and its printing contracts, but The Times went on its incorruptible way. It made Cabinets and broke them, exposed plots and averted them. At least once, at a cost of £5,000, The Times nipped in the bud an international conspiracy which might have ruined half the banks in Europe, and there are two scholarships in London schools endowed by a thanksgiving fund then raised by The Times. When the railway mania was at its highest, The Times sacrificed a fortune in advertisements by denouncing the spirit of recklessness which was abroad, and neither the penalties of the law, the enmities of statesmen, nor the loss of revenues has availed against the fearless determination of The Times to say the thing it thinks.

The history of The Times is the history of the world for a hundred and twenty years. No historian, writing of any period from the French Revolution until now, can do without its files.

It was The Times which saved the world from one of the greatest catastrophes that could have occurred in modern Europe. All the world knows the story now, but the thoughts of the French scare sends a thrill through the chancelleries even to-day. It was Bismarck who, this time, was behind The Times—Bismark, the founder of the German Empire, who saved that Empire from itself and revealed to the correspondent of The Times the terrible plot which would have crippled France a second time. Jealous of Moltke, and perhaps honestly detesting his fiendish conspiracy against a conquered foe rapidly regaining her strength, Prince Bismarck let Blowitz know, and Blowitz, the Paris echo of the Voice of Europe, told it to the world. Those who remember the middle seventies remember yet the effect of the thunderbolt which The Times hurled against Count von Moltke.

The Times has missed its chance sometimes. In 1892 its editor received a long letter forecasting the alliance of Russia and France, but, as nobody but the writer seemed to believe it, the editor kept it back—until 1897, when it announced, with the rest of the papers, that the Franco-Russian alliance was an established fact. If it has lost prestige in error, it has sacrificed itself, not once or twice, but many times, for peace and the welfare of the world. One of the most graphic stories in journalism is of the French Minister who sent for The Times correspondent and shouted a challenge to England in his ears, who flourished a bundle of telegrams in the journalist's face and declared that "—— —— should pay for it." The correspondent went—not to the telegraph office, but to bed, and the world was no wiser the next morning for the angry scene of the night before, which, had it been known, almost certainly must have caused a war.

It is something, surely, to have recorded for 37,399 days the affairs of the whole world. It is something more to have been, through all these generations, a fearless critic of princes and kings and the enemy of the wrong. "We thundered forth the other day," wrote Captain Sterling in a "leader" which gave The Times its nickname, "an article on the subject of social and political reform," and The Times is "thundering forth" still.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Shakespearean commentators have wondered why the poet placed the scenes of "Hamlet" at Elsinore, in the Island of Zeeland, whereas the Danish Prince lived and died in Jutland. But recently the municipal authorities at Elsinore have discovered in their archives that an English company was acting in their town in 1587 or 1588, and among the names of the actors are several of those who were acting with Shakespeare in London in 1589. Obviously, these actors must have talked about their adventures in Denmark, and so Shakespeare became well acquainted with Elsinore, and when he wrote "Hamlet" naturally placed the scene in a place which he knew by description rather than in a place of which he knew nothing.

A Princess' Hockey Team.

Once the daughters of the Duchess of Connaught were voted intolerably slow and shy, says a society writer in The Liverpool Post, but in the cheery atmosphere of Ireland they have developed, and are now as lively and vivacious as was Princess Charles of Denmark. Indeed, the royal family are chaffing the two girls on the subject, but it is not easy to get the better of Princess Margaret in a verbal bout. She announces that she is going to collect a brilliant hockey team for next winter, not only from the patrician, but from the skilled point of view.

THE AIM.

Thou, who lovest not alone
The swift success, the instant goal,
But hast a lenient eye to mark
The failures of the inconstant soul.

Consider not my little worth—
The mean achievement, scamped in act,
The high resolve and low result,
The dream that durst not face the fact.

But count the reach of my desire;
Let this be something in thy sight:
I have not, in the slothful dark,
Forgot the vision and the height.

Neither my body nor my soul
To earth's low ease will yield consent.
I praise thee for my will to strive;
I bless thy goad of discontent.

What can a woman do to earn her living? She can become a draper's model, is the suggestion of one authority.

"Unquestionably a great deal of the trouble concerning employment is caused by the women themselves," he said to an Express representative the other day.

"All domestic duties nowadays are scorned as being beneath their dignity. We cannot get domestic servants because the girls want to be typists or clerks. Good cooks are becoming as extinct as the Great Auk, and the only housemaid's place for which there is any competition is a housemaid's place on the stage.

"Yet we are overburdened with governesses—half trained, as a rule—hospital nurses, typists, and clerks who cannot get employment.

"A new profession has been suggested for girls who have had no special training for any business or professional work. All that it required is a good figure, and the carriage necessary to show off beautiful gowns.

"The profession is that of mannequin, or draper's model. These girls are employed by all large shops, and are selected entirely on account of their beauty and shapeliness.

"Their duties consist solely of walking up and down the long showrooms clad in all the most exquisite models which the shops can produce for the benefit of the ladies who wish to purchase them.

"Those who have tried it state that they find the life most profitable and comfortable, and they have not the slightest wish to change their position for that of a governess or a clerk.

"Unfortunately the demand for such women is not large. But, after all, perhaps it is nearly as large as the supply, considering how very few women are perfectly formed nowadays."

How London Grows.

A striking example of the rapid way in which what is known as the extra metropolitan area is ever extending is furnished in a return which has just been issued in relation to East Ham. But a few years ago—15 or 20 at the most—it was little more than a fairly large village with a population of a few thousands only. It had no electric trams, no municipal buildings worthy the name, and one might also say it had very little else to distinguish itself as a community apart from anywhere else. From the return just issued, however, it appears that the population now exceeds 115,000, while a splendid municipal electric tram service is in full working, a complete set of municipal buildings has been erected, and, in short, it boasts all the adjuncts for which one looks in an up-to-date modern community. When one comes to look at the fact that its population grows at the rate of thousands per annum it is not surprising to find that no less than 4,371 men living there are engaged in the building trade, while there are also 2,573 general laborers to be found within its area.

Another significant set of figures are, that while last year's births numbered 8,805, there are 747 persons engaged in the furniture trade, which prompts one to speculate as to whether the furniture trade and the birth-rate are synonymous. It only needs to be added that East Ham evidently believe in looking after the inner man, as under the heading "food supply" the very respectable number of 1,826 persons are employed.

Mrs. Ward, the Painter.

The London Star says Mrs. E. M. Ward, the painter, is a figure in the social and art life of London, familiar to a large circle of friends, admirers and the public, and popular with all. The granddaughter of an artist, the daughter of an R. A., the wife of an R. A., the mother of artists, descended from a line of ancestors all remarkable in art, and in her own person and talent embodying so much of the art emotions of our period, Mrs. Ward has been the friend and instructor of royalty, and a pioneer in the establishment of schools of art. Among her favorite pupils was the popular Princess Alice of Albany, now Princess Alexander of Teck, and at one time the Duchess of Albany herself. The popular Leslie Ward ("Spy" of Vanity Fair) is Mrs. Ward's son. Her husband was the late E. M. Ward, R.A., in whose lifetime Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort were frequent visitors to the joint studio of husband and wife. Mrs. Ward spent much time at Windsor doing portraits of the royal children.

G. O. M. of Empire.

Sir Frederick Young is the grand old man of the Empire. When Queen Victoria was just beginning her record reign he was associated with Edward Gibbon Wakefield in the colonization of Australia and New Zealand, and ever since he has been identified with every Imperial movement in London. He was the energetic and enthusiastic secretary of the Colonial Institute during the early years of struggle over a hosier's shop in the Strand, and in spite of his 87 years he continues to take an active paternal interest in its welfare in its new palatial premises in Northumberland avenue.

The Society Woman

Though hurried and rushed in society's whirls,
Her complexion is rosy and fresh as a girl's;
Well she knows, though she dances far into the night,
"Abbey's Salt" in the morning, will make her all right.

Society people recognize the value of ABBEY'S SALT as a health preserver and complexion beautifier. ABBEY'S SALT takes away the baneful effects of hasty, irregular eating—overcomes the ravages of late hours and bodily fatigue.

ABBEY'S SALT is a gentle, mild, yet perfect tonic laxative. It regulates the stomach and bowels—keeps the blood pure—the eyes bright—and the skin fresh and beautiful.

WOMEN TO STAY IN CATHOLIC CHOIRS.

NON-CATHOLICS OF BOTH SEXES HOWEVER, WILL BE EXCLUDED BY THE POPE'S RULING.

New York, July 15.—On the authority of one of the diocesan officials it can be stated that women are not to be excluded hereafter from the choirs of Catholic churches under Archbishop Farley's jurisdiction, but all non-Catholics will be.

Both these decisions follow from the interpretations of the recent letter on the subject of church music which Pope Pius X. sent to Catholics all over the world under date of November 22, 1903.

That the rulings of this order for a reform of church music affected the women singers who are so prominent a component part of the church choirs here has been a mooted question since. It is now held that it does not shut them out, but the diocesan ruling in regard to non-Catholics is a new phase of the question.

As explained by one of the leading authorities of the church yesterday the new rule has no personal relation to individual singers. It is based on the general law which the Pope lays down defining his wishes in regard to the singers that must compose the church choir.

Ruling Against Non-Catholics.

"'The liturgical chant belongs to the choir of levites,' said he, reading from a copy of the Pope's letter, 'and, therefore, singers in church, even when they are laymen, are really taking the place of the ecclesiastical choir. Finally only those are to be admitted to form part of the musical chapter of a church who are men of known piety and probity of life, and these should, by their modest and devout bearing during the liturgical functions show that they are worthy of the holy office they exercise.'

"You see under such a law," continued the ecclesiastic, "it would not be proper to have non-Catholics take part in the services, representing as the choir does the congregational part of the liturgy. So a diocesan rule to that effect will be enforced hereafter."

Archbishop Farley, in his address to the priests of the diocese who have been following the exercise of the retreat given by the Rev. Father Stanton, S. J., at the Dunwoodie Seminary, for the last ten days, spoke emphatically on the subject of church music.

Churches That Are Affected.

The new rule will seriously affect the choir of his own cathedral as well as many of the other Catholic Churches in the diocese. Some of those that will also lose singers are St. Francis Xavier's, St. Mary's Holy Innocent's, St. Leo's and St. Augustine's. In fact, very many of the churches have non-Catholic singers either as soloists or in the chorus.

In regard to the rule about women singers, the decision has been that the Pope's letter, which says, "Singers in church have a real liturgical office, and therefore women, as being incapable of exercising such office, cannot be admitted to form part of the choir or of the musical chapel," is aiming at a condition that does not exist in this country—namely, choir singing in the full liturgical sense.

Choirs here of mixed voices are regarded as representing the congregation in singing the responses for the non-liturgical parts of the mass and solemn services. As such the mixed choirs are to be retained if the pastors of the churches so elect. The character of the music, however, must in every case be changed to follow the Pope's rules.

The committee appointed by Archbishop Farley to consider the whole question in church music has made its report to him, and it is understood that he will embody its findings in a pastoral on the subject, which will be issued early in the fall.

The Baptist Picnic.

The Baptists held their annual Sunday School excursion yesterday to Twelve O'Clock Point and it proved to be an enjoyable and successful affair. During the day a programme of sports for the children was carried out. In the evening a large number went to the Point.

CATARRH, PNEUMONIA, CONSUMPTION.

Death's fateful trinity they are often called. Catarrh is the first stage, pneumonia often follows, and consumption finally exacts the full penalty. This can all be averted by using healing, balsamic Catarrhozone, an antiseptic that penetrates the remotest air cells of the lungs. Catarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus; it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. Don't delay, get Catarrhozone to-day. It means health, certain cure. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25c. Catarrhozone is guaranteed.

THE MASONIC GRAND LODGE

The forty-ninth annual session of the Masonic Grand Lodge will be held at Brockville next week. Mr. O'Flynn intends taking a party of fifteen down in his new yacht.

This will be an important year with the craft in Ontario, and the revised constitution will be submitted, and a new Grand and Deputy Grand Master will be elected.

Bro. Ben Allen, of Toronto, will, we are told, surely be elected Grand Master, and Bro. Abraham Shaw, of Kingston, at present the head of the Grand Chapter, is the favorite in this section for Deputy Grand.

The brethren of Eastern Ontario are strongly of the opinion that they are entitled to the office of Deputy Grand this year, and that Bro. Shaw, by his long and faithful services, is entitled to be elected to fill the position.

The boy will in consequence be incapacitated from work for some time.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

The Metcalfe Accident.

Port Hope Guide: The sad news of the death of Mr. Talbot Metcalfe, which reached here about six o'clock last (Thursday) evening, was received with much regret.

Mr. Metcalfe left on Tuesday on the yacht "Norah," owned by Mr. R. C. Smith, for a cruise on the lake. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Smith and family, Miss L. Sowden and Mr. T. Metcalfe and had reached as far as Belleville, when the accident occurred.

Deceased was the only son of Mrs. Thos. Metcalfe, Dorset street, and much sympathy is expressed for her and the sisters.

The remains were brought up on the 12.55 train this afternoon and interment will take place to-morrow at Newcastle. Services will be held at St. Mark's Church. The service and funeral will be private.

The Norseman's Nastrond.

The Norseman's hades is as unlike the orthodox place of punishment as it is possible for one to imagine. This place of torment for the reprobate sons of the north is called nastrond and is situated far toward the frigid north and is directly under niflheim, the Scandinavian mythologist's purgatory. A description of nastrond as it appears in the "Prose Edda" (written in Iceland in the thirteenth century) is as follows:

"In nastrond there is a vast and direful structure with doors that face the north. This building is formed entirely of the backs and scales of serpents, wattled together like wickerwork. But the heads of the serpents themselves are turned toward the inside of the hall, and they continually vomit forth floods of venom, in which must wade throughout eternity all those who commit murder or swear to lies." Another description of nastrond is similar to this, but adds that the evildoers are occasionally bitten by the great dragon Nidhogg.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

This remedy is certain to be needed in almost every home before the summer is over. It can always be depended upon even in the most severe and dangerous cases. It is especially valuable for summer disorders in children. It is pleasant to take and never fails to give prompt relief. Why not buy it now It may save a life. For sale by all druggists

POTATOES

NOW TO PREVENT BLIGHT AND ROT.

Farmers continue to lose hundreds of bushels of potatoes every year from blight and rot, which might be saved by spraying the vines with Bordeaux mixture. The results obtained at the Central Experimental Farm and elsewhere have proved over and over again how well it pays to spray, but comparatively few farmers spray their potatoes for the prevention of rot even yet. At Ottawa one variety that was sprayed yielded at the rate of 201 bushels more per acre than the same variety unsprayed, and taking the average of 11 varieties there was an increase of 120 bushels per acre. The formula used is 6 lbs. bluestone, 4 lbs. lime and 40 gallons water. If the potato beetle is still active 8 ozs. Paris green may be added to this. If fresh lime cannot be obtained, 7 1-2 lbs. washing soda will take its place. There should be about 4 sprayings, the first about the middle of July, the second from ten days to two weeks later, the third and fourth at about the same intervals, the object being to keep the vines covered with the moisture until September.

It has been proven by experiment that over half the crop of potatoes will be produced after August 22nd, if the vines are kept green, and this is what spraying will do, as, at the Experimental Farm, the vines have been kept green from 18 to 20 days longer than where left unsprayed. The cost of four sprayings is about $7.00.

CANCER AND TUMORS

Treated scientifically by a common sense method, without pain and in your own home. Not even the members of your family need know it. No knife, no pain, no plaster. Send six cents in stamps for booklet, "Cancer, its Cause and Cure."—B. I. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

The Speed of Sense.

Hirsch proved that a touch on the face was recognized by the brain and responded to by a manual signal in the one-seventh part of a second. The scientist also found that the speed of sense differed for different organs, the sense of hearing being responded to in the one-sixth of a second, while that of sight required only one-fifth of a second to be recognized and signaled. In all three cases the distance traversed was about the same, so the natural inference is that the image travels more slowly than sound or touch.

WOMEN TO STAY IN CATHOLIC CHOIRS.

NON-CATHOLICS OF BOTH SEXES HOWEVER, WILL BE EXCLUDED BY THE POPE'S RULING.

New York, July 15.—On the authority of one of the diocesan officials it can be stated that women are not to be excluded hereafter from the choirs of Catholic churches under Archbishop Farley's jurisdiction, but all non-Catholics will be.

Both these decisions follow from the interpretations of the recent letter on the subject of church music which Pope Pius X. sent to Catholics all over the world under date of November 22, 1903.

That the rulings of this order for a reform of church music affected the women singers who are so prominent a component part of the church choirs here has been a mooted question since. It is now held that it does not shut them out, but the diocesan ruling in regard to non-Catholics is a new phase of the question.

As explained by one of the leading authorities of the church yesterday the new rule has no personal relation to individual singers. It is based on the general law which the Pope lays down defining his wishes in regard to the singers that must compose the church choir.

Ruling Against Non-Catholics.

"'The liturgical chant belongs to the choir of levites,' said he, reading from a copy of the Pope's letter, 'and, therefore, singers in church, even when they are laymen, are really taking the place of the ecclesiastical choir. Finally only those are to be admitted to form part of the musical chapter of a church who are men of known piety and probity of life, and these should, by their modest and devout bearing during the liturgical functions show that they are worthy of the holy office they exercise.'

"You see under such a law," continued the ecclesiastic, "it would not be proper to have non-Catholics take part in the services, representing as the choir does the congregational part of the liturgy. So a diocesan rule to that effect will be enforced hereafter."

Archbishop Farley, in his address to the priests of the diocese who have been following the exercise of the retreat given by the Rev. Father Stanton, S. J., at the Dunwoodie Seminary, for the last ten days, spoke emphatically on the subject of church music.

Churches That Are Affected.

The new rule will seriously affect the choir of his own cathedral as well as many of the other Catholic Churches in the diocese. Some of those that will also lose singers are St. Francis Xavier's, St. Mary's Holy Innocent's, St. Leo's and St. Augustine's. In fact, very many of the churches have non-Catholic singers either as soloists or in the chorus.

In regard to the rule about women singers, the decision has been that the Pope's letter, which says, "Singers in church have a real liturgical office, and therefore women, as being incapable of exercising such office, cannot be admitted to form part of the choir or of the musical chapel," is aiming at a condition that does not exist in this country—namely, choir singing in the full liturgical sense.

Choirs here of mixed voices are regarded as representing the congregation in singing the responses for the non-liturgical parts of the mass and solemn services. As such the mixed choirs are to be retained if the pastors of the churches so elect. The character of the music, however, must in every case be changed to follow the Pope's rules.

The committee appointed by Archbishop Farley to consider the whole question in church music has made its report to him, and it is understood that he will embody its findings in a pastoral on the subject, which will be issued early in the fall.

The Baptist Picnic.

The Baptists held their annual Sunday School excursion yesterday to Twelve O'Clock Point and it proved to be an enjoyable and successful affair. During the day a programme of sports for the children was carried out. In the evening a large number went to the Point.

CATARRH, PNEUMONIA, CONSUMPTION.

Death's fateful trinity they are often called. Catarrh is the first stage, pneumonia often follows, and consumption finally exacts the full penalty. This can all be averted by using healing, balsamic Catarrhozone, an antiseptic that penetrates the remotest air cells of the lungs. Catarrhozone reaches the entire mucous surface of the throat and breathing apparatus; it carries health wherever it goes, brings instant relief and is absolutely certain to cure. Don't delay, get Catarrhozone to-day. It means health, certain cure. Two months' treatment $1.00; trial size 25c. Catarrhozone is guaranteed.

GARDEN PARTY WAS VERY SUCCESSFUL.

PLEASANT AFFAIR AT THE HOME FOR THE FRIENDLESS LAST NIGHT.

The ladies of the Women's Christian Association are well pleased at the results of the garden party which was held at the Home for the Friendless last evening. The spacious grounds were tastefully decorated with bunting, flags and Chinese lanterns, making the scene a pretty and animated one. There were a large number of citizens present, all of whom appeared to thoroughly enjoy themselves. The I. O. O. F. Band kindly tendered their services and gave a number of selections, which were much appreciated. Various booths, with refreshments, sweetmeats, etc., were well patronized. The wants of the inmates were looked after and the old folks were profuse in their thanks for the kindness shown them. The receipts will be used in providing necessaries to complete the improvements to the Home.

THE MASONIC GRAND LODGE.

The forty-ninth annual session of the Masonic Grand Lodge will be held at Brockville next week. Mr. O'Flynn intends taking a party of fifteen down in his new yacht.

This will be an important year with the craft in Ontario, and the revised constitution will be submitted, and a new Grand and Deputy Grand Master will be elected.

Bro. Ben Allen, of Toronto, will, we are told, surely be elected Grand Master, and Bro. Abraham Shaw, of Kingston, at present the head of the Grand Chapter, is the favorite in this section for Deputy Grand.

The brethren of Eastern Ontario are strongly of the opinion that they are entitled to the office of Deputy Grand this year, and that Bro. Shaw, by his long and faithful services, is entitled to be elected to fill the position.

Lost a Finger Top.

Willie Whalen, an employee of the Chown Manufacturing Company, yesterday met with a painful accident. He was engaged in operating a pair of large shears when one of the fingers of the right hand was caught with the result that the top was taken off. The boy will in consequence be incapacitated from work for some time.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and when especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

The Metcalfe Accident.

Port Hope Guide: The sad news of the death of Mr. Talbot Metcalfe, which reached here about six o'clock last (Thursday) evening, was received with much regret.

Mr. Metcalfe left on Tuesday on the yacht "Norah," owned by Mr. R. C. Smith, for a cruise on the lake. The party consisted of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Smith and family, Miss L. Sowden and Mr. T. Metcalfe and had reached as far as Belleville, when the accident occurred.

Deceased was the only son of Mrs. Thos. Metcalfe, Dorset street, and much sympathy is expressed for her and the sisters.

The remains were brought up on the 12.55 train this afternoon and interment will take place to-morrow at Newcastle. Services will be held at St. Mark's Church. The service and funeral will be private.

A FAMILY NECESSITY

Is a remedy capable of affording immediate relief to the hundred and one ailments that constantly arise. It may be a cold, perhaps toothache, neuralgia, pain in the back—use Nerviline; it's more penetrating, pain subduing and powerful than any other liniment, Nerviline is at least five times stronger than ordinary remedies and its worth in any household can't be over-estimated. For man or beast Nerviline is a panacea for all pain and costs only 25c per bottle. Buy Nerviline to-day.

The Norseman's Nastrond.

The Norseman's hades is as unlike the orthodox place of punishment as it is possible for one to imagine. This place of torment for the reprobate sons of the north is called nastrond and is situated far toward the frigid north and is directly under niflheim, the Scandinavian mythologist's purgatory. A description of nastrond as it appears in the "Prose Edda" (written in Iceland in the thirteenth century) is as follows:

"In nastrond there is a vast and direful structure with doors that face the north. This building is formed entirely of the backs and scales of serpents, wattled together like wickerwork. But the heads of the serpents themselves are turned toward the inside of the hall, and they continually vomit forth floods of venom, in which must wade throughout eternity all those who commit murder or swear to lies." Another description of nastrond is similar to this, but adds that the evildoers are occasionally bitten by the great dragon Nidhogg.

Their Victim is Dead.

TRAGIC ENDING TO THAT NORTH HASTINGS AFFAIR LAST SUNDAY AFTERNOON.

William Welsh, the man who was so horribly beaten at Craigmount last Sunday afternoon, is dead. The Bancroft Times gives the following particulars of the affair:

"There was a big row at Craigmount last Sunday afternoon, and as a result one of the participants, Wm. Welsh, the engineer at the mines, may possibly lose his life. He is literally carved up, and his injuries may yet prove fatal. It appears that a number of Swedes, recent arrivals from Cordova, went down to Combermer by boat, and Welsh went along as engineer. On their return they were more or less under the influence of liquor and a row ensued between Welsh and one of the men. The others came to the assistance of their companion, and pounded Welsh in a brutal manner. Knives were used freely, and the latter received a gash in the head with a hatchet which came near putting him out of business. Seventeen stitches were required to sew up one wound."

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS.

POTATOES SHOULD BE SPRAYED NOW TO PREVENT BLIGHT AND ROT.

Farmers continue to lose hundreds of bushels of potatoes every year from blight and rot, which might be saved by spraying the vines with Bordeaux mixture. The results obtained at the Central Experimental Farm and elsewhere have proved over and over again how well it pays to spray, but comparatively few farmers spray their potatoes for the prevention of rot even yet. At Ottawa one variety that was sprayed yielded at the rate of 201 bushels more per acre than the same variety unsprayed, and taking the average of 11 varieties there was an increase of 120 bushels per acre. The formula used is 6 lbs. bluestone, 4 lbs. lime and 40 gallons water. If the potato beetle is still active 8 ozs. Paris green may be added to this. If fresh lime cannot be obtained, 7 1-2 lbs. washing soda will take its place. There should be about 4 sprayings, the first about the middle of July, the second from ten days to two weeks later, the third and fourth at about the same intervals, the object being to keep the vines covered with the moisture until September.

It has been proven by experiment that over half the crop of potatoes will be produced after August 22nd, if the vines are kept green, and this is what spraying will do, as, at the Experimental Farm, the vines have been kept green from 18 to 20 days longer than where left unsprayed. The cost of four sprayings is about $7.00.

The Speed of Sense.

Hirsch proved that a touch on the face was recognized by the brain and responded to by a manual signal in the one-seventh part of a second. The scientist also found that the speed of sense differed for different organs, the sense of hearing being responded to in the one-sixth of a second, while that of sight required only one-fifth of a second to be recognized and signaled. In all three cases the distance traversed was about the same, so the natural inference is that the image travels more slowly than sound or touch.

LORD DUNDONALD IN HIS OWN DEFENCE

Not Enough Rifles.

"As regards rifles, we are just as badly off now as then. There are not enough in the country to arm even the present peace strength of the militia, while there are none for the war strength of the militia or for the second line of defence, or for the rifle clubs, and, indeed, many of the rifles we now have require replacing by new ones. I have only to mention that there is practically no engineering equipment, no ammunition carts, no pack saddles for carrying ammunition—oh, I forgot, there are eleven—no water carts, practically no machine guns, and most other essentials are equally lacking in order to show you how inadequate and unsatisfactory is the equipment of the militia.

"As regards the training of the militia, the general public is aware that a great change has taken place in the methods of war, and that it is impossible now to train troops properly on restricted areas of land. I urged upon the minister in 1902 that even if it was impossible on account of the cost to give all the troops in the Dominion the advantages of training on a large area of land, no delay should take place in the provision of a central training ground where, at any rate, the higher leaders of the militia could learn their work. Nothing has been done in this respect, altho there are many sites which could be acquired for a comparatively trifling amount.

Delay Most Detrimental.

"The new system of examinations for promotion approved of by the cabinet lays down that the work of certain of the higher grades of officers must be carried out at the central camp. The unreasonable delay in the provision of a central camp has therefore been most detrimental. As an instance of a deplorable want of appreciation of the true interests of the militia, and of support in the new era I had hoped to inaugurate, if you turn to the estimates for 1904-5 you will find that the provision for schools of instruction has actually been reduced from $50,000 to $40,000 for the year ending June 30 next, and this notwithstanding the fact that A VERY GREAT NUMBER OF THE OFFICERS OF THE MILITIA ARE PROFESSIONALLY UNQUALIFIED, and that the new regulations for promotion are likely to attract officers and non-commissioned officers to qualify themselves in largely increased numbers; and also, in spite of the fact that the new establishments passed some months ago increase the number of officers by the large number of 1500, and the non-commissioned officers by the still larger number of 2600.

Most Purely Civilian Army.

"Now, gentlemen, with regard to the charge of militarism brought against me. The new organization of the militia adopted by the government provides for Canada its first line of defence composed of a peace strength of some 45,000 men, expanding into a war strength of 100,000 men, with a nucleus of a second line of a similar number; that is to say, it provides for an organization of a more purely civilian and non-professional type than has been adopted by any country in the world; the system was so adopted on the recommendation of my report for 1902, and yet I am accused of militarism. I am charged with desiring to impose upon Canada military burdens similar to those borne by some of the European nations.

"I was interested recently to observe that the prime minister was credited with the following remarks in a speech made by him. 'If I had my own way,' said Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 'there would be a corps of volunteers in every town, in every village, in every hamlet. The boys should learn early how to shoot. The art of war is always changing, and we shall always need men who are ready and courageous to face any emergency.'

Sir Wilfrid's Vision.

"If Sir Wilfrid contemplates the formidable force he suggests in the above speech, has he ever calculated the cost thereof? Even the bare provision of rifles or so large a body of men as he would thus call into existence would cost a large sum irrespective of the provision of ranges and a supply in hand of sufficient ammunition per man as without ammunition rifles are simply useless and ammunition cannot be improvised immediately on the outbreak of war.

"And how could such a force as it is thus suggested be utilized, without organization, without officers, without equipment, without any method of communication between different portions of it, without provision for mobilization, without maps or military information, without artillery, without engineers?

"No, gentlemen, a little thought will convince you that it is better to adhere to the organization which has already received the sanction of the government and make efficient a well-equipped and well-trained skeleton force, which, should war be declared would be clothed with flesh and blood by those who had previously enrolled themselves for war service, and that you should also insist that those departments which cannot be improvised on the outbreak of war shall be in effective operation in time of peace in order to be capable of expansion should war break out.

The Real Facts.

"The real facts of the matter are gentlemen, that I am accused of militarism because I desired that the organization and arrangement for the improvement of the militia already agreed upon by the ministry should be carried to a logical conclusion, and OUR country of Canada—(applause)—of which I AM NO LONGER THE GENERAL OFFICER COMMANDING, BUT MERELY A FREE AND INDEPENDENT ELECTOR like each of yourselves, should be placed in a position which surely every patriotic Canadian must desire.

"Some of the most widely read and influential newspapers in Canada have given currency and support to a rumor that I had in the unpublished portion of my report for 1902 advised a ruinous expenditure for military armaments and had recommende dthe erection of a series of great fortresses along the frontier.

Globe's Hallucinations.

"It is almost incredible that hallucinations of this description should be fabricated and attributed to me without the slightest shadow of justification. (Applause.) These statements are amusing in their utter absurdity, but wild as they are they have accomplished one object. They have given to a large section of the people of Canada a false impression of the work I have been endeavoring to do on their behalf, and in their interest.

"THE SIMPLE TRUTH IS, GENTLEMEN, THAT BEFORE I CAME TO CANADA THE CANADIAN GOVERNMENT HAD ALREADY DECIDED TO PLACE A FEW GUNS AT TWO STRATEGICAL POINTS. I WORKED OUT DETAILED SCHEMES FOR THEM FOR THESE PLACES, BUT EXPRESSLY STATED IN MY REPORT THAT THE SCHEMES WERE BASED UPON THE PRINCIPLE OF THE LEAST POSSIBLE EXPENDITURE ON ANYTHING THAT COULD BE CONSIDERED AS IN THE NATURE OF PERMANENT FORTIFICATION. I stated that the first thing to be steadily borne in mind should be the organized system of defence, the guns, the ammunition and the trained men to use them.

"The only additional recommendations that have come from me in relation to permanent defences were suggestions that an important seaport on the Atlantic and another on the Pacific should receive some slight protection against raids from torpedo boats and cruisers, the cost of which would be inconsiderable.

Has He? No!

"Now, gentlemen, turning to another portion of the attack upon me, let me ask, Have I done anything in my term of office in Canada which merits the charge of endeavoring to dragoon either the government or the people? (No, no!) Have I ever done anything which should bring down upon me the denunciation of that most influential journal in Montreal which so ardently supports the government? This organ, which stands so high in the confidence of the government, sums up the situation in an article so logical, so calm and thoughtful, that I feel impelled to present you with some extracts. Its readers are informed in only one day's flow of reason that I wished to impose militarism on Canada, that I was a veritable conspirator appointed for the purpose of imposing militarism, that I was an enemy to Canada, an imperial monster—(laughter)—a wolf sent amongst your sheep folds who has found souls so tender as to lament over the blows which the shepherds have inflicted upon him.

Let Actions Speak.

"All that I desire is to be judged by my actions. (Cheers.) During my term of office I have endeavored to the best of my ability to build up an efficient force of citizen soldiery, to place the defences of Canada in a condition as effective as the resources of the country would permit. In all this I have proceeded in a constitutional manner, fully recognizing the will of the people, as expressed thru their constitutional representatives. It has been my duty to give expression to my opinions, but I have attempted to dragoon no one. I have never even written or caused to be written any demand that any officer, non-commissioned officer or man belonging to the militia should explain any writing or public utterance of his that he may have given to the world in his capacity as a citizen of a free country.

"But, gentlemen, can this regard for freedom be claimed with equal truth by those who thus accuse me of dragooning the people of Canada? Let me give you only one instance.

Case of Col. Ponton.

"Shortly after the late general officer commanding, this dragooner of your liberties, appeared amongst you, Colonel Ponton of Belleville, a citizen of Canada, in pursuance of the exercise of his undoubted right as a citizen, delivered a speech in which he criticized some action of the militia department. By order of the minister he was without my knowledge called upon for an explanation. He stood upon his rights and, in reply, protested against being subjected to this inquisition, claiming the right of free speech in a free Canadian community. (Applause.)

"Now, what did this enemy of the liberties of the Canadian people do when the papers were officially placed before him to discipline Colonel Ponton of Belleville? He ordered no further action to be taken and closed the incident. (Hear, hear!)

Borden and His Prey.

"Gentlemen, this imperial monster, this wolf, stood between the minister of militia and his prey!

"From this one incident you will draw your own conclusions as to whether the present government or your dismissed general officer commanding have been the more inclined to interfere with the civil rights or to dragoon the people of Canada.

Nor Race Nor Creed.

"I have almost forgotten to mention one other charge insinuated against me in parliament of having made a difference between a French-Canadian officer and an English-speaking one—in favor of the latter. I have already on paper shown how groundless was this charge, and here in this capital of the great English-speaking Province of Ontario I desire to say that no man's race or religion has ever biased me. (Cheers.) The French-Canadian militia know full well that I have always had their interests at heart, and have been actuated by the utmost possible friendliness for them.

"As I am here now in Toronto, the residence of a much respected man, Goldwin Smith, I think it is fitting that I should refer to the following statement in The Weekly Sun, which is attributed to his pen: "The interest represented by Lord Dundonald," writes Mr. Goldwin Smith, "is imperial and calls for a large contribution from Canada to imperial armaments."

Canada's Interests Solely.

"May I ask Mr. Goldwin Smith on what authority he hazards this statement? While general officer commanding I represented no other interests than those of the Dominion of Canada, which I was endeavoring to the best of my ability to serve. I have never even suggested in any report I have submitted or statement I have made to the Canadian government that any contribution in men or money should be made by Canada to the imperial government. I know full well, however, that should war unhappily arise Britain could count upon the loyalty of the Canadians in the same manner and to the same extent as was so ungrudgingly given before. All that I have advocated is that Canada should place herself in a position to hold her own.

Farewell.

"Gentlemen, when on the 14th day of June last I received a message of dismissal, tho conscious of the rectitude of my course, I little knew and little realized how the great mass of the Canadian people would sustain me in the action I took on their behalf. (Cheers.) For that support and sympathy I now thank you with all my heart.

"During my whole term of office I have endeavored to serve you faithfully, loyally and well, and to the best of my ability I discharged what I considered to be my bounden duty towards you. THE PEOPLE OF CANADA ARE MY JUDGES. (Cheers.) MY RECORD IS BEFORE THEM, AND THE ISSUE IS CLEAR AND WELL DEFINED. TO THE PEOPLE OF CANADA I NOW SUBMIT MYSELF WITH THE CONFIDENCE BEGOTTEN OF A GOOD CAUSE.

"Gentlemen, I thank you and thru you the loyal and true hearted people of Canada, and bid you good bye."

An Ovation.

At the conclusion of Lord Dundonald's reply the cheers of the night was resumed, and again and again did they echo in his glory, while handkerchiefs fluttered like whitecaps on a stormy sea.

The Leavetaking.

The train carrying Lord Dundonald east pulled out at 10.06. His horses had been taken from the carriage and stalwarts dragged it from the hall to the station. All the way down the cheering was of the variety accorded to popular heroes, and at the station they burst the bonds and would not be denied access to the train. Until the moment he left the demonstration continued.

BRASH SIR WILLIAM "I"

Upset Mr. Emmerson's Plans For a Soporific Time.

Ran Foul of the Facts in re the Trent Valley Canal and Hon. John Haggart Made a Statement That Put Things in Their Right Light—A Case of "Hamlet" Out of "Hamlet"—Will Be at Simcoe in a Year.

Ottawa, July 16.—Everything was running smoothly in the House yesterday afternoon, Hon. R. Emmerson's canal estimates included, when Sir William Mulock, seized with an unhappy impulse, proceeded to make a hot political speech. Instantly the heavy drowsiness which had settled down on the House was lifted. Oppositionists sprang to their feet to answer the loud boasts of the knightly member for North York. Thence forward Mr. Emmerson fought his estimates through inch by inch. What he thought of Sir William Mulock's conduct he did not say. His words would have been unparliamentary.

When Sir William Spoke.

Mr. Emmerson had just explained that the completion of the Trent Valley Canal would cost over $6,000,000, and few general remarks were being passed on the enterprise when Sir William Mulock made his fatal mistake. He charged the Conservatives with allowing the Trent Valley Canal work to drag along for years, and merely used it as a political bait. The Liberals on the other hand were pushing a vigorous policy of construction, and were determined to push work to an early conclusion.

This nettled Hon. John Haggart, and what Mr. Haggart said nettled someone else and so very much to Mr. Emmerson's disgust the controversy soon became general.

Not a Single New Contract.

Mr. Haggart intimated to Sir William Mulock that the Laurier Government had not let a single new contract in connection with the Trent Valley Canal, and forsooth continued the grizzled member from South Lanark, they propose with an appropriation of $100,000 for the current year to push to an early conclusion a work that cannot be finished for less than six million dollars.

Referring to the rejoicing and the speech-making that took place at Peterboro last Sunday when the great hydraulic lock was lifted, Mr. Haggart said there was no reference to the man who initiated the lock. The man was no other than John Haggart. It sounded strange on Mr. Haggart's ears to hear praise of the Trent Valley Canal from men who in Opposition declared that "of all the outrages perpetrated by a Government the expenditure on the Trent Canal was the worst." He defended the enterprise as originally undertaken, but laughed at Sir William Mulock's talk about pushing the work to a conclusion.

"Why," said he, "the Minister has told the House that the canal is not yet erected."

Col. Ward Absent.

Owing to the absence of Col. Ward it was decided to defer the discussion on the respective merits of Port Hope and Trenton as the outlet of the canal.

Mr. Cochrane declared that every intelligent man knew the canal must end at Trenton. The question was settled long ago, he said, and it was mere deception to talk about anything else.

Mr. Emmerson stated that the canal would reach Lake Simcoe in about a year.

The Oak.

The oak chooses a horizontal direction for its limbs so that their whole weight may tell and then stretches them out fifty or sixty feet so that the strain may be mighty enough to be worth resisting. At 90 degrees the oak stops short. To slant upward another degree would mark infirmity of purpose; to bend downward, weakness of organization. Other trees shirk the work of resisting gravity. The oak defies it.

Appreciated.

"Do you consider Buskin a great actor?"

"No," answered Mr. Stormington Barnes.

"He speaks very admiringly of your performance."

VOL. 38. BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, MONDAY, JULY 18, 1904. NO. 66

WHY MONET RETIRES.

Not Built Upon Lines to Play the Political Courtesan.

Montreal, July 18.—D. Monet, M. P. for Laprairie-Napierville, gave his reasons for retiring from public life at a large meeting yesterday afternoon held at the church door in the town of St. Remi. Mr. Monet said his reasons were personal and not political. He said that Le Canada, the Government organ, was mistaken when it declared that had he remained in public life he might be a minister on the first occasion that offered itself. "I would not, I could not, be a minister at Ottawa," declared the speaker. "In this country, a minister is not made of a member who has voted and spoken against his leader as often as I have done. In order to be a minister one has to have greater talents than I possess, or to know how to favor, to flatter, and to play the courtesan. These things my brave electors have never taught me. I agree, therefore, with the statement that I am not built of ministerial timber."

Four Men Arrested.

St. Thomas, July 18.—Chief of Police Fewings Saturday received a telegram from the chief of police at Lindsay, to the effect that four men had been arrested there on a charge of robbing W. B. Jackson's hardware store here last Sunday. Part of the stolen goods were secured on the men when arrested. They are believed to have been followers of the circus.

Work in the Temiskaming.

Toronto, July 18.—The Temiskaming Railway Commission sat on Saturday morning and transacted routine business, and attended to some matters of detail arising out of the building contracts. The work of building is progressing very rapidly, and up to last week seventy-two miles of track have been laid. There is no doubt that New Liskeard will be reached early in September.

RUSSIA HAS VIOLATED HER PROMISE AT THE CONVENTION.

One Russian Warship Has Now Passed Through Bosphorus.

Her Passage Is a Direct Violation of the Convention—Jap Newspaper Says Britain Is Bound to Prevent Such Assistance Being Given to Russia—London Is Irritated—The Waipara Stopped—Firing Heard for Two Days.

London, July 18.—The Constantinople correspondent of The Standard, in a despatch dated July 17, says: "The Russian guardship Chernomoretz passed through the Bosphorous from the Black Sea this morning." The Chernomoretz is a gun vessel belonging to the Black Sea fleet, and carries two eight-inch guns, one six-inch gun and seven quick-firing and machine guns. She is equipped with two torpedo tubes and carries a crew of 160.

As the Russian Government is authoritatively stated to have given a distinct assurance that there was no intention on their part to send the Black Sea fleet through the Dardanelles, the passage of the guardship in question may well be doubted. The act would be in direct violation of the convention.

Britain Is Bound.

London, July 18.—The Standard's Tokio correspondent, cabling under date of July 17, says the Jiji Shimpo, in an editorial, expresses the hope that Great Britain will see that Turkey lends Russia no assistance by allowing steamers of the volunteer fleet to pass the Dardanells. The Jiji Shimpo declares that Great Britian is bound under the terms of the Anglo-Japanese alliance to prevent just such assistance being given.

London Irritated.

London, July 18.—Almost without exception the newspapers this morning, in editorials and otherwise comment on the Russian volunteer fleet steamers passing the Dardanelles, and the Government is urged to take action, especially for the protection of British commerce, in the Red Sea and neighboring waters.

The Daily Telegraph, concluding an outspoken protest, written with traces of Government inspiration, says: "There is a limit to complaisance when neutral commerce under the British flag is molested in a way to which we have been for a century and a half unused."

British Ship Stopped.

London, July 18.—A despatch from Aden to The Daily Mail says that the captain of the British steamer Waipara reports that the Russian volunteer fleet steamer St. Petersburg signalled him to stop by firing across the bows of his vessel on July 15, in the Red Sea. The Russians examined the papers of the Waipara and declared that they would hold the ship as a prize. The captain protested and was taken on board the St. Petersburg, where he gave the Russian officers a guarantee that there were neither arms nor ammunition on the Waipara bound for Japan. The vessel was delayed for four hours and then allowed to proceed. The captain confirms the report that the Orient and Peninsular Steamship Company's steamer Malacca was seized in the Red Sea July 16, by the St. Petersburg, on the ground that she carried arms and munitions of war for the Japanse Government.

TWO DAYS' FIRING.

Has Been Heard Outside of Tatchekiao By the Chinese.

Tientsin, July 18.—It has been learned from a Chinese source that heavy firing has been heard outside of Tatchekia for the last two days.

Japs Land 30,000.

Berlin, July 18.—The Lokal Anseiger yesterday printed a special despatch from Port Arthur stating that the Japanese since July 11 have landed about 30,000 men near Pigeon Bay, under the protection of the entire fleet. The Russians, the despatch says, offered little resistance. A general assault is expected soon. A calm sea has facilitated the landing.

No News From Port.

Che Foo, July 18.—No craft has arrived here from Port Arthur for several days past. The Japanese Consul at this port has not received any information of any kind, and none has arrived here from Port Arthur for several days past. The storm which has prevailed for the last two days is abating.

30,000 Dead Story, Fake.

Tokio, July 18.—The Imperial headquarters staff officially deny the reports from St. Petersburg that the Japanese lost 30,000 men in a battle near Port Arthur on July 10 or 11. Not a shot was fired.

Sakharoff Reports.

St. Petersburg, July 18.—Under date of July 16, Lieut.-Gen. Skharoff reports that the Chasseurs are driving back the Japanese advance posts southwest of Siakhotan and east of Kanchi.

The Japanese, the general says, have reoccupied Kechina. They are still fortifying the passes between Fenshul and Motien.

The Japanese near Liaoyang have evacuated Sokeyan and Yanlikan.

The country from Siaossyra up to Silhu Pass is free from Japanese, but the pass itself is occupied by a detachment of the Japanese advance guard.

Gen. Sakharoff reports several minor encounters, with practically no casualties.

Togo Can't Be Dead.

Che Foo, July 18.—John F. Bass, The Chicago Daily News correspondent with Kuroki's army, in a despatch sent by Chinese junk from Antung, says:

"There is a persistent rumor here that Admiral Togo is dead. Many of the Japanese profess to believe it.

"A severe outbreak of cholera is devastating this section. The bodies of the soldiers who die of the disease are being cremated."

After a three days' cruise off Port Arthur, the despatch boat Fawan returned to port yesterday morning. All was quiet at the fortress. There was neither sound of firing nor sign of activity.

Tokio received reports from Admiral Togo as late as last Tuesday regarding operations around Port Arthur. This would seem to dispose of [illegible] in Manchuria, sent to the coast and thence by slow Chinese junk from Antung, 250 miles to Che Foo.

Great Reverse Denied.

London, July 18.—Control of Lunsantan Pass, east of Port Arthur, was obtained by the Russians after hard fighting on July 3, 4 and 6. The Russian losses were over 300, and Chinose estimate the Japanese casualties at 2,000. Prince Gantimouroff, General Stoessel's aide-de-camp, was dangerously wounded. Warships shelled the Japanese intrenchments. An official despatch from Tokio denied the report of a great reverse on July 10 or 11.

The forces of Generals Oku and Nodzu have effected a junction at Tangchi, ten miles southeast of Tashichiao, and a detachment is entrenched at Pintzan, seven miles north of Kaiping. The movement on Newchwang continues, though the town had not been occupied on July 15. Warships, supposed to be Russian, were seen firing near Kaichou.

A North German Lloyd steamer was stopped by the Russian volunteer cruiser Smolensk in the Red Sea, and mail and packages for Japan were seized. It was also reported from Aden that the St. Petersburg had made a prize of the P. & O. steamer Malacca.

Lumber Mill Had to Close.

Port Arthur, July 18.—The Pigeon River Lumber Company's mill was compelled to shut down Saturday because of the strike of lumber shovers. On Thursday the company decided to cut the wages of the men down to $1.50. Men working in the yards objected to this, and forty went out on strike. They began to raise trouble and the police had to be called. Other men were hired but the men employed by the company to fill their places were not competent and they could not get the lumber away fast enough and the mill had to be closed down. W. McKinnon, foreman of the mill, left Saturday for Duluth to employ more men. This is against the alien labor law.

Get Their Freedom.

Toronto, July 18.—The Dominion Cabinet on Saturday granted an order of release for Sam Thompson, Abraham Cahoon and Thomas Kerr and they will be released from the Central Prison to-day as soon as the papers, which T. C. Robinette, K. C., their counsel, is informed are on the way, arrive. It is considered that the punishment is now sufficient and that the necessary deterrent lesson to others has been given.

PEOPLE'S PROPERTY WAS STOLEN.

The Auditor-General lays bare the details in connection with the sale of the Dominion steamer "Bayfield" in a way that proves beyond contradiction that the property of the people was stolen with the full knowledge and consent of Hon. Raymond Prefontaine. The steamer was disposed of for $3,250 to Harrison & Sons Co., Limited, of Owen Sound. This firm is strong in its support of the Liberal cause. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries before parting with the ship called upon Capt. Stewart to place a valuation on her. The officer did so and fixed her worth at $7,000. This assessment was concurred in by the captain of the vessel. Capt. Stewart also informed Mr. Prefontaine that he had received an offer of $5,000 for the vessel. In the face of this the minister sold her to the Harrisons for $3,250. Mr. Prefontaine thus disposed of property which he holds in trust for the people of Canada at a figure away below its value and the price tendered for it by a second party. The country loses $1,750 at least by the deal. The Harrisons are still using the boat, while the Government has been forced to replace her by an expensive craft. The steal is an outrage and the electors should remember it on election day.

TIMELY TOPICS.

"A Housekepper" writes: "There is a matter which I think should be brought to the attention of somebody in authority I refer to the habit some farmers and gardeners have of putting raspberries in old boxes. I bought some raspberries on the market on Saturday, and yesterday took two boxes for ten. One of the boxes was new, and the berries were all good; the other box had been used before, and fully an inch of the berries in the bottom of the box were decayed and unfit for use. I think people who sell raspberries should be compelled to use new boxes, and believe that the Board of Health should look into the matter."

• • •

"Say," said a gentleman on the East hill, "why don't you ask the Council to give us a band concert on the Hospital lot, for a change. By the time one walks down to Victoria Park, these hot nights, he is too tired to enjoy the music. I think all parts of the city should be given a chance, especially as Victoria Park, just now, is not exactly an ideal place for a band concert."

• • •

A gentleman just returned from Toronto, who, like the rest of us, is anxious to see the local rolling mills go on and presper, tells us that, while in the Queen City, he visited the Toronto rolling mills, in order to find out the conditions which prevail. The Toronto mill, he was informed, at present employs 60 men, and rolls 35 tons of steel and 25 tons of iron on alternate days The mill has, in recent years, never stopped except for repairs, except on one occasion when there was a trade depression in the States, and the Yankee manufacturers were dumping stuff in here cheaper than Canadians could manufacture it, and actually selling it, in Canada, 25 per cent. cheaper than they sold it in their own country. The fact that the Toronto mill, which, he says, enjoys no better conditions than the Belleville mill, is able to run continuously and successfully, makes our informant think there should be no difficulty in making the local rolling mills pay if properly run and managed.

• • •

The above remarks, coupled with the fact that the Belleville mills will strat to-morrow, should prove highly interesting and encouraging to the people of this city. Good luck to the mills. May they go on and earn their bonus. Incidentally, in so doing, they are sure to bring a renewal of business activity to this city.

• • •

By the way, have you noticed that things have been picking up lately, and that most people you meet are impressed with the idea that a mild boom is soon due to hit Belleville? Fact, just the same, whether you have noticed it or not. Plenty of work for those who want it, real estate changing hands rapidly, and a more hopeful feeling in the air. Cheerful prospect, isn't it, and makes one feel like wearing "the smile that won't come off."

• • •

"There will have to be some building done soon," said a master mason the other evening. "Moderate sized houses are very scarce. Big houses can be got, and little houses and rookeries, but medium-sized houses are hardly to be had for love or money. I look for a building boom soon, such as we have not had in Belleville since the sawmills were running, years ago."

In reply to the Grit papers which are boasting of the large immigration into Canada during recent years of Liberal rule, as compared with that of Conservative rule, the independent Hamilton Herald asks, "What about quality?" Aye. What about quality? You found no Galicians or crazy Doukhobors, at 17.50 per head, coming into Canada under Conservative rule.

The more the average man reads about the Dundonald reception in Toronto the sorrier he is that he wasn't there. Good old Toronto never does things by halves. The account of the proceedings must have made joyful reading for the members of the Laurier Government, we don't think.

• • •

When Scholes of Toronto won the Diamond sculls a report was sent over the subsidized C.A.P. cable that the crowd at Henley shouted "The foreigner wins," and a few Grit papers in this country made the most of it. It was freely charged by Conservative papers at the time that the story was a falsehood, gotten up to try and offset the effect produced when Laurier called Dundonald a foreigner. Now comes confirmation of the Conservative contention in a letter written by The Toronto Telegram's special correspondent, who was present at Henley when the race was rowed. He says:

"Near the finish, with Scholes a length ahead of his opponent, and the latter going weaker and weaker, a generous outburst of cheering for the Canadian sculler swept along both shores. It nerved him to a final effort. "Scholes wins!" was the cry; and it is not exaggerating to say that, though it was an Englishman beaten, the victory was a popular one."

Another falsehood nailed.

The original "Volunteer Organist" is dead, and now here is the Hamilton Spectator wishing the volunteer pianists were dead, too. What's the matter with that rude man? Has he been getting a surfeit of "The Maiden's Prayer?"

The Russians sent a warship through the Dardanelles, and now the B. Lion is liable to get his back up and give the R. Bear a Dardanelle of a time.

• • •

There's the Germans, too, who are deeply incensed because the Russians confiscated their mails. It's lucky it wasn't their females, or Emperor Bill would be so mad the curl would all come out of his moustache.

• • •

Then Gen. Oku, the Jap., accuses the Russians of acting like anything but perfect gentlemen on the field of battle. Taken altogether, it seems that the soldiers of the Czar, besides getting thrashed, are losing their character and stand a chance of making enemies just when they need to make friends.

CHERRY'S BAD HEART

Put him "down and out" so far as working was concerned, but Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart made a man of him again.

Heart weakness and fainting spells were so acute that Wm. Cherry, of Owen Sound, Ont., had to quit work. His sufferings were very great. One day a druggist said: "Cherry, try Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart; it must be a good thing for it has a large sale." He did so, and took five bottles. To-day he takes his place beside the other workmen, and does as big a day's work as any of them, thanks to this great remedy. 51

HERE'S A SENSIBLE IDEA.

TORONTO PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION HELD SERVICE OUT OF DOORS LAST NIGHT.

Toronto, July 18.—The heat last night in this city had the effect of diminishing the attendance at the churches, and curtailing the service in many of them. The congregation of the Central Presbyterian Church triumphed over the hot wave by holding a service out of doors. The congregation gathered in the church as usual in the evening, but after a short service there an organ was carried out to the strip of lawn bordering Grosvenor street, chairs were provided, and the service continued under the trees. Occupants of the verandahs of adjacent residences came over to join in the worship and the service was quite successful. The plan will be followed on other warm Sunday evenings.

There were many people in the parks and across the bay, but the majority of the residents who did not escape from the city over Sunday stayed at home.

Will Come to Canada.

London, July 18.—It is practically decided that the Hon. Alfred Lyttelton is to pay a visit to the United States and Canada in a few months' time. He is anxious to go during his term of office as Secretary for the Colonies, so probably will not go later than August, as, of course, if the Liberal party come in during the autumn Mr. Lyttelton will no longer retain his present post. Mrs. Lyttelton will, of course, accompany her husband, and it is not improbable that the Canadian part of the tour will be taken in company with the Archbishop of Canterbury, who is to visit America this year on a round of visits to the American bishops.

FORTUNES IN DISGUISE

SOME REMARKABLE WINDFALLS IN OLD PAINTINGS.

Picture Bought for One Shilling Was Resold Three Times in Six Days, the Last Sale Being for £600—A Titian Among the Lost Carried Away From Italy by One of Napoleon's Generals.

Some few years ago, in the course of a case tried at the prosaic County Court of Westminster, says The London Standard, it was stated that a picture bought for 1s. was sold within 24 hours for £78, changed hands again within two or three days at £250, and 48 hours later found yet another purchaser at £600.

This instance of large profits and quick returns is probably without precedent, insomuch as transactions of this nature are generally preceded by careful cleaning, which naturally takes a considerable time; but apart from the rapid augmentation in price, the past few years have seen many instances of surprising bargains in canvas and paint.

A few weeks ago a case in point was revealed when a portrait of a lady by Nattier, the property of a retired merchant, living at Baintree, Essex, on failing to achieve a local bid of over £10, was sold at Christie's for 3,100 guineas, or 651 times the sum (£5) that its late owner had paid over fifty years before.

This romance of the auction room was preceded earlier in the year by the extraordinary rescue from obscurity of a Gainsborough whose existence had been entirely unnoticed. The picture in question, measuring 30 inches by 25 inches, the property of a family living at Worthing, who had no idea what a treasure they owned, was offered for £5 to a Bond street dealer, who refused to purchase it, and was then taken to Messrs. Christie's, where it was put up at auction and knocked down for £9,450—a veritable windfall for the vendors.

Discovering Titians.

One of the peculiarities of picture finds is the fact that it happens with comparative frequency that several derelict examples of the same painter's art are revealed about the same time in different corners of the world. Thus about three years ago there was quite a run upon Titian's paintings; a picture of a girl seated at a table on which is a heap of gold was brought to light at Plymouth a short time after a Venetian painter named Brass discovered that under a painting he purchased, with three others, for £4, from a Dalmatian peasant was a St. Sebastian by the great painter of the Italian Renaissance. For this picture, stolen from Italy by one of Napoleon's generals, the discover was said to have had more than one offer of £8,000. In the autumn of 1900 yet another Titian, together with a Bassano, was discovered in a sailor's cottage at Venice by Signor Cantalamessa, the director of the Venice Museum, who gave the owner £4 for the pair of dingy paintings, which, on being cleaned, revealed a Holy Family by Titian and a St. Jerome by Bassano, worth many thousand pounds.

While Titian's works were being revealed on the continent several paintings by Richard Wilson, R. A., were rescued in this country, to the great monetary advantage of their finders. Some sixteen years ago ten of Wilson's paintings sold for £40 apiece, but to-day there is a great vogue for this artist's works, and the price has hardened considerably; consequently, when Mr. Alfred Dixon of Bristol, some years ago, purchased a picture at an auction for 35s., which afterwards was identified as a Wilson, his purchase was, though he did not recognize the fact at the time, a very excellent bargain.

In 1900 a Wilson realized £1,600; it was, therefore, a great stroke of good fortune for a gentleman in Essex, when he purchased the following year a splendid example of the artist's work from a Stratford pawnbroker for 20s. A few weeks later he picked up a half length portrait in oils of Mary Scott, wife of Bishop Burnett, painted by Sir Godfrey Kneller, that had for years been used for the purpose of a fire screen.

A Sixpenny Raphael.

Some few months ago a resident of Pinner, Middlesex, seeing a painted panel in a shop window in the Harrow road, London, that took his fancy, purchased the same for the not overwhelming sum of five pence halfpenny. Some short time after the purchase was made, reading in a newspaper that a small wood panel painted by Raphael and bearing that artist's initial, "R," stamped on the back, had changed hands at 700 guineas, he carefully examined his own purchase, and joyfully found that it also bore the sign manual of Perugino's greatest pupil.

This is not the only painting by Urbino's most famous son which has recently been discovered; in 1899 a picture dealer purchased in Paris for 16s. 8d. a frame containing a dirty picture, which, when restored, revealed itself an "Adam and Eve," that was subsequently sold for £3,200. The history of this painting recalls in a measure the fact that the same artist's "Three Graces" was picked up by one Henri Raboul, some time Deputy for Herault, among a lot of old furniture in Italy. An attempt to sell the picture to the Louvre authorities for about £30 failing in 1822, it was put up at auction and withdrawn when only 600 francs was bid for it. Purchased eventually by an Englishman for £150, the picture passed through a number of hands until it was ultimately acquired by the Duke d'Aumale for £25,400. As is well known, the Duke at his death left Chantilly and its artistic treasures, including the Raphael, to the French nation, which at one period had refused to give a thousandth part of the sum that it eventually fetched for the famous picture that is now one of its choicest artistic treasures.

Some Rare Finds.

The recent discovery in South Wales and purchase by a Cardiff artist for a comparatively small sum of a portrait of a lady playing a mandolin, which is said by experts to be a Reynolds worth 3,500 guineas, recalls the fact that a picture by Guido that was sold in Torquay a few years ago for 5s. eventually reached £2,000. Another rare bargain that recently came to light was the discovery of a painting entitled "The Betrothal," by Jacob G. Cuyp, the great Dutch artist, that is now in the possession of Mr. Sanderson of Newbigging, near Dundee. Although 25 years have elapsed since he made the purchase for 17s. 6d. at a sale of furniture in Newbigging, it is only within the last few months that the present owner of the gem learned of his good fortune. When Turner's "Grand Canal in Venice," which was bequeathed to the Metropolitan Museum in New York by Cornelius Vanderbilt, was sold to a dealer in 1860, it realized £2,520; when purchased by Mr. Vanderbilt from Lord Dudley its price was £10,000, and now it is valued at £20,000. It was, therefore, a rare stroke of luck for Capt. Treharne, a visitor from Devonshire, when he purchased a sea piece by the great artist at an old curiosity shop in Barmouth for 25s. The picture, which was painted on an oak panel, was unframed and slightly dilapidated, but when it had been cleaned and two or three coats of varnish had been removed the initials "J. M. W. T." duly appeared, and this bargain in oak and paint was pronounced by an expert to be worth £700.

THE BRITISH SOLDIER.

Numbers, Nationality, Religion and Progress of Tommy Atkins.

The annual report on the British army, says The London Express, forms an elaborate statistical guide to the numerical strength, the nationality, the religious beliefs, the progress, and condition of recruiting of the British army. The report is only for the first nine months of 1903, because the decision of the Secretary for War that it should be rendered annually in future as from Oct. 1, instead of Jan. 1.

For the regular army the number of recruits enlisted in the period under review was 29,324, and for the militia 25,774, these figures showing a large diminution on the numbers in the corresponding period of previous years.

The falling off, however, says the Inspector-General of Recruiting, is easily explained. At the commencement of the year, in consequence of the special recruiting for the mounted corps during the war, practically all these corps were very largely in excess of the establishment. For this reason recruiting has been either partially or wholly suspended in the case of these corps during the whole period covered by the report.

The order that no recruit was in future to be accepted who could not produce a satisfactory reference as to his character and antecedents, also resulted in a diminution of numbers, and in March last year the standards of height for recruits in certain corps were materially raised.

Notwithstanding these restrictions, the regular army was on Oct. 1, 1903, 6,486 above the normal establishment, the figures being:

Actual strength	292,411
Normal establishment	235,925

During the year some concessions have been made, the general tendency of which is to improve the position of the soldier. For instance, a third shirt is now supplied as part of the free kit of necessaries to every soldier.

Much is expected from the increase in daily pay, which took effect for the rank and file on April 1.

Arrangements have also been made for the free provision of artificial teeth in the case of soldiers who have incurred loss of teeth directly attributable to active service. The services of the two dentists experimentally employed in London and Aldershot have been continued for a further period. The results of the experiment have been such as to lead to the extension of the scheme, and an additional number of dentists have been appointed.

Englishmen	202,562
Scotsmen	22,442
Irishmen	31,467
Indian and Colonial	10,461
Foreigners	155
Not reported	266

The social status of the recruits in 1903 is shown in the appended summary:

THE CITADEL OF SIGIRI

FAMOUS "LION ROCK" FORTRESS IS NOW A MAZE OF RUINS.

Structure Was Erected Sixteen Centuries Ago by King Kasyapa in Vain Effort to Stifle His Remorse—Palace With Secret Passages and Recesses Built in the Air—Bronze Bells and Pottery, But No Treasure Found.

Writing from Kandy, Ceylon, Miss Eliza R. Skidmore says:

"The famous fortress of Sigiri is known in Ceylon's history as "the Lion rock," taking its name from the colossal figure of a lion, whose forepaws, resting on the guardhouse terrace, remain intact, holding between them the first long stone staircase we had been regarding. After passing up between the paws the King and his train used to step into an enormous lion's mouth and were not seen again until they reached the top.

"All the series of concealed staircases in the body of the brick and chunam lion are gone, and only the deep grooves and sockets in the curved overhang of the rock tell how they were held fast. One steps into and holds fast with his hands to those grooves as he climbs, after he has gone up the first long, straight ladder and one dizzily sloping ladder set parallel with the face of the rock, through whose rungs he looks down through 100 feet of air to the level of the far stretching jungle.

"There are long, perpendicular grooves where a tall portcullis worked up and down and was locked fast in deep sockets at this point, and where, on foot and knee, one goes up over the mushroom's lower edge, holding to upright iron bars as he lifts himself in air. Then parallel grooves in the curving surface give good footing, while he holds on to a handrail and follows around and up on the mushroom's curve to a solid stone staircase between thick chunam walls.

"The feat was done, and one walked erect again, according to nature's laws, no longer emulating the fly with his many suckered feet, and then the wonder came that the British Government let any one do it, freely, without molestation and without price.

"When arrived at the top of the last staircase one finds himself at the summit, in the citadel, and the whole top surface of the rock, less than an acre in extent, is covered with stone foundation walls and short flights of steps that run in labyrinthine mazes here and there. The few trees that show from below, scant as the hairs on Bismarck's head, are venerable banyans when one stands beside them and one picturesque tree with a tangle of roots and a massive trunk stands by the deep tank thirty feet square and casts a grateful shade.

"The banyan tree wrought the most havoc in this great ruin, the loose brick construction, without mortar or cement, inviting its snake-like roots to writhe through and wreck at will. The archaelogists made quick work of all vegetation, and have cleared away and thrown over the steep east side uncounted tons of brick, debris and dirt, and scraped the whole ground plan of the King's palace down to the bed rock hard and clean.

"There is a great granite throne or long divan on the east side, with the sockets showing where a pavilion stood covering it or temporary staffs held a silk canopy, and one can picture the parricide usurper, in all his jeweled splendor, reclining there to enjoy the winter breeze and the landscape view. Whatever of wooden walls and roof and partitions there were in the labyrinthine buildings of this cool palace in the air, nothing remained to tell, and the most fascinating part of archaeology—the guessing—had a free field in reconstructing Kasyapa's stronghold in their minds.

"It is all too picturesque, too impossibly romantic, too good to be true, this Lion rock citadel, this great palace in the air, this Sigiri, the fortress of sixteen centuries ago. It all exactly satisfies one's most Oriental imaginings, and the sequel of Sigiri, its last chapters, fits to the sensational rock best of all.

"King Kasyapa, having murdered his father by burying him alive, building him into a wall, and having frightened his half murdered brother into flight to India, sat on the rock with his great treasure of ingots and jewels, and tried to ease his conscience by pious works. He built temples and dagobas all around the Lion rock. He enticed holy men to come there and live. The sound of prayer and chant continually rose to his eyrie. He took to religious occupations, to penance, self-mortification and vows of heroic expiation, but his conscience still pricked, and with the religious work the impious work of fortification and defences still went on. He talked peace, but he fortified his Manchuria all the while.

"The brother gathered followers, came back to Ceylon and raised the standard of rebellion, and fate had it in for Kasyapa, that, after securing himself on this high and dry rock summit, safe from attack or siege, he should foolishly go down to the plain to give battle in person in the primitive way. His elephant stepped aside to escape a marshy spot, his troops took it as a movement of retreat, threw down their weapons and ran, and the wicked King was slain by the avenging brother, as he stood alone, helpless in a swamp, after all those years on the dry, wind swept, well drained rock summit.

"After that the Lion's rock was given over entirely to the priests. The 'Mahawanso' was begun on the summit of Sigiri by the great uncle of King Kasyapa, and succeeding chapters and books were written there while the yellow-robed priests occupied this monastery in the air.

"Tradition is not clear as to when and why they left the lofty retreat, so ideal a place for the religious or the literary life, but it is assumed that, with time and monsoon storms, some part of the staircase gave way, ruin followed fast when the broken churam surface once let the brick-work begin to crumble, and the priests may have even been glad to cease the penitential ascent from the temples in the plain to the monastery on high.

"Fragments of bronze bells and of pottery have been found, but no treasure has yet been chanced upon, although the archaeologists closely examined every basketful of rubbish hauled from the summit and carried from the great store of debris covering the guardhouse plateau and the barrack terraces."

SPENCER AND GEORGE ELIOT.

The Philosopher Was an Admirer of the Famous Novelist.

In Herbert Spencer's auto-biography he tells of his friendship with Miss Evans, better known to fame as George Eliot. He describes her as the most admirable woman, mentally, he ever met. "The greatness of her intellect, joined with her womanly qualities, generally keep me by her side most of the evening." He tried to persuade her to write novels, but "she would not listen to advice; she did not believe she had the required powers."

"Of course, as we were frequently seen together, people drew their inferences. Very slight evidence usually suffices the world for positive conclusions; and here the evidence seemed strong. Naturally, therefore, quite definite statements became current. There were reports that I was in love with her, and that we were about to be married. But neither of these reports was true. Yet there were long walks together, visits to the theatre, and every sign of a growing affection. Perhaps an entry in the 'Reflections' at the end may explain the failure of that affection to develop into something more. Physical beauty is a sine qua non with me, as was once unhappily proved, where the intellectual traits were of the highest."

King Edward's African Visitor.

The cable the other day told of the reception by King Edward at Buckingham Palace of the Alake of Abeokuta, who is the most powerful and intelligent chief of West Africa. He is the principal ruling chief of the Province of Abeokuta, the capital of which—Abeokuta—has a population of from 50,000 to 80,000. The province, which includes some 8,000 square miles, is the richest in Lagos, and is occupied by Egbas, one of the divisions of the great Yoruba race which inhabits the whole of the colony and Protectorate of Lagos. The Alake is a man of 40 years of age, and possesses remarkable intelligence with great mental and physical strength. He has shown sufficient force of character to set aside bad native customs, such, for example, as the wearing of a veil, as is usual among crowned chiefs in order to render themselves invisible. Originally a Pagan, he has now embraced Christianity, is a regular churchgoer, and does everything in his power to promote educational progress. He has always been very loyal to the British Administration. Two years ago the railway was opened to Abeokuta. The Alake is accompanied to England by his cousin, Prince Ademola of Abeokuta, who resides at Lagos as the Alake's representative. He speaks and writes English perfectly. The Alake's object in visiting England is to be presented to the King, and to study questions of farming and agriculture, which will be useful to his people, more especially the important subject of cotton growing.

Herbert Spencer's Letter of Warning.

In the New York Independent of May 5 appeared the first of three installments of unpublished letters of the late Herbert Spencer, with an introduction by George Llewellyn Rees. The letters were written to the late James A. Skilton and Dr. Lewis G. Janes, formerly President of the Brooklyn Ethical Association, who were among Spencer's closest American friends.

Among the letters is the following. "February 2, 1895.—Dear Mr. Skilton,—In one respect you have misread my books, or misunderstood an essential thing contained in them. You believe that the course of things in society is to be changed by teaching. I do not believe any such thing. Everywhere I have contended, and I contend still, that feelings, not ideas, determine social results—that everything depends, not upon intellect, but upon character, and character is not to be changed in a day or in a generation.

"You think that I have got some message and that utterance of it might stave off impending evils. I have but one message—be honest; regard the equitable claims of others, while maintaining your own. The disregard of all save personal interests is the underlying cause of your present state and of impending disasters. As I said years ago apropos of American affairs, a fatal trait in your society is the admiration for smart men, and I believe I said, or implied, that a people among whom there is an admiration for smart men will come to grief."

Novelty in Advertising.

A novel way of introducing a new article has been discovered in London. A number of men who suggest by their apparel that they are grooms, valets or servants of some kind are sent about the shops to buy the article which is being boomed. They insist upon having this particular article and no other, rejecting any substitute which may be offered them.

In many cases the tradesman has not the article in question, but is sure to lay in a stock when a few days later a drummer waits upon him with the article in question. As the men are selected with a view to give the impression that their employers are wealthy the shopkeeper naturally thinks that the article will bring him the patronage of a class he is anxious to please.

DRESS AND FASHION

FROCKS AND FRILLS BEWITCHINGLY COMPLEX OR CHARMINGLY SIMPLE.

The Numerous Decorative Details of the Gown of Today—Lovely Notes of Color—Three Very Taking Dresses—A Ripple From Paris.

Delightfully frilly, fluffy and feminine, the fashions for the coming season suggest sunshine and all the charms of an ideal summer. They are good enough for every fortunate contingency and invite no other. The tailor made of course exists for various useful purposes, but "the" gown revels in soft ruchings, filmy frills, fascinating embroideries, graceful gougings and shirrings, mysterious entre deux, bold motifs and ethereal garnitures of chiffon and lace. It takes us back far away from the day of the strenuous woman to the environment of "my lady" of long ago.

TWO GOWNS OF THE SEASON.

Pale yellow with just that little tinge of pink that makes it "possible" is one of the quaint offerings of the season in color. Champagne is too becoming and harmonious in silks, satins and cloth to be given up, although it has been hard run. A combination of several of the "off" shades of white in one costume finds expression. Rose color will be one of the joys of the season either as a foundation for chiffon or other transparent fabrics or as a note of color introduced into some of the tinted white summer gowns.

Two costumes are here shown. One is of light beige, lavishly embroidered with white silk and with a treble row of gathers round the hips. Thick bouillonne encircles the shoulders, vandyked lace edgings veil the fine plaitings of red lisse on the sleeves and circular yoke in white taffeta striped with red, and there is a draped belt to match. Red chenille tabs with long tassels knotted and sprinkled with straw beads strengthen the color effect. Roses shading from light pink to yellow bedeck the red straw hat, and the parasol is in striped pink china crape.

Very quaint is the gown in water green foulard, striped and figured with white. Lace edgings border the flounces of the skirt and outline the receding shoulder cape, which is lined with duck's egg green. The double jabot and sleeve ruffles, lace ruches and a full veil of black and white lace adorn the yellow straw hat with turned up brim.

A CHARMING SUMMER GOWN.

The lovely model of the second cut is conspicuous for its well shaped skirt and close fitting bolero. While it is of distinctly dainty aspect, it expresses that tiny, newest ripple of feeling originating with the Parisienne for a less elaborate, less intricate style of gown.

AMY VARNUM.

Household Brevities.

The woman who has "no time for relaxation and systematic exercise" is precisely the woman who most needs to take it.

Beating the cocoa with an egg beater just before taking from the stove is said to be an improvement, and a few drops of vanilla in the cocoa pot will make it still better.

A chart and index of the contents of the attic is the latest suggestion anent house cleaning time; but, better still, keep as little old stuff stored away as you conscientiously can.

Make as few stops as possible when beating the whites of eggs, as they will liquefy rapidly again.

The secret of good brown sauce is to brown the butter nicely before adding the flour; then brown both together.

It is much easier to poach an egg when you put a teaspoonful of vinegar in the boiling water.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Young Reuben Brown, from Rawdon way came into town one day
He thought he would take a short rest from the pleasures of making hay
He drove along down Front street with his horses slick and fleet
Till he reached a spot (you know the place) where the rails stick up in the street
The wheel caught a rail, 'tis a terrible tale, his horses tried to run
Poor Rube did reel, fell under the wheel and his day's work was done.

* * *

* * *

Goodness, it was close in church last night!

* * *

Yesterday was a lovely day for shirtwaists and short sermons.

* * *

Surely it was bad enough without a city minister indulging in references to Shadrach et al and the fiery furnace.

* * *

The lawn hose fiends are at it again, flooding the streets with water and making mud three inches thick. They won't be satisfied till a cyclist or two get broken limbs. But surely the authorities should see that the waste of water is stopped. Nobody would grumble at a moderate sprinkling of any street, but some people are not satisfied with moderation.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

ENDORSES MR. GAMEY.

B. Rosamond, M.P., Presides at a Political Picnic.

Almonte, July 18.—On Saturday this town was the scene of a big and enthusiastic political picnic, presided over by Bennett Rosamond, M. P., and addressed in chief by R. R. Gamey. Among others present were: Dr. Sproule, Col. Fowler, E. Guss Porter, Senator Perley and Dr. Preston.

Mr. Rosamond intends to retire from politics at the close of the present House, and the picnic was in the nature of a farewell, though he still retains his seat in the Commons, and will not relinquish it till the elections are brought on. Dr. Preston will be the next candidate of the riding. The visiting speakers were entertained at Mr. Rosamond's beautiful home and spent an enjoyable day.

In opening the meeting Mr. Rosamond said that he had not been eye to eye with Mr. Gamey, and had never heard him tell his story. After Mr. Gamey had finished he would tell the people what he thought of it. Mr. Gamey spent over an hour in going into the details of his tale. Then Mr. Rosamond said that he took the opportunity of publicly announcing that he endorsed Mr. Gamey, and before the large audience he reached out his hand and shook hands with the man from Manitoulin.

The other visitors spoke briefly.

Celebrated His Centenary.

St. Thomas, July 18.—It is rare indeed in this later days when we live out the full of our lives in half the time of our forefathers, that anyone lives to the great age of one hundred. But Archibald McTaggart, second concession, has reached that age, and Friday celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of his birth. His children, his children's children and their children, besides nearly five hundred of his neighbors and friends from far and near gathered at his home to congratulate him.

Government Ownership.

London, July 18.—It is stated that the Government will bring in a bill making wireless telegraphy throughout the United Kingdom a Government monopoly. The postoffice officials have been experimenting with a new system of their own.

Three Heat Deaths in Chicago.

Chicago, July 18.—This was the hottest day Chicago has experienced in three years and three deaths and a score of prostrations resulted. The mercury reached the high mark of 94 at 4 o'clock and remained there for more than two hours.

SHADES AND FABRICS.

Printed Muslins For Summer—Colors For Blonds and Brunettes.

Printed muslins in the most delightful designs make pretty summer gowns over taffeta silk matching the flower design. They are trimmed with narrow laces or chiffon.

The blond girl should avoid blue unless her eyes are very deep and her eyebrows well marked. It makes her wishy washy. Pale yellow is very becoming to her; so also are brown, black and a certain shade of green. White is her best color. Turquoise blue looks particularly well on a dark haired woman, and so do the shades of old rose and deeper pink. The pale pinks belong to blonds. Deep mauves and purples are becoming to both blonds and brunettes, and this is true also of certain shades of scarlet.

The fashionable decolletage line is somewhat higher this season, for, although the corsage is cut lower, it is finished with a dainty tucker of mousseline de soie, chiffon or net.

BLUE LIBERTY SATIN GOWN.

Challie is to be revived, so leaders of fashion say, and this is pretty for young girls when made up softly with a bit of good lace.

A good effect was produced by deep lace and ribbon ruches, arranged in a scroll design, on the skirt of a rich purple crepe de chine gown. The corsage had the long shoulder line, the full sleeves being shirred to the elbow and terminating in deep cuffs of lace.

ODDS AND ENDS.

So far all the waists and dress bodices are made with high collar bands, and, although some are unlined, yet the bare effect of the collarless bodice is missing.

Where lace is lavishly employed on a gown the sleeves are partially composed of the lace, and this gives a very smart and light effect, even on dark foulard or black gowns. In fact, the black toilet is often the smartest of all, so often is it trimmed with tinted lace.

Belts are quite a feature of the new fashions, and they are invariably wide. Tucked belts of leather are used with many of the tailor made costumes. Some of them are studded with silver or steel nails and are finished with buckles to correspond. Very deep belts of corded silk or taffeta are also worn, and the straight belts of colored shiny leather are designed to wear with soft, full blouses under cloth and linen boleros.

MORNING COSTUME.

Lace squares and figures are used more than ever to outline yokes, sleeves and flounces.

Perfectly charming is the new silk kinu, which possesses the substance of pongee and the softness of crepe de chine. At present this exquisite material is only to be seen in the india silk color, but later in the season it will be obtainable in all the fashionable shades.

Velvet or taffeta silk boleros are now much in evidence—another old fashion revived—and are made sleeveless or with elbow sleeves, the bolero matching the trimming of the dress and not the material in which it is carried out.

The picture shows a morning costume of white canvas piped with scarlet and white foulard with knotted scarf of same. JUDIC CHOLLET.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation—Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailer made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 68 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL

LONDON'S FAMOUS PLACE OF WORSHIP THIRTEEN CENTURIES OLD.

The Story in Brief of a Church That Was Originally Built by King Ethelbert in A.D. 604 and Reconstructed 229 Years Ago—Once the Site of a Temple to Diana in Great Britain.

Tradition asserts that a Temple to Diana preceded the Christian Church of St. Paul's on the summit of Ludgate Hill. It is not at all unlikely. When the Romans swept the country, and formed their camp on the eminence, overlooking the Thames to protect the river trade at the foot of the hill, they would also erect a heathen temple somewhere in the neighborhood.

How and when christianity supplanted heathenism in London no man knows. The barbaric hordes from the north who rolled the Roman legions into the sea did their work so thoroughly that no trace of authentic history remains. Although it is certain that at the Council of Arles, in 314, Restitutus, a Bishop of London was one of the three British bishops present, it cannot be said with certainty that his church was the Church of St. Paul's.

St. Peter's, Cornhill, has been claimed to have an older foundation than that of St. Paul's, but Bishop Browne gives good reasons for rejecting the claim.

Reliable history begins with the Venerable Bede, who, in speaking of the consecration of Bishop Mellitus in 604, adds: "King Ethelbert built the Church of St. Paul's, in the City of London, where he (Mellitus) and his successors should have their episcopal seat," but gives no indication whether this was an entirely new church, or one erected on a site previously occupied.

The demon of fire seems to have had a peculiar grudge against St. Paul's, for twenty years after the conquest the church was wrapped in flames and burned to the ground. Bishop Maurice entertained ambitious plans for a church of considerable magnitude. When the finishing touches were put to the structure it was the pride and admiration of the Norman builder, William of Malmesbury went into raptures over it. "Such is the steadiness of its beauty," he says, "that it is worthy of being numbered amongst the most famous of buildings."

But thirty years later this elaborate building was consumed in the flames that swept the city from London Bridge to the Fleet, and a new nave—destined to be the scene of many stirring events—was erected on the ruins of the old.

Old St. Paul's, as this church is known in history, stood for over five hundred years, and during that period witnessed some stirring and exciting events. In fact, a great portion of English history is epitomized in the history of the church.

In Richard the Second's day, Ludgate Hill often witnessed the picturesque sight of monks, pedlars, pilgrims, and other wanderers wending their way to the sacred shrine to deposit their offerings or obtain healing and strengthening virtue from a contemplation of the many relics that were guarded by the monks, and regarded with awe by the wandering crowds. No suspicions as to their genuineness ever entered the minds of these simple people. It is only in these less reverential days that we raise a broad smile when we are told that Old St. Paul's contained, among other relics, "A knife of our Lord, some hair of Mary Magdalene, some blood of St. Paul, some milk of the Virgin, the hand of St. John, pieces of the impetuous skull of Thomas a Becket, and the head and jaw of King Ethelbert!"

In the early days of Queen Elizabeth the church had become what the Temple was in Christ's day—a den of thieves and worse. The Queen issued a proclamation forbidding fray, drawing of swords in the church, or shooting of hand-guns or dagg within the church or church-yard, under pain of two months' imprisonment. But this had little effect. The writer of "Old and New London," says that at this time "Cheats, gulls, assassins and thieves thronged the middle aisle of the church. Advertisements of all kinds covered the walls. The worst class of servants came there to be hired. Worthless rascals and disreputable, flaunting women met there by appointment." Shakespeare makes St. Paul's the place where Falstaff hires Bardolph; and the third scene in Ben Jonson's "Every Man in his Humor" is placed in the middle aisle of the church.

Soon after the accession of James the First, Digby, Winter, Grant and Bates, four of the Gunpowder plot conspirators, were hung, drawn and quartered before the west front entrance, not far away from where Queen Anne's statue now stands. Here, too, the drawing for prizes in the state lotteries took place.

The church had now stood for over four hundred years, and began to show signs of decay, but the restoration of the church was delayed again and again all through the period of the Commonwealth, until the great fire enveloped the city in its embrace in 1666, and Old St. Paul's became a thing of the past, and the monumental work of Sir Christopher Wren took its place.

The fire broke out on Sunday morning, Sept. 2, 1666. On Tuesday evening it caught the top of the church, and before nine o'clock, says Taswell, "it blazed so conspicuous as to enable me to read very clearly a 16mo. edition of Terence which I carried in my pocket." Evelyn records in his diary, "The stones of St. Paul's flew like grenades, the melting lead running down the street in a stream, and the very pavements glowing with a fiery redness, so as no man or horse was able, to tread on them, and the demolition had stopped all passages, so that no help could be applied, the eastern wind still more impetuously driving the flames forward." In addition to the cathedral, 83 parish churches suffered a similar fate.

The first stone of the new church was laid on June 21, 1675, and it was thirty-five years later before the Te Deum could be chanted on the completion of the work. Wren was now an old man bordering on eighty, and being unable to ascend the lantern tower, the fixing of the last stone on the summit was entrusted to his son, Christopher, who, with the master mason, Edward Strong, successfully accomplished the task, an enormous crowd looking on from below.

The rebuilding was regarded in the light of a national undertaking, and, to defray the cost, the Government imposed a duty of 1s. 6d. per chaldron on sea-borne coal entering the Thames. The effect of this impost is to make the church the property of the public. According to Mr. Dimock, the coal dues realized £810,181 18s. 2d., and public subscriptions and other gifts raised the total to £878,523 12s. 3d. The entire cost including interest on loans advanced during different stages of the work, amounted to £846,214 12s 6d., leaving a balance in hand in 1722 of £32,308 19s. 9d.

The stone used in the building is from the famous Portland quarries, and was selected because of its durability in regard to both weather and smoke, the facilities for transport, and the size of the blocks.

During the last thirty years, however, good progress has been made with the decorative work. The eight spandrel pictures round the dome were completed in 1894. In niches above the gilt rails of the whispering gallery are stone figures of the four eastern and four western doctors of the church. A marble pulpit has been erected. A new reredos, rich and elaborate in design, was dedicated on St. Paul's Day, 1888. Several stained glass windows have supplanted those of plain glass, and Sir W. B. Richmond's mosaics, though subjected to much adverse criticism, have lit up the choir with gleams of harmonious color.

The church has been the scene of many imposing ceremonies, chief of which in recent years have been the attendance of Queen Victoria and the royal family in February, 1872, to give thanks to God for the recovery of the Prince of Wales, and the still more recent thanksgiving for the Jubilee reign of Queen Victoria in 1897, when the service was held at the foot of the west front steps, a record of which is inscribed on the granite pavement.

FOR THIRTEEN YEARS.

An Essex Englishman Has Lived the Life of a Hermit.

Embowered in a garden of his own planting and culture, adjoining an Essex wood not far from Dunmow, there lives in solitary seclusion a man who has not been seen by any one except his mother and brother for the past thirteen years. His only communication with the outer world is an occasional visit by night to a neighboring cottage, completely isolated from all other dwellings, where dwell his aged mother and younger brother.

James Mason, the hermit in question, is the elder son of a farmer who died fourteen years ago, and after his father's death he left the farmhouse and made himself a sylvan retreat in a plantation on his own freehold.

This strange abode, which covers about an acre of ground, is fenced in by a high hedge, and is entered by a tall gate covered with barbed wire, always kept chained and locked. A small hut with a corrugated iron roof is known to stand in the centre of the grounds, and in all probability this strange man has his abode there. Rumor has attributed to him a vow, taken thirteen years ago, that he would never look in a woman's face again.

Parliamentary Reporting 100 Years Ago.

Yesterday a debate of considerable interest was anticipated; but, in consequence of a ballot for an election committee, the gallery doors of the House of Commons were not opened till a later hour than usual, when the crowd was so great as rather to make the lobbies resemble the entrance into a theatre than a senate house.

While the mob were assembling without, notwithstanding the foolish regulations of a few old constables the gallery was, in great part, filled by the orders of the members, in favor of persons admitted through the House itself; so that when the doors were at last opened, the major part of the gentlemen, who are in the habit of reporting the debates, found themselves (after a severe struggle, in the little confined staircase, where the windows were broken, and, we believe, two or three accidents happened) excluded from the gallery.

Had the expected discussion taken place, we should have had, in common with our brother journalists, to lament our total inability to give any account of it, either for the gratification of the public, or of the speakers, or for the benefit of the interests of the nation, so materially connected with it.—Times, April 21, 1804.

Converted the Reporters.

An amusing feud between the bench and the press has arisen in Melbourne, according to The London Chronicle. One of the local morning journals alleged that the court hours were too short altogether and that public inconvenience thereby resulted. Chief Justice Sir John Madden read that statement and staggered counsel by sitting until 6 o'clock every day. A deputation of barristers waited upon him and remonstrated. He replied that so long as the public, as represented by the press, considered that the court was consulting its own ease he would continue to sit late. He has already converted the reporters.

GOING TO LAW.

Some Pertinent Figures and Also Some Pertinent Facts—People Seem to Be Getting More Litigious.

Sir Walter Scott, who was fond of the learned professions, tells us that the clergyman lives on our sins, the doctor upon our diseases and the lawyer on our mistakes. If we want a commentary upon the matter, we have it once a year, straight from the pen of Sir John Macdonell, a master of the Supreme Court, who, in a somewhat leisurely manner, but with great ability, prepares for the nation the statistics relating to the civil courts of justice. We have here in black and white what the nation pays as the price of that delightful hobby known as going to law. And yet the bill of costs is incomplete. Many cases are settled out of court, yet not without an expenditure of cash, while, in the instances where the quarrel is fought to a finish, the costs which appear in these returns do not by any means include all that the unhappy litigants had to defray.

But let us to figures. The judicial statistics now being published apply to the year 1902, when no fewer than 1,410,484 proceedings were begun, excluding all criminal affairs. This is a record, and should be set against 1,358,587 for 1901. The statistics only refer to England and Wales, so that reckoning five to the family, we discover the cheerful fact that about one household in every four has been so enlightened as to appeal unto Caesar. The number of cases heard and determined was 472,041 in 1902, as compared with 456,242 in 1901.

It therefore seems clear enough that we are as a people becoming rapidly more litigious. Now this may be due in some measure to the legislation sanctioned year by year, in a Parliament which is largely composed of lawyers who live by the statutes they vote for. For instance, the Education Acts have led already to about 20,000 cases coming into court. Company law, in which none of the parties are the absolute owners of the property under discussion, is also full of benevolent obscurity.

Now the cost of all this quarreling is not to be measured in pounds, shillings and pence. No sum of money adequately compensates for worry, for it is nevertheless significant that the bill for 1902 rose to £1,561,975 10s. 7d

These actualities lend peculiar point to the conviction, so ardently pressed by the Society of Friends, that it is wrong for the Christian to go to law. The basis of this belief is, of course, to be found in the New Testament, and it forms part of the more general plea for non-resistance which may be summed up in the phrase, peace at any price. In the days when the practice of Quakers was at least as strict as it is at the present time, it was yet found possible for them, while eschewing all litigation, to carry on immense businesses, including especially the conduct of banks.

But the freedom from litigation is due also to another cause. The Society of Friends is a community devoted to the ideal of exactitude. It is almost the only denomination with absolutely precise statistics of attendances at Sunday schools. Its pedigrees are a wonder of accuracy. Similarly, at each point of a private negotiation, the true method is first to deal fairly and secondly to deal in language which admits of only one, and that the intended meaning.

Litigation is the ultimate outcome of the friction caused by carelessness or overcharging. I have heard lawyers say that they spend most of their time persuading clients not to go into court, and such advice is always the act of a friend. But, of course, if men and women are to get on without incurring the penalty of the law, they must remember that there is no room in this world for lost tempers. Revenge always costs dearly, and there are few more expensive luxuries than spite. Whatever may have been the limitations of George Fox, his conceptions always produced an atmosphere in which a petty temperament could hardly survive.

It must be assumed that this attack upon the law court involves either the extinction of the lawyer or the abolition of law. The amateur will and testament is a very dangerous thing, and it would be well clearly to understand that many documents can only be drafted by an expert. Indeed, it frequently happens that two friendly parties are compelled to ask the court to decide upon the meaning of some dubious phrase upon which neither dare act without authorization. The solicitor especially performs an indispensable function when he enters as a third party into the discussion of a transaction and reduces to exact terms the real intention of his client. The very fact that such a process means the facing of all eventualities is often sufficient to prevent an imprudent step.

Lawyers are thus the best preventive of the litigation out of which they chiefly make their fortunes. But there will always remain situations where competing rights or claims must be adjudicated. It is with personal as with international affairs—we must sometimes go either to war or to The Hague. Now, in every such case, there is to be found an equitable solution, if such solution is the real aim of the rivals. And in nine cases out of ten it is cheapest for both sides to agree to the compromise. Conciliation never yet ruined anyone; and by conciliation I do not in this connection mean arbitration—which I am told is not so effective at law as it is in politics.

One may add also that these remarks hardly apply to litigation in the divorce court, which is rapidly increasing, and can only be reduced by improving the morale of the nation as a whole. Nor have I spoken of the cases which involve public authorities and vast institutions like railways. Here unfriendliness does enter, and an open court is almost the only way of arriving at the truth. A good deal of law has after all to be made by the judges.—London Daily News.

KLONDYKE OF THE CLAY

A COMMON BLUE CLAY THAT RIVALS GOLD AS A TREASURE.

Wealth of the Gold Fields Has Come to Peterboro, England, Without the Hardships—Clay Deposits Which Are Simply Inexhaustible—Depths of 115 Feet of Clay Have Been Proved—Bricks by Machinery.

There is a district in Peterboro which is called Klondyke. That is its postal address, and it is aptly chosen, for the ancient city has found hidden in the earth on which it stands a treasure inestimable. It is not gold or diamonds, merely a common blue clay; but by the alchemy of modern science it is transmuted into the precious metal of our currency, and the wealth of the goldfields has come to Peterboro without the hardships.

This ancient city has witnessed the making of England, and taken an active part throughout the centuries in events which stirred the nation's life. But it was virtually saved from obscurity in modern times by a foolish Marquis of Exeter, who, when it was proposed to run a great line of railway through Stamford, set his face against such a desecration of his broad acres. Peterboro had no such prejudices, and it gained what Stamford lost, and became a busy centre of trade. Two thousand railwaymen live in Peterboro at this day in a colony of their own, and, with the aptness for nomenclature which seems native to the district, it has been called New England.

But even better fortune was in store for the city. In the regions round about Oxford clay approaches the surface, and lies in great beds covering a wide area. It is grey and blue in shade, and has a certain oiliness, as of shale. Over it a layer of plastic clay was found, which was made into bricks, and lumps of this substance appear in the Oxford clay, giving the semblance of knots in wood. So at this day a hole whence the clay is out is a "knot-hole."

Fletton, on the outskirts of the city, is in the centre of the clay fields, and "Fletton" is the trade name of the Peterboro brick. The clay deposits are literally inexhaustible. Their superficial area is of many square miles, and the depth varies, but is always great. Depths of 115 feet of clay have been proved, and the local feeling is that men may dig for ever in these regions, and still find the pay dirt. It is soft and easily workable; the oil in it facilitates combustion, and lessens the coal bill in firing; it can be made by the dry process, very simply and expeditiously. The London stock brick, so called, is made laboriously, and is weather-dried; and the process is slow. The Peterboro brick is made more cheaply, with less labor, and has the advantage of being absolutely true and regular in shape, so that setting can be done more quickly.

About 20 years ago machinery to deal with this clay came into use, and Peterboro has grown because of the possibilities thus opened out. Today there are some 30 brickyards in the district, and 2,000 men are employed in the industry. Klondyke is the name of the newly built district in which many of them live. Eighty tall smoke shafts raise their heads, and if they were set on end they would ascend over two miles into the sky. One of them alone contains 140,000 bricks, and they stand to all travelers in the east as an indication and advertisement of the astonishing growth of an industry which now commands an invested capital of a million sterling.

Estimates of the product of this industry vary, and it is impossible to decide between them. One puts the annual produce of the 30 yards at 500,000,000 bricks, or a million and a half a day; others say that the produce is probably 800,000,000 bricks, and that 500,000,000 of them go to the London market alone. For the new War Office in Whitehall 25,000,000 of these bricks have been required.

The work is very simple and easily described. The clay makes an uninterrupted and rapid process from the knot-holes to the wagons in the railway sidings at the doors of the kilns. In many yards the steam digger tears the clay from the beds 150 pounds at a time; the filled trucks are drawn by power to the mill, where the clay arrives in soft lumps. One steam digger does the work of twelve men; each of the machines for manufacture does the work of hundreds of men. No hand touching it, the clay is tipped into a mill, where it is reduced to powder; then it passes by an endless traveling belt to the floor above the presses, where it falls into the hoppers of the machines. The mould is filled, a pressure of 100 tons is applied, and each revolution of the machine produces one or more bricks, truly and regularly shaped. In this way a machine makes from 30,000 to 50,000 bricks a week. Thence they pass to the kilns, which hold some 350,000 to 400,000 bricks for the firing. Twenty days pass in this delicate process, and each brick loses in that time two pounds in weight.

And thus the work goes on continuously, and Peterboro now claims to have the busiest and biggest brickfield in the world.

Nor is this merely a passing boom. One acre of clay 100 feet deep will yield 80,000,000 bricks; so that at the higher estimate only ten acres of clay are consumed in a year. There is clay enough to serve many generations, and enhance Peterboro's prosperity. Having made great progress in the last two decades, the clay Klondyke of the Fens looks forward confidently to a bright and smiling future.—London Chronicle.

Summer Clearing Sale of Odds & Ends In China

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly—in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

After The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices.

Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen, for we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

JOHN MITCHELL'S LETTERS ON LABOR.

John Mitchell has gone to Europe. Everybody knows who John Mitchell is. It is an easy matter to recall that he is head of the United Mine Workers and that he piloted that organization through the great coal strike. He is a strong man and a brainy man. He went to Europe primarily to attend the International Miners' Congress at Paris in August. But incidentally he purposes seeing something of Europe, and naturally he will study labor conditions. The result of that study will be embodied in a series of letters now appearing in The Illustrated Buffalo Express.

Every employer, every employee, every student of pressing social problems will be intensely interested in these letters.

ONE OF THE VILEST DISEASES is catarrh, which first attacks the nose and throat and finally spreads all through the system. The one sure cure is fragrant, healing Catarrhozone, which is sent by the air you breathe direct to the root of the trouble. Mr. T. Y. MacVicar, of Yarmouth, suffered for years from catarrh and says: "In my long experience with this loathsome disease I never used any remedy that relieved and cured so promptly as Catarrhozone. When my nostrils were so stuffed up that I couldn't breathe I found a few inhalations of Catarrhozone was sufficient to clear away the mucous. I am perfectly cured by Catarrhozone and free from the disease entirely." Use only Catarrhozone Complete outfit $1.00; trial size 25c.

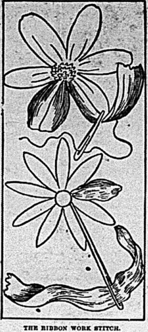
RAPID FANCY WORK.

RIBBON EMBROIDERY FOR DRESS GARNITURE AND DECORATION.

A Simple Process Requiring Only Needles, Thread and Ribbon—A Deft Hand and Good Taste the Main Essentials.

Now that all sorts of garnitures—motifs, beadwork, embroideries and the like—are in such high favor in dress, ribbon work comes in also for its share of popularity. Nowadays we want to do things that give best effect with least labor, and the sort of ribbon work in question answers this requirement perfectly. It is very simple, and the illustrations give a clear idea of it.



THE RIBBON WORK STITCH.

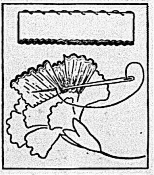
A needle with a rather large eye and an embroidery frame are perhaps the most important items. With the frame one can use materials that would without it be too thin to work on with comfort and accuracy. For backgrounds the choice is unlimited, varying from satin and silk to coarse linen of a sufficiently open texture to permit ribbon to be drawn through. The ribbons themselves are various, one much used being the thin pompadour kind one-eighth of an inch wide. This is suited to fine and dainty work. A wider ribbon, sometimes variegated or crumpled, is employed for bigger undertakings, as it produces bold effects without very much stitching. A fancy edged ribbon, such as shown in the second cut, is suitable for other styles of work.

The work with the thin baby ribbon and with wide, soft silk or crape ribbon is the same and is done in two ways. The ribbon may be drawn through the material with the needle, as in the upper figure of the first cut, or it may be stitched into position with silk, as in the lower figure. The sketch shows purposely the very simplest flower forms, but much more elaborate effects may be obtained.

The use of fancy edged ribbon is different. It is never drawn through the material. The first step is to run a thread through the plain edges, as shown in the second cut, on which to gather it up, and the next is to sew it on.

Some flowers can be worked without once cutting the ribbon. Others, owing to their shape, require the ribbon to be cut at the end of each row of petals, the end of the ribbon being turned under. Stems and usually leaves are worked in floselle.



ANOTHER METHOD OF ATTACHING RIBBON.

It is not possible to instruct the worker where and how to give all those little underturns and folds that go to give the exact formation of flowers, but practice and experiment soon make them clear.

MARGARET FRENCH.

Restoring Velvet.

According to an exchange, shabby velvet may be restored by mixing two teaspoonfuls of liquid ammonia with half a pint of hot water and applying it to the velvet with a stiff brush, rubbing it well into the pile, so as to take out all the stains and creases. Then hold the velvet over a hot flatiron until the steam raises the pile and it is perfectly dry.

Rice Soup.

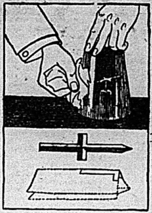
One quarter of a pound of rice, two quarts of water and one teaspoonful of salt. Boil until only one quart of water remains. Add one pint of milk, a quarter of a teaspoonful of paprika, a teaspoonful of butter and one-half cup of rolled crackers.

THE OBEDIENT ARROW.

Without Touching It You May Make It Point Where You Please.

Drive a large needle entirely through a large cork until the head is buried. Set the cork on the table, with the point of the needle up, and balance on the point a little arrow or pointer made of rather stiff but not heavy paper. Cover the whole thing with a tumbler which has stood near the fire or on a hot air register until it is warm and thoroughly dry.

Now, as your friends gather around the table, you may promise to make the arrow turn toward any one of them and then remain motionless, pointing at him. You promise to do this without touching the arrow or even removing the tumbler.



MAKING THE ARROW OBEY.

To do it you must have a silk handkerchief or some other piece of silk. Hold the tumbler in place with your left hand and with your right rub the glass up and down with the silk at the point nearest the person selected.

If the arrow is already pointing anywhere near that direction it will turn until it points to the rubbed place and then stop. If, however, it happens to be pointing in nearly the opposite direction you will have to first rub near the point of the arrow. As it turns toward the rubbed spot move your hand a little distance and rub again. In this way you may coax the arrow around until you get it where you want it.

Indeed, you can make it rotate all the way round in either direction as long as you please by continuing to rub and keeping your hand always just ahead of the point of the arrow. It is not necessary to rub very hard or all the time.

The difficult part of this trick is balancing the arrow on the needle. The sort of arrow shown in the picture is the easiest to balance.

A SPELLING LESSON.

See if You Can Get All These Words as They Should Be.

Are you a good speller? You may easily find out by glancing over this. The spelling of every word is correct, but it does not correspond to meaning, only to sound.

After a thyme he stopped at a blew house and wrung the belle. His tow hurt hymn, and he kneaded wrest. He was two tired to raze his fare, pail face. A feint mown rows from his lips.

The made who herd the belle was about to pare a pair, butt she through it down and ran with awl her mite, for fear her guessed wood knot weight. Butt when she saw the little won tiers stood in her ayes at the site.

"Ewe poor deer! Why dew yew lye hear? Are you dyeing?"

"Know," he said. "I am feint."

She boar hymn in her arms and hurried two a rheum, where he mite bee quiet, gave hymn bred and meet, untied his neck scarf, rapped hymn up warm and gave hymn a suite drachm.

See if you can rewrite this, spelling each word correctly, according to its meaning.

A Gravedigging Beetle.

There are beetles which follow the trade of gravediggers. Burying beetles is the common name they go by. They are surprisingly industrious, a single one of them having been known to bury a mole forty times as large as itself in two days' time. Just think what a task it would be for a man to dig a grave for some creature forty times as big as himself!

They have very powerful jaws, these little creatures, and with these they scoop around the body of anything they want to bury until gradually it sinks down, when they cover it with earth. They are very useful, these burying beetles, doing the work of scavengers.

No "Swear Words."

It is said that not a single "swear word" is to be found in the Japanese language.

That means that the Japs have no need for such words. And no wonder! For they think it is very silly for any one to get angry. "What's the use?" they say. "There's no use kicking about things we cannot help."

A Puzzler.

A drummer may beat with a drum,
And a gummer works with gum,
"But I'd like to know,"
Said Freddie to Joe,
"What a plumber has to do with a plum."

A Strange Coincidence.

TRENTON PEOPLE HAD A NARROW ESCAPE FROM DROWNING—THE HELP WHICH WAS NOT FORTHCOMING.

A gentleman from Trenton tells us of a boating accident which occurred near that town on Wednesday afternoon last. It appears that the yacht "We're Next" had gone out with a party of four aboard, namely, Messrs. Thos. Bowerman, merchant; William Young, drug clerk; Thos. Barry, merchant, and Irvine Galana, clerk for the latter. The craft capsized, and the party were in the water for two hours, clinging to the overturned boat. It is alleged that, while the party was in this predicament, the yacht "Norah," of Port Hope, passed by, quite close to them, and that the people on board the Port Hope yacht paid not the slightest attention to the signals and cries for help of the unfortunate Trenton party, but kept on their way towards this city. The shipwrecked mariners, one of whom, Mr. Barry, is quite an elderly gentleman, were finally saved by Rev. Mr. Armstrong, of Trenton, who, from the shore, saw their dire straits, put out in his own yacht and rescued them. The next evening news reached Trenton that the hand of death had fallen on one of those who manned the yacht "Norah," whose crew, it is alleged, had turned a deaf ear to the appeals made by those who might at any moment have been drowning men.

The above story is told to us on excellent authority, but there may, perhaps, be another side to it. If so we shall be pleased to print it.

SECOND-HAND STORE WAS BURGLARIZED

ON SUNDAY MORNING — SILVER WATCH AND CHAIN MISSING—ANOTHER ATTEMPT MADE.

At an early hour on Sunday morning the second-hand store of Mr. J. H. Coleman, situated on the corner of the Market square and Pinnacle street, was visited by burglars. The upper portion of the front door is glass, a pane of which was broken, and by this means a bolt was drawn and the door unfastened. All that was missed was a silver watch and chain, which hung in the window. Although the breaking of the glass was heard some distance away, Mr. Coleman and family, who live in the building, were not awakened and did not discover the loss until arising Sunday morning.

It is reported that on Friday evening previous an attempt was made to enter Mr. C. Hayes' shop, which is situated near by.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

ALLEGED MANSLAGHTER AT CAMPBELLFORD.

JAMES DUNN DEAD, AND HIS NEPHEW ARRESTED.

On Tuesday last, at Campbellford, an elderly man named James Dunn was, it is alleged, ill-treated by his nephew, who is also named James Dunn. On Wednesday the old gentleman's condition was such that a physician was called to see him and despite medical aid he died the following day. It is stated that the body of the deceased bore evidence of harsh treatment, it being covered with bruises. It is said that young Dunn was jealous of the old man, which caused him to beat him. An inquest was held, with the result that the assailant has been committed to stand his trial on the charge of manslaughter.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Bridge Street.

"An Example" was the subject discussed by the pastor, Rev. J. P. Wilson, last evening to a good congregation. His text was from 1st epistle of Peter, 2nd chapter and a portion of the 21st verse:

During the service Mr. D. Cameron sang a solo entitled "It is Enough," and a duet was given by Miss Vermilyea and Mr. Jessop entitled, "Peace to the Sacred Dwelling."

Holloway Street.

At the morning service Rev. J. Ferguson occupied the pulpit. In the evening the pastor, Rev. R. H. Leitch, preached. His text was from Galations, 6th chapter, 14th verse:

"But God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world."

First Church.

At the evening service the Rector, Rev. W. B. Heeney, gave an able discourse on the subject, "God's Valuation of Individuals." His text was from St. Luke, 15th chapter and 7th verse:

"I say unto you, that likewise joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance."

At the close of the sermon Miss Gertie Price sang a solo entitled "Thy Will be Done."

St. Andrew's.

Rev. J. A. Wilson, of Peterboro, preached at both services yesterday and the congregations were much pleased with his discourses. In the morning his text was from the 107th Psalm and part of the 2nd verse:

"Let the redeemed of the Lord say so."

Sports and Pastimes

SPORTING NOTES.

Lacrosse results on Saturday:—Shamrocks 16, Cornwall 3; Brantford 7, Fergus 1; Capitals 5, Montreal 2; Tecumsehs 5, St. Kitts 4 (disputed); Chippewas 14, Buffalo 4.

Umpire Sullivan was mobbed in Montreal, and a detective, with a gun, had to escort him from the grounds. One gentle fan, with a knife, tried to carve the poor umpire.

Our old friend "Reddy" McMillan bumped into another bunch of misfortune on Saturday, when the Shamrocks of Montreal and Cornwalls played. "Reddy" was playing inside home and it seems that, according to a despatch, "in the third quarter McMillan checked Currie with considerable force, and the gut of his stick put an ugly scratch on Currie's head, which bled profusely. Currie then did the baby act, throwing the ball at McMillan and rushing after him with his stick. Robinson more than avenged him, however, by cracking McMillan over the head. There was a general mixup for a while, and the referee penalized McMillan twenty minutes, Currie ten and Robinson only five. "Poor Reddy!" He seems to get up against most of the trouble there is going.

SMART HABERDASHERY.

The man who wants the latest thing in a shirt, the right thing in a tie, smart gloves or hosiery, will be sure to find at Quick & Robertson's what he's looking for. While we're clothiers, of course, we still give our haberdashery department the greatest care. Everything must be correct or we'll have none of it. Hats also. Don't forget that we sell hats.

The Rolling Mills.

MACHINERY NOW IN SPLENDID SHAPE—ROLLING WILL BEGIN TO-MORROW MORNING

It was the intention of the Rolling Mills management to begin operations this morning, but it was found out at the last moment almost that the "fore" plates were practically worn out, and it was determined to have them renewed before the rolls were started. The casting for the same was done in a local foundry and will be delivered to-day. It will, we are informed, take only about half an hour to put the new casting in position, and rolling operations will begin at 6 o'clock to-morrow morning.

For some time there has been a large staff of men employed at the mills. To-day 40 men were at work, and this number will to-morrow be increased to 70.

The mills now have about 2000 tons of scrap iron on hand, which makes a most imposing appearance, and certainly looks like business.

In answer to a query as to how large the output of the mills would be, Mr. Wills said that depended altogether on circumstances and the number of orders received, but the management expected, if business warrants it, to roll 80 tons per day.

THREE RECKLESS MEN MEET HORRIBLE DEATH IN NEW YORK STATE.

New York, July 16.—Racing at top speed with a rapidly moving train for a grade crossing, three men in an auto were ground to death on the Merrick Road, near Rockville Center, L.I., last night. The dead men are:

Frank F. Correll, a real estate operator.
G. F. Jewell, of Brooklyn.
Frank Snyder, of Brooklyn.

Jewell was identified by piecing together letters that had been ground to bits in his pockets. Snyder was identified by the initials of his cuff buttons. Snyder and Correll were carried a quarter of a mile on the pilot of the engine and then fell under the wheels, and almost the entire train passed over the bodies. Jewell was thrown sixty feet in the air. He lived for a short time.

Mr. Correll's sister was on the train which struck him and caused his death.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN

GREATEST BATTLE OF MODERN TIMES IS NOW BELIEVED TO BE IMMINENT.

(The Globe.)

Cabling yesterday, a Tientsin correspondent states that heavy firing has been heard outside of Tatchekaio for the last two days. This—from amid a cloud of manifestly untrue or contradictory stories—is the one item from the Far East to-day bearing resemblance to the truth. The story that Admiral Togo is dead seems to be a silly invention. The assertion that Japan suffered a great reverse at Port Arthur is officially denied at Tokio. As a partial explanation of its origin we now have a report from Alexieff that twelve days ago the Japanese were driven from some of their advanced positions with losses "estimated by the Chinese" at 2,000. The story of 30,000 in losses was no doubt set afloat to turn Russian public attention away from the evacuation of Kaichow. The landing of 20,000 additional Japanese soldiers at Dalny and much artillery two weeks ago proves that there is no intention of letting the grass grow around the fortress. In this connection it is to be noted that Admiral Togo is holding under his immediate orders a squadron strong enough to do battle with the Port Arthur squadron should it tempt fortune at sea. The foreign attaches and press correspondents now visiting the scene of the war were at the Japanese naval base—an unknown island in the Gulf of Corea, probably one of the Elliot group—on Thursday last. There they saw Japan's five battleships, the two armored cruisers brought from Argentina, and three protected cruisers. These ten vessels are easily a match for the Port Arthur ships, and are no doubt being held in reserve until the Russians are "smoked" out of Port Arthur by the fear of capture.

Interest still centres in the movements around Tatchekiao and the attitude of Kuropatkin. There are two possible explanations for the continued presence there of the Russian Commander-in-Chief and the bulk of his army. The first is that he feels strong enough to fight the combined Japanese forces and therefore gives battle on ground of his own choosing, provided with ample field works. The second, and to the writer the more probable explanation, is that he cannot get away. He has remained so long that the Japanese have curled around both flanks, and would on the first sign of retreat change the movement into a rout. The Russians fight splendidly in rear-guard actions, but Kuropatkin's fear may be that those terrible Japanese guns would play havoc, as they did at Telissu. To leave his own guns in the rear to reply would almost inevitably result in their capture. If the event should prove that Kuropatkin prefers to stand even against superior force rather than risk a retreat we are upon the eve of one of the great battles of modern times, one in which 300,000 men will contend for the mastery of Manchuria.

McINTOSH BROS.

AT "DEAD MAN'S" POINT

Arthur Poyntz Smyth Sank to Death in the River Humber.

He Was Learning to Swim With Three Companions and Got Fagged Out—Chris. Traynor Dived After His Friend But the Water Was 25 Feet Deep and He Could Not Reach Him—Other Drownings.

Toronto, July 18.—There was another Sunday drowning accident yesterday. This time the Humber River was the scene of the fatality. The victim was Arthur Poyntz Smyth, aged 21, a clerk in the T. Eaton Co. store.

Smyth and four friends, Arthur Poyntz, a cousin; H. R. Marsden, Milton Dedman and Chris Traynor, engaged a boat at the Humber and rowed up the river about a mile to a spot known as "Deadman's Point." They went in swimming. Traynor was the only one in the party that could swim. The others were learning.

Traynor was swimming and towing the boat with the rope in his mouth. The others were hanging on to the boat. They crossed the river once, and on the way back Traynor noticed that Dedman and Poyntz were getting fagged, he got them ashore, and when he looked for Smyth he saw him sink. He dived for Smyth, but could not reach him, as the water is 25 feet deep at this point. The body was subsequently recovered with the aid of a pike pole.

Smyth lived with his widowed mother and sister at 562 Bathurst street. They arrived here from Ireland about nine months ago. The funeral will take place Tuesday.

Comrades Saw Him Die.

Hamilton, July 18.—Leon Loosley, a 15 year old son of the late J. N. Loosley, who made his home with his stepfather, J. R. Service, was drowned in the Desjardines Canal, Saturday afternoon, between 3 and 4 o'clock not far from the high level bridge. He went in bathing with a number of other boys and waded about half way across. He could not swim and when he got out of his depth, sank into the deep water.

Took Cramps.

Paisley, July 18.—In the Saugeen River here Saturday evening about 7 o'clock, a nineteen-year-old son of Christopher Parker of Greenock township was drowned. He was in bathing with two other young men, and it is supposed he took cramps. His companions grasped him, but found it impossible to maintain their hold.

Little Boy Killed.

St. Thomas, July 18.—A fatal accident occurred Friday on the farm of James Shoebottom, concession 9, London township, when his seven-year-old boy James, was fatally crushed. Mr. Shoebottom was drawing hay during the day, and was driving up to the barn on top of the load with two small children. Jimmy, the boy, was behind the load, having hold of a board projecting from the wagon. When driving up the gangway, the front wheels of the wagon were raised in such a manner as to lower the end of the board against the gangway, crushing the little fellow. An examination showed that the boy's spine was injured. The boy died in fifteen minutes afterwards in agony.

Dropped to His Death.

Montreal, July 18.—A daring aeronaut named Jas. Anthony Bennett, who made a balloon ascension from Riverdale Park Saturday evening, came to a sad end. The balloon had not more than got under way when it careened and dropped into the river near the Longueil shore. Boats were sent out, but the body has not been recovered. Bennett is known all over this country, and the States as a daring aeronaut. He was born in Bristol, England, 38 years ago. His widow is a fortune teller called Madame Gould.

The body of the ill-fated aeronaut Bennett has been found in two feet of water. He was evidently killed by the fall.

Child Drinks Lye.

Brockville, July 18.—The little four-year-old daughter of Joseph Fitzpatrick came near meeting a tragic death at her father's store. A pitcher containing an extraction of lye had been left on one of the stands, and the little tot climbed up and swallowed a mouthful. She was discovered in the act, but too late. She was at once taken violently sick, and the prompt attendance of a physician saved her life. She is still in a very critical condition.

Body Paralyzed From Fall.

Toronto, July 18.—Joseph Hopkins, who was employed as an engineer in Barchard & Co.'s box factory, is in the general hospital. He is suffering from a severe scalp wound and dislocation of the spine. The body is paralyzed from the neck down. The doctor could not say early this morning whether the injuries would prove fatal or not. Hopkins fell while repairing some pipe yesterday. When found he was conscious, but unable to move. He said he had fallen at 11 o'clock. It was 7 o'clock when he was found. He fell about 15 feet. He has a wife and several children.

FATAL CYCLONE IN N.Y. STATE.

Chappaqua, N. Y., July 18.—A cyclone that swept over a part of this village Saturday caused the loss of one life, the injury of several persons and the total destruction of five dwellings and three barns, besides damaging other property.

Mrs. Hibbs, of Philadelphia, who was here visiting a daughter, Mrs. Anna Washburne, received injuries which caused her death. Mrs. Hibbs was about 80 years old and feeble.

The cyclone came from the west and swept over a tract about 150 feet in width. It was accompanied by rain and hail and levelled everything in its path.

Fatal Train Accident.

Rochester, N. Y., July 18.—Mr. and Mrs. James Bolles were struck by a passenger train on the Auburn branch of the New York Central Railroad yesterday morning, while driving across the track two miles west of Canandaigua. Mr. Bolles was instantly killed. Both were placed on board the train and brought to Rochester. Mrs. Bolles also received fatal injuries.

Wrecked in a Fog.

Williamsport, Penna., July 18.—The Buffalo flyer, northbound, with three carloads of Shriners, en route from Atlantic City, was wrecked Saturday on the Buffalo and Allegheny division of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Two train men were killed and four injured.

Grand Stand Collapsed.

Cleveland, O., July 18.—Two hundred people were hurled to the ground yesterday by the collapse of a stand at Brighton Park, a suburb of this city. A ball game was in progress. Ten people had broken arms or legs.

TIMES ON DUNDONALD.

London, July 18.—(C. A. P.)—The Times, referring to Lord Dundonald's speech in Toronto, says it might have been better taste if he had refrained from repeating to a popular audience his grave indictment against the Canadian Ministry. His searchlight is of a very startling character. The charge of indifference is almost as grave a charge as it is possible for a soldier who has been responsible for the defence of the country to bring against his constitutional chiefs. We are sure it is an unfounded charge so far as it imputes to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues as a body any lack of zeal for the safety of the Dominion. On the other hand, Lord Dundonald's allegations create the impression that the militia has not been administered in some respects with a single eye to its efficiency. Lord Dundonald has appealed to Caesar well knowing the personal penalty he will have to pay. From Ministers and party politicians to public opinion and the electorate is an appeal admittedly irregular, but it will be heard, we imagine, and determined on its merits by the tribunal before whom Lord Dundonald has taken it. The decision will be awaited in Britain with keen interest, as well as in Canada, for the issue is nothing less than the efficiency or the inefficiency of the national defences of our greatest colony and the fitness or unfitness of the present Ministers to provide for them.

STRIKING TERROR IN FINLAND.

Russia Arrests Prominent Men Without Explanation.

London, July 18.—Advices from Helsingfors show that during this month three of the most distinguished professors of the university, Homen, a scientist of European reputation; Estlander, a law lecturer, and Baron Wrede, professor of Roman law, a member of the House of Nobles, and one of the most respected men in Finland, were suddenly arrested and deported in manacles to St. Petersburg. Nothing has been heard of them since. The houses of other professors were searched. It is impossible even to suggest that there is any connection between these arrests and the assassination of Governor-General Bobrikoff. [illegible] object seems simply to be to terroize the Finlanders and to show them that no one is safe from the long arm of Russia.

HEAVY DAMAGES AGAINST A UNION.

Victoria, B. C., July 18.—The jury in the case of Centre Star Line Company, Limited, v. the Rossland Branch of the Western Federation of Miners, Saturday awarded $12,500 damages to the company, on the ground that the Federation had used illegal means in conducting its strike and had wrought detriment to the company's business to the amount granted as damages.

This case has been dragged along in the law courts for a considerable time and is the first of the kind tried in this province.

Justice Duff was the judge. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, K. C., was counsel for the company. It is probable that the Federation will take an appeal.

KING TO THE ARMY.

Hopes Salvation Workers Will Continue Good Work.

London, July 18.—King Edward, in reply to a message from the staff council of the Salvation Army, expressing appreciation of His Majesty's welcome to the International Congress of the army, and "gratitude to God for His Majesty's efforts in the cause of international peace," sends his thanks through Lord Francis Knollys, his private secretary. He says he "rejoices to think that his efforts to promote international peace and good-will have not been entirely without effect," and "that he trusts that the good work the Salvation Army has already achieved by its faith and energy may be constantly increased."

Died Aged Near 100.

Omemee, Ont., July 18.—Mrs. Christopher Switzer died Saturday at the extremely advanced age of 97 years and 2 months. She was one of the earliest settlers, and has lived in the township of Ely nearly all her life.

Took His Own Life.

Edmonton, July 18.—Wm. Nevins, who had just completed a new hotel building here, committed suicide by shooting himself on Saturday afternoon. No cause is known. He was aged 45.

OF MODERN MIRACLES

SCIENCE'S ACHIEVEMENTS IN THE LIGHT OF CHRIST'S PROMISE.

TALMAGE'S CONSTRUCTION

Jesus Christ Superior in His Day to All Natural Laws—Still He Says: "Greater Works Than These Shall He Do" That Believeth on Me—Wonders Accomplished in the Present Day.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 17.—In this sermon a new construction is placed upon many of the "miracles of modern science," which are interpreted in the light of Christ's promise to his followers in John xiv., 12, "Greater works than these shall he do."

Man increases not his gospel faith by lowering the standards of the cross. You might as well expect water to run uphill of its own accord, or violets to grow during midwinter in a snowbank, as for a radiant faith capable of transforming character to exist in any temple unless the chief corner-stone of that temple is Jesus Christ. "And I, if I be lifted up from earth, will draw men unto me," said Jesus Christ just a short time before his crucifixion, "I am the way, the truth, and the life. No man cometh unto the Father but by me," speaks our resurrected Redeemer to the gospel workers of the present day.

Let it be clearly understood at the outset that by no word or thought would I seek to depreciate the power and influence of Christ's personality and work. He it is who fills all created things; he it is who gives life, natural, mental, social. He is the inspirer, the spring from which come all our triumphs. But I want to show you that the promise which he gave to his disciples, "Greater work than these shall he do," has been fulfilled and that man inspired with his spirit has with the natural forces at his disposal done more for uplifting humanity, as Christ said he should, than did Christ himself. Man has taken hold of the power which Christ bestowed and has applied it beyond the opportunities which Christ had to complete the work that he initiated. Christ fed the multitudes; Christ opened the blinded eyes and straightened the crooked limbs; Christ assuaged pain and stopped the chronic issue of blood. Christ fought against the heathenish doctrine that "might is right." Christ was the greatest of all workers of wonders that the world had ever seen. There was only one Christ. There will never be another. Yet there are senses, natural as well as spiritual, in which his promise has been kept to his followers, and they have been enabled through the power emanating from him to do works which surpass those he did in his life on earth. But let it never be forgotten that these "greater works" which man has done have been accomplished only because Jesus has lived and Jesus' prophetic words have been fulfilled. In order to get a better grasp of this theme let me read to you the full verse in which the words of my text are found. "Verily, verily I say unto you he that believeth on me the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my Father."

Jesus Christ was the amazement of amazements to the people of his day and generation as a worker of natural phenomena. He seemed to his time superior to all natural laws. When he went out to visit his disciples in their ship, he did not have to use the land, as other people had to do. He stepped upon the crystal pavement of Lake Galilee as easily as an Alpine climber might rest his foot upon solid rock. When he spoke, the homage of obedience was rendered to him, not alone by men in the synagogue, by beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, but by the winds and the waves. He called to the Galilean tempest, "Peace be still." At a word from his lip the fig tree dried up and withered away. All he had to say was, "Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward forever." At his call came whole schools of fish to be caught by the Galilean fishermen. By his touch whole ovens full of bread seemed to be miraculously created. After the sermon upon the mount he fed the multitudes by simply breaking five loaves of bread into pieces. He kept on breaking those pieces again in twain until at last all were fed with bread, as much as they cared to eat. Christ was a wonder worker in natural phenomena. He could tell Peter just where to go and catch a fish which had in its mouth the "piece of money" by which the disciples should pay the just taxes to the Roman Government. In the hour of his suffering and death the earth trembled and the sun was shrouded in darkness. In him was the power which the psalmist ascribed to the Most High, "He looketh upon the earth and it trembles; he toucheth the hills and they smoke."

Wonderful were those triumphs over natural laws and forces, but what triumphs has man achieved since that time by compelling those natural laws and forces to serve his purposes and by harnessing them as his servants! What wonder can be greater than for man to speak in a telephone receiver, as I have done, in Chicago and have my voice heard in New York city, 1,000 miles away? Christ walking upon the waves of Lake Galilee excited the wonder of the spectators, but how they would have wondered could they have known how a spark, as a mermaid, could carry man's message by running along the pathway of a Pacific cable from Vancouver to Australia, or how a great iron hull could be made to battle against storm and tide and carry thousands of human beings, besides tons upon tons of freight, from New York to Liverpool.

When I see an Edison making an electric light blaze and burn upon the tip end of a dirty piece of carbon; when I see the marvels of machinery, born with everything but a soul; when I see ice frozen in the tropics, and when I know that nations separated by broad seas are brought into speaking distance by wireless telegraphy, I know that one of the fulfillments of my text has come. "Anything which excites wonder, surprise or astonishment in the broad sense is a miracle," wrote the lexicographer. Surely Christ was alluding to man's triumphs in the world of natural phenomena when he said, "The works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my Father."

Not only did Christ astonish the people in his day by his power over the forces of nature; he revealed his divine nature by showing his power over physical diseases. He tried to convince the people in his day of his power as a healer of spiritual maladies by proving himself the cleanser of leper spots, the opener of blinded eyes and the only one of his time who could send the sluggish blood of health coursing through the withered limbs of him sick with the palsy. Yet to-day, as I study Christ, the healer of the sick, I see that the work he did has been taken up by his followers and its triumphs multiplied. By the few words of his power he gave sight to a few blind men, but in our day the Christian surgeons, by their operations, are giving sight to thousands. The virtue from his garment stopped one issue of blood, but in our day the Christian physician, with his medicaments is stopping thousands of issues. Christ's touch relieved a few sufferers of pain; but in the hospitals of our time thousands pass painlessly through suffering which in former times would have racked them with excruciating torture.

But to-day are the "wonders of modern surgery" any more marvelous than the "wonders of modern medicine?" Is the power of modern medicine to cure disease any more marvelous to-day than the power of modern bacteriological investigations to prevent disease? You see Christ stopping here and there to open a blinded eye or to unstop a deaf ear or to loosen the heavy and labored breathing of the asthmatic sufferer. But to-day the achievements of the healer include more than here and there an isolated physical cure. I see the lights in thousands of hospital windows gleaming like the stars in the heavens. I see the white-robed nurses and the doctors coming forth as did the angels of health who troubled the waters at the pool of Bethesda, crying to the sick everywhere, "Come and be cured of your ailments!" I see thousands and tens of thousands of strong men and women who would have died twenty years younger than they are now had they lived and been sick in the days when Christ lived and he had seen them not or touched them not. Christ as the physician of the body was a wonder worker. But man to-day as a curer of physical ailments is accomplishing far more than Christ ever did. Man is not only opening the eyes of those born blind, but he is making by the thousand and the tens of thousands the deaf and the dumb speak until this ancient miracle has ceased to be a wonder because of its commonness.

Now, study Christ from another standpoint. What did Jesus come down upon earth to do? He came to save the world? Oh, yes; he came to save the world by drawing men unto himself and banding them together as Christians. That means men were to become followers of himself. Yet, after he came to earth and was born in the manger and lived in Nazareth, he literally became the "despised and the rejected of men." After he had lived and suffered, preached and worked on and on until the day when he was crucified, the converts he had won were only a little handful of followers at the foot of his cross. If I should take you to a country pastor and say, "Rev. Mr. So-and-So, how large is your church?" he would say: "Oh, very small. We have only sixscore members all told. But we are part of the great Presbyterian church, with its hundreds of thousands and millions of members. Therefore we are proud to belong to the great body of this church militant." But Jesus when he died did not have any great church. He was only the humble Nazarene with one hundred and twenty disciples all told in Jerusalem. From a worldly standpoint Christ's life seemed to be an abject failure. Do you wonder that Christ said to his disciples in the words of my text, "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do." How has the promise been fulfilled in the great preachers and organizers of the Christian church? Inspired by his life and teaching, men have arisen whose achievements, as far as they can be measured by numbers, have surpassed a thousandfold those of their Divine Master.

Compare if you will the rapid advancement of Christianity during the century just passed with the seemingly paltry number of 120 whom Christ gathered about him in Jerusalem during his earthly ministry. In 1844 George Williams of London organized the first Y.M.C.A. association of the world. Forty-six years later, as a direct outgrowth of his work, there were 6,625 different Y. M.C.A. association societies with their enrollment of 650,000 members, with property worth over $26,000,000. In 1865 William Booth, a humble Methodist minister, stepped out of the church of his birth and in Nottingham, England, organized the Christian Mission, the outgrowth of which is the modern Salvation Army. In thirty-five years that army, as a direct result of William Booth's work, had its 11,000 officers stationed in all parts of the world, holding annually over 2,000,000 meetings and possessing its own printing presses, scattering forth 43,000,000 pamphlets and papers of gospel news and with an income of nearly $4,000,000 per year. In 1880 Francis E. Clark, a comparatively unknown minister, organized his young people into a band of Christian workers, called the Christian Endeavor society. He is called "Father" Clark now, not, however, because he is an old man, but because he was the father of a movement which in twenty years had a society with nearly 4,000,000 members. Consider the work of John Wesley. Compare the first band of 120 members with the conversions under the power of the Holy Ghost of Whitefield, Finney, Moody. These men led the people by the tens of thousands to kneel at the foot of the cross. Tell me, in reference to the criterion of number, has not man as a preacher and a Christian organizer done "greater things" than did Christ?

But, again, in this worldwide sweep of man's "greater works" we must see how man is everywhere overturning the heathen doctrine that "might makes right" rather than "right makes might." We must see man as the defender of the weak man, the hope of the helpless man, the friend of the bereft man and in one sense the rescuer of the lost. Christ comes as the friend of the friendless. But, oh, how friendless and helpless he himself became!

All India was yet to give up its widow burning and the tossing of its helpless girl infants into the Ganges to be eaten by crocodiles and the heathen worship of idols, but Christ was not, in body, able as a man to set foot on the soil of India. William Carey and Alexander Duff and Bishop Thoburn were to do that. Africa, with its murder and rapine and cannibalistic orgies, was to build its altars to the worship of the "true God," but Christ, as a physical man, was never to penetrate into those dark missionary fields. A Livingstone, a Taylor and a Hartzell were to do that. Europe at that time shaking under the tread of the Roman legions; North and South America utterly unknown to civilization; the islands of the sea, most of them unvisited—all are yet to bow to Christ and come under the reign of love and gentleness and purity and truth. These are to be won through the instrumentality of men. Men energized by the Holy Spirit are to gain the whole world for him. Truly, as we look at such a conquest and compare it with the work that he accomplished in Palestine we see what he meant when he said, "Greater things than these shall ye do." Christ saw all this future conquest of the world, but as a man he never went away from the Palestine hills. He grew up in Nazareth. He journeyed from Nazareth a few times to Jerusalem. There at the Davidic capital he was at last led as a guilty criminal out to the Calvary heights to ignominiously die. To his followers he left the stupendous task of evangelizing the world, promising that he would be with them to the end and that through his power they should be able to win more souls than he had done.

But though we have been praising man's "great work" we would have you bear well in mind this one tremendous fact. No work of man is truly greater than Christ's work, because all of man's greater works are the outcome of Jesus' work. If you read the verse in which my text is found you will find the whole trend of the thought in the one word "because." "He shall do greater works than these because I go to my Father." Because Christ is in God and God is in us is the reason man is able to accomplish greater works than did Christ.

Never be deluded by the idea that man in his own strength is able to do anything apart from God. Only as Christ's life in its influence touches our lives are we able to do the "greater works" which are given man to do.

"Oh, no," says some one, "that cannot be. Some of the greatest inventors, some of the greatest statesmen, some of the greatest of American men have been agnostics and did not believe in Christ at all. How, then could they get their power from God?" By the law of association. The influence of Christianity is an elevating, civilizing, inspiring power. Even those who are personally strangers to it are affected by the atmosphere it produces. Have you not noticed that nearly all inventions, nearly all true progress, nearly all the world's best blessings are found in Christian lands alone. God blesses the just and often the unjust in a Christian land, because Christ's work and sacrifice have been blessed in that land. Therefore, my brethren, the only way for man to achieve his greater works is by spreading abroad, as far as he can, the works of Jesus Christ, upon which all men's greater works are dependent. When Christ goes up, man goes up. When Christ goes down, man goes down.

To-day will you not feel that you can only accomplish the greater work Christ has given to you to do by living and working in Christ? When Marshal Bernadotte, who afterward became King Charles XIV. of Sweden, was a young man he was a revolutionist. At the beheading of King Louis XVI. of France, in order to show his hysterical joy, he had tattooed upon his arm this sentence, "Death to all kings and royal tyrants." Bernadotte afterwards was himself raised to a throne. He closely guarded that tattooing from the eyes of his people until he was dead. Oh, my friend, marked with the signs of infamy upon your heart, marked with the signs of rebellion against Christ, will you not change your belief, as Bernadotte did, to become an enthroned king? You bear on your soul the marks of sin, but if you will come to him he will take you into his employ and will send you forth to bless and help the world. As the apostle bore on his body the marks of the Lord Jesus, so you may wear the badge of his service and in his name and by his power carry on the work that he began. To you, too, the promise is given, "He that believeth on me the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works than these shall he do, because I go unto my Father."

RUSSIANS LOST OVER 1,000 IN KILLED AND WOUNDED.

Count Keller Driven Back on July 17, While on a Reconnaissance Expedition—Strength of the Enemy Was Too Great for Him to Continue the Fight—Japanese Losses Were Trifling—The Japs Pursued the Flying Russians.

St. Petersburg, July 19.—General Kuropatkin reports that Lieut.-Gen. Count Keller lost over 1,000 in killed or wounded in the attack on Motien Pass, July 17. On July 17, in order to determine the strength of the enemy, it was decided to advance against his position in the direction of Lianshankwan. Lieut.-Gen. Count Keller had been instructed not to start with the object of capturing the pass, but at act according to the strength of the force that he would find opposed to him.

At Point of Bayonet.

At 11 o'clock a battalion of Russians dislodged a Japanese outpost at the point of the bayonet at the crossing of the Lakho and the Sinkia roads. The details of this engagement have not yet been verified, but its general course, according to the telegraphic reports sent in by Gen. Keller, was as follows: "During the night the Japanese had evacuated Siakokao Pass and the heights surmounted by the temple leaving only outposts. At dawn Gen. Kashtalinsky's column occupied these passes, driving back the Japanese advance posts.

"At about 5.30 o'clock on the morning of July 17, the Japanese in considerable force, and with numerous guns, occupied Wafaktwan Passes and the mountainous bluffs to the south on the flank of Gen. Kashtalinsky's column. From this position and from the crest of the mountains to the east of heights surmounted by the temple the enemy directed a heavy artillery and rifle fire. General Kashtalinsky advanced to occupy the bluffs, sending forward at first one and then three battalions, but the attempt failed, notwithstanding the support given by the horse mountain battery, as our field guns could not be brought into action on account of the nature of the ground.

Strength of Enemy Great.

"At about 8 a. m., Gen. Keller, who was directing the fight, deemed it necessary to lend assistance to Gen. Kashtalinsky's column by bringing up from the general reserve three battalions to the heights, surmounted by the temple. In order to maintain the positions we had already occupied, it was necessary, owing to the enemy's pressure, to reinforce immediately with other reserves the troops in the fighting line, but these positions, owing to their situation, were untenable. Gen. Keller found the strength of the enemy so great, compared with ours, that he decided not to continue the fight and not to bring up either the special or the general reserves, especially in view of the fact that in case of his ultimately taking the offensive it would be necessary to attack without support of field artillery."

Our losses have not yet been exactly ascertained, but Gen. Keller reports that they exceed 1,000 The gallant 24th Regiment suffered most. Gen. Keller especially mentions the activity, courage and coolness shown by its commanding officers. Col. Koschitz was severely wounded in the leg, but remained in the ranks until the end of the action.

Jap Losses Trifling.

London, July 19.—The correspondent of The Times at Gen. Kuroki's headquarters, says the Japanese losses during the fighting at Motien Pass on July 17 were trifling.

Japs Pursued Russians.

Tokio, July 19.—Gen. Kuroki reports that two divisions of the Russian army made a desperate assault on Motien Pass at dawn July 17, but were repulsed. At three o'clock Sunday morning, a heavy fog veiling their movements, two divisions of Russians, commanded by Lieut.-Gen. Keller, made an assault on the Japanese positions at Motien Pass and in its vicinity desperately.

Gen. Kuroki adds, the Japanese resisted stubbornly, repulsed the Russins and pursued them for a considerable distance westward.

Battle Any Day.

London, July 19.—The morning papers have despatches from correspondents at General Kuroki's headquarters which bring the situation in the Far East up to July 15. All of the writers agree in saying that the situation is unchanged, that the armies are always in touch, and the Russians are being strongly reinforced and that a battle may be expected any day. Slight skirmishes are reported to have taken place on July 15.

To the Red Sea.

London, July 19.—The Daily Express this morning prints the following despatch, dated July 18, from its correspondent at Malta: "The British Mediterranean fleet left here to-day for Alexandria. It is believed that the destination of the fleet may be connected with the presence of Russian volunteer fleet steamers in the Red Sea. The British cruiser Terrible is said to have sailed from Suez to-day for the purpose of looking after the interests of British merchantmen."

Postponed Till Thursday.

London, July 19.—Earl Percy, under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, in the House of Commons yesterday asked Gen. Laurie (Conservative and Unionist) to postpone a question which he proposed to ask anent the doings of the Russian volunteer fleet steamer St. Petersburg in the Red Sea until Thursday.

Died From His Injuries.

Toronto, July 19.—Jospeh Hopkins of 99 Beverley street, the man who fell while mending the boiler in Batchard's box factory on Sunday, died yesterday morning at the General Hospital.

OTTAWA TO TAX BACHELORS.

They Get the Benefits of Civilization, But Do Not Pay.

Ottawa, July 19.—A proposition to have a tax imposed upon bachelors in Ottawa is to be laid before the City Council by Ald. Desjardins. He intends to have the finance committee consider the advisability of an application to the Legislature to secure authority for such action.

"There are some bachelors in Ottawa," Ald. Desjardins stated, "who own property and pay taxes, but there are a great number who do nothing of the sort. They use our streets and have the benefit of the whole corporation service without paying a cent toward the maintenance of the city. These, too, nearly all belong to a class who are well able to pay by reason of their holding positions which give good salaries. They should pay taxes as well as the rest of us.

"The special tax, moreover, may have the tendency of increasing the number of marriages. Old bachelors are far too numerous in Ottawa."

HOW LIES MAGNIFY.

The moment the Government dismissed Lord Dundonald, for telling the truth, from the position he held as Major-General Commanding the Militia force in Canada, the party press, at the instance of and on false information furnished by the Government, or its officials, began to draw a red herring across the track for the purpose of leading people from the true reasons for the party action of the Fisher type of politicians.

The attempt of the party to hide from the people the fact that Lord Dundonald was dismissed because he exposed the partisanship of the Ministers in the organization of a volunteer corps, by raising a cry that the Major-General was attempting to inaugurate and establish in Canada a system of militarism involving enormous expenditure, is too transparent to humbug or deceive any one. The fact is, Lord Dundonald has over and over again expressed views publicly that he was opposed to militarism as it exists in certain parts of Europe.

That made little difference. The clerical supporter and defender of the Government in all its transactions, through the leading editorial column of the Globe made the charge, and though called upon repeatedly to produce its proof, declines to do so, on the principle, no doubt, that "a lie well stuck to is as effective as the truth," knowing that scores will read the charge who will never see the denial.

> "It was quite apparent from a debate which took place in Parliament last year that several members of the Opposition had been favored with intimations of what the report contained.
>
> "From these sources it leaked out that Lord Dundonald advised an expenditure on armaments and armories that aggregated a sum which was variously estimated at from $35,000 to $40,000,000.
>
> "Great fortresses were to be built along our borders.
>
> "If His Lordship had had his way we may presume that the jingoes of the United States would have replied with fortresses five times as formidable, so that within five years the borders of these two peaceful nations of this western hemisphere would have resembled that between France and her neighbors in the time of Louis XIV."

The Mail and Empire has, day after day challenged the Globe to prove its charge, and give the date of the debate in which these alleged facts were brought to light. It has never replied. Why? Because no such debate ever took place. Such is the policy of the Globe and its echoists through the Dominion.

Deception and lying may succeed for a time, but ultimately truth will prevail.

A friend of ours went down one day to help to sail a yacht
He acted as the crew, you know, and did what he was taught
The sea was high (so was the wind) and the captain with a shout
Said "Stand by now to jibe, old man,
I'm going to go about."
"What's that?" said the crew,
"Pray what do you mean?" the boom came round with a run
It hit him in the chest, just over the vest, and his day's work was done.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN

(The Globe.)

"General Kuropatkin reports that Count Keller lost over 1000 in killed or wounded in the attack on Motien Pass on July 17th." In this laconic fashion St. Petersburg announces another disaster to the Russian arms. The Japanese themselves probably did not know how hard they struck the foe, for a cable from Kuroki's headquarters indicated a Russian loss of but two hundred in the assault on the Japanese troops in the passes. The heavy losses now admitted must have been inflicted during the pursuit, probably by artillery fire.

The engagement is the first really serious affair between the Japanese army of the Yalu and the Russians since the battle at the crossing of the river on the first of May. Kuroki's army advanced very slowly after that victory, feeling its way through the Manchurian mountains. A long halt was made at Fengwangcheng, but early in June the columns began to push into the passes with Liaoyang, the Russian headquarters on the railway, as the objective. There were immensely strong defensive positions en route, the finest of all being those of the Motien Pass, about 30 miles from Liaoyang. The Russians, outflanked by one of Kuroki's columns, and fearing that they would be cut off, retired from the passes almost without a blow, and have ever since been trying to regain the coveted positions. On July 4-5 there was a very sharp bayonet action under the same conditions of fog and darkness as the battle of Sunday, the Russians being driven back after three resolute assaults on the trenches. Sunday's engagement must have been on a large scale. Kuropatkin states that he was under the impression Kuroki had moved the bulk of his army farther south toward Siuyen, and to see in what force he held the Motien range, eighteen battalions — 18,000 men—were sent out, while reserves were kept on hand to help if required. The Russians apparently thought the Japanese held the Motien Pass proper with but a few men. They pressed into it, hid by a fog, at three o'clock on Sunday morning. The Japanese resisted in unexpected strength and their artillery, posted on the right of the Pass, poured a murderous fire upon the assailants, who eventually fled. The battle proves that Kuroki grips the passes with an iron hand, and that when the time comes he can rush his army down into the plains and cut the railway at Liaoyang.

A very ugly situation is developing in regard to the searching by Russian volunteer cruisers of British and German mail ships in the Red Sea. The seizure of mail bags en route to Japan and of ships carrying coal to Japanese ports is rousing intense resentment, and it is pointed out that the vessels making these seizures came through the Dardanelles as merchant ships. The probability is that Great Britain will insist on Turkey shutting the straits absolutely, under terms of the treaty of Paris, to any vessel that may be used by Russia for naval purposes. A special cable to The Globe indicates that British cruisers will hereafter see that justice is done to British ships on the high seas.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

THERE'LL BE NO SAW-OFFS.

Conservatives Thoroughly Preparing For Protest in September.

Toronto, July 19.—J. P. Whitney, K.C., is at the Queen's. Last night Mr. Whitney stated that there was nothing to any extent transpiring in local politics just at present.

Asked concerning the protests, he said that the Conservatives were carefully and thoroughly preparing their cases.

"Any possibility of some saw-offs?" he was asked.

"No," was the assuring reply, "there have been no proposals made to us nor would they be entertained if they were."

There are eight disputed constituencies, the Conservatives protesting in North Perth, North Grey, North York, North Norfolk and the Soo, while the Liberals would like to reopen North Renfrew, Muskoka and Centre Bruce. The trials are scheduled for September.

Railway Commission.

Ottawa, July 19.—The Railway commission held a brief sitting yesterday morning, and disposed of several minor applications.

Fell Off Train While Asleep.

Kingston, July 19.—The remains of a man were found Sunday on the G.T.R. track near Kingston Mills, but no identification was possible. They were those of a canvas man employed with Forepaugh & Sells' circus, its trains having gone east on that day. The body was not mutilated, and it would seem to have fallen off while asleep and been killed.

Florence Nightingale.

Miss Florence Nightingale, who recently celebrated the eighty-fourth anniversary of her birth, received many congratulatory telegrams and messages, and the number of callers at 10 South street, Park lane, London, was larger than usual. Miss Nightingale continues to enjoy fairly good health and to take active interest in works of charity. She is the daughter of the late Mr. W. E. Nightingale, a Hampshire gentleman. She had scarcely landed in the Crimea with her little band of nurses before hundreds of wounded men were brought in from the famous fight at Balaclava, and a little later thousands more from Inkerman. Nothing was ready, everything was to be done, and it was her task and her triumph to bring order out of a chaos of misery. At a dinner party soon after the return of the troops to England Lord Stratford suggested that everyone present should write on a piece of paper the name of the person whose Crimean reputation would endure longest. When the votes came to be examined it was found that not a single soldier had received a single vote. Every paper bore the same two words—Florence Nightingale.

"The Thread of the Season."

It was recently stated in Canadian Associated Press despatches that the Hon. Mrs. Alfred Lyttelton, the wife of the Colonial Secretary, has lately completed a drama which Mrs. Patrick Campbell will produce at the Camden Theatre on June 6. It appears that the piece at present bears no title, but it may be called "The Thread of the Season," an appropriate phrase, in that it aptly describes the story. It is a society play in three acts, and deals with one of the social problems, namely, the arduous task imposed on dressmakers' assistants during the season by fashionable dames. Mrs. Patrick Campbell will take the part of one of these humble workers, and she will wear the same dress throughout the performance. Among the other twenty-two speaking parts, however, there are numerous female characters who will wear dainty confections.

The Naming of Port Arthur.

Port Arthur was named after Lieutenant Commander Arthur of the British Navy, who anchored his ship in the bay one day about fifty years ago. He was the first foreign ship that had visited the bay.

FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE.

The noble woman of whom Longfellow wrote the lines that follow has just passed her eighty-fourth birthday, having outlived almost all her contemporaries. It is half a century since her work in the hospital of the Crimea made her famous throughout the English-speaking world.

Longfellow, in a note, says: At Pisa the Church of San Francisco contains a chapel dedicated lately to Santa Filomena; over the altar is a picture by Sabatelli, representing the saint as a beautiful nymph-like figure floating down from heaven, attended by two angels bearing the lily, palm and javelin, and beneath, in the foreground, the sick and maimed who are healed by her intercession.—Mrs. Jameson, Sacred and Legendary, lib. II., 298.

Whene'er a noble deed is wrought,
Whene'er is spoken a noble thought,
Our hearts in glad surprise
To higher levels rise.

The tidal waves of deeper souls
Into our inmost being rolls,
And lifts us unawares
Out of all meaner cares.

Honor to those whose words or deeds
Thus help us in our daily needs,
And by their overflow
Raise us from what is low!

Thus thought I as by night I read
Of the great army of the dead,
The trenches cold and damp,
The starved and frozen camp—

The wounded from the battle-plain
In dreary hospitals of pain,
The cheerless corridors,
The cold and stony floors.

Lo! in that house of misery
A lady with a lamp I see
Pass through the glimmering gloom,
And flit from room to room.

And slow, as in a dream of bliss,
The speechless sufferer turns to kiss
Her shadow as it falls
Upon the darkening walls.

As if a door in heaven should be Opened and then closed suddenly,
The vision came and went,
The light shone and was spent.

On England's annals, through the long
Hereafter of her speech and song,
That light its rays shall cast
From portals of the past.

A Lady with a Lamp shall stand
In the great history of the land,
A noble type of good
Heroic womanhood.

Not even shall be wanting here
The palm, the lily and the spear,
The symbols that of yore,
Saint Filomena bore.

—Longfellow.

RISE AND FALL OF CONSOLS.

Consols form a very accurate barometer of our national life, says The London Daily News. When trade is good, and the general outlook hopeful, the price rises; when the future seems unsettled, either commercially or politically, it falls.

At the moment of writing, owing to heavy municipal loans and a variety of other causes, the price of Consols is lower than it has been for thirty-eight years.

Like many other terms used on the Stock Exchange, where time and words are precious, "Consols" is a handy abbreviation. Just as the War Loan is known as "Khakis," and Central London Railway shares are called "Tubes," so "Consols" is a colloquialism for Consolidated Annuities—a fund which dates from 1751. By a statute passed in that year a variety of Government stocks were thrown into one fund, consisting to-day of £590,000,000, or nearly three-quarters of our entire national debt.

A large proportion of this vast amount is, however, "locked up"—that is to say, purchased and held as a permanent investment, bringing in a regular income, and only a comparatively small amount is usually available for negotiation. As in the case of other stocks, the price per £100 varies, according to supply and demand.

For the lowest price on record we have to go back to 1797, when the Spanish war sent it down to £47 10s. The other extreme was reached in 1896, when it rose to £113 17s. 6d.

The entire management of Consols, in common with the rest of the national debt, is vested in the Bank of England, which acts in this respect as the agent of the Government. The bank keeps all the accounts and pays the dividends; and it is a peculiarity of this fund that a seller must attend at the bank, either in person or by attorney, to sign the transfer book. The amount of work thus caused is amazing; but some idea of its vastness may be derived from the fact that many thousands of the quarterly dividends are for sums like 1s. or 1s. 6d. These, as well as the larger amounts, are paid by post in the form of money order or cheque, unless the proprietor of the stock gives notice that he intends to make personal application.

Many years ago Consols paid eight per cent. interest. This rate gradually decreased, and in 1888 Mr. Goschen reduced it to 2¾, and arranged for a further reduction to 2 1-3 in 1903. That is why Consols are sometimes facetiously called "Goschens."

Our Ancestors.

For the benefit of those who may feel "exclusive," or "stuck up," or who prate about blue blood, etc., it will be well to remember that if we go back but twenty generations, or 700 years, each one of us has 1,084,576 ancestors, and is related more or less closely to at least 270,000,000 of our fellows.

Going back but a couple of hundred years further, and tracing down our genealogy, we should find that we have more cousins than there are people in the world, and that on the basis of but two children per family. The discrepancy is accounted for by the fact that there have been so many cousins as there are people in the world to-day, but are related to a great number many times over.

The Earliest World's Fair.

In the centuries before the nineteenth the nearest approach to an international exhibition appears to have been the Frankfort fairs of the sixteenth century. Henry Estienne, the scholar, describes this institution as "the epitome of all the markets of the world." But it is from an event within the memory of many persons now living that the fairs at Philadelphia, Chicago, Buffalo and St. Louis trace their genealogy. The mother of all such displays was the exhibition held in a palace of glass in Hyde Park, London, in 1851. It owed its existence to the Prince Consort, and was enormously successful from every point of view.

The skipper of the tramp steamer Bumping Billy was engaging a new crew. "What's your name?" he said to the foremost applicant. "Giuseppe Grinolieri," replied the man. "Eyetalian?" "Yees, sair." "Very good. Step on one side. And yours?" he went on to the next A. B. "Ivan Ikanoff." "Russian?" "Bolish, sare." "Right. Step alongside o' Yewseppy. Next man?" "Wilhelm Zwillanguzi." "German?" "Ja." "Very good. Over you go. Next?" "Manoel Olliveria. I Portuguese seaman, senhor." "Step over, then, Manniwel. Next?" "John Thompson, sir." "What?" "John Thompson, sir." "What in th-thunder—what the — what nationality?" screamed the horrified shipmaster. "English, sir," replied the man. For a full half minute the unhappy skipper stood speechless, his countenance turning from purple to orange and from orange to gray, and then, with a gurgling gasp of "English, by gum!" he tottered, staggered and fell prone upon the ground.—Liverpool Daily Post.

THE STEWARTS.

A correspondent asks us if there are any descendants now living of "Bonnie Prince Charlie," and as to the later history of the Stewart family. The woods are full of descendants of the Stewarts, and the Princes and Princesses of the House of Modena have for a century almost been acknowledged by Jacobites as the legitimate Sovereigns of Great Britain, the present Duchess being Mary Fifth, but there are none in direct line from Prince Charles Edward. His brother, the Cardinal, was the last of the elder Pretender's children. Prince Charlie was the elder of the two sons, and there were but the two children. After the crushing defeat by the Duke of Cumberland at Culloden on the 16th April, 1746, the Prince hid for five months in the Hebrides and on the western mainland, with a bounty of £30,000 set on his head, and shipped on the 20th September from Moidart to Brittany. The peace of Aix-la-Chapelle caused his forcible expulsion from France, and thereafter he lived at Liege, Basle, Florence and Rome. He was for a time living incognito in Paris and Avignon, and he is said to have paid two or three secret visits to London between 1750 and 1760. In 1766 he succeeded to his father's empty titles, in 1722 he married the ill-fated Countess of Albany, and on January 31st, 1788, he died at Rome. By his Scottish mistress, Clementina Walkenshaw, he left a daughter, Carolina, whom he had created Duchess of Albany. She died in 1789 without issue. The remains of the Prince were buried first at Frascati, but later were translated to St. Peter's.

His brother, Henry, Duke of York, born at Rome in 1725, after the failure of the '45 took orders, and, in 1747 received a Cardinal's hat. He was subsequently made Bishop of Frascati. He enjoyed, through the favor of the French Court, the revenues of two rich abbeys, as well as a Spanish pension. The French revolution stripped him of his fortune, and he had to take refuge in Venice for three years. In 1800 George III. granted him a pension of £4,000. He died, the last of the Stewarts, July 13, 1807. The Crown jewels carried off by James II. were bequeathed by the Cardinal to George IV., then Prince of Wales, who in 1819 caused Canova to erect a monument in St. Peter's that bears the names of "James III., Charles III., and Henry IX."

Outdoors With Ruskin.

Ruskin was a good walker, but no athlete. He and Mr. Allen were out one day upon the mountainside. They passed a group of men engaged in rough work with pickaxes. "How I Wish," said Ruskin, "I could do what those men are doing! I was never allowed to do any work which would have strengthened my back. I wasn't allowed to ride, for fear of being thrown off; nor to box, because it was vulgar; I was allowed to fence, because it was genteel." But Mr. Allen cannot remember ever seeing Ruskin with the foils. Sometimes when he was living with his parents at Denmark Hill he would enjoy a surreptitious row on the river. "I used to be told," says Mr. Allen, "not to let his parents know where he was gone." Ruskin at this time was in the forties.

What a companion must Ruskin have been on mountain walks around Bonneville and Chamonix! Mr. Allen looks back, as one can well understand, to those days among the Alps as the most stimulating and interesting of his life. "Ruskin's great works," he says, "was to teach people to see. He had an eye for everything—clouds and stones, hills and flowers, all interested him in the same intense way. And what he saw and felt he communicated in inimitable and inevitable eloquence to others. I seem to hear him now breaking forth into a rhapsody of delight as we came unexpectedly, on a walk up the Brezon, upon a sloping bank of the star gentian. He was full, too, of sympathy with the life of the people. I can see him now kneeling down, as he knelt on Easter Sunday, 1863, and praying with a peasant woman at a wayside chapel. 'When I first reach the Alps,' he said to me once, 'I always pray.' Mr. Ruskin's printed passages of adoration in presence of the sublimity of Nature were the expression of his inmost feelings and in accord with his own practice."—E. T. Cook, in The Strand Magazine.

Sure to Make Hens Lay.

John Kernell, the Irish comedian, who died recently, used to like to tell of a brief experience in amateur farming that he had in his youth.

"One summer," he would say, "I lived in the country, and as there was a garden to my cottage I decided that I would keep chickens. I bought a cock and half a dozen hens, but I got no eggs. The chickens were vigorous and healthy, but my omelets each morning came from the village store.

"To remedy this state of affairs I answered an advertisement in an agricultural magazine. This advertisement said that for $2 an infallible way to make hens lay would be communicated. I forwarded the $2, and in due course I received the advertiser's reply. It was a printed slip that read:

" 'To make a hen lay tie a stout string around the hen's body, lay the bird on her side on a board and fasten the string underneath. If it is thought desirable, a pillow may be placed under the hen's head.' "

Full of Good-Will.

So many letters were dropped into a London pillar post-box on the Sunday before Christmas last year that by night-fall the box was full, and a resident writes that when he went to post a letter he could have taken out a handful without difficulty. In order to safeguard the letters he fetched a policeman, who undertook to guard the box until the next collection.

STANLEY'S GARDEN MODEL.

Reminder of the Toilsome African Journey in Search of Livingstone—Spent Much of His Time on the Toy.

The countryside is radiant with furze bloom all about the little village of Pirbright, and near here, on a slope of pleasant country, is Furze Hill, the country seat of the late Sir H. M. Stanley.

The great explorer chose well his retreat during the last year of his active and adventurous life. The house is a fine mansion of brick, stone faced, of a fashion something Elizabethan, and about it are spacious green lands. By contrast with the aching sunlight and the blighting heat of Africa, it is paradise in a ring-fence. But the man who discovered Victoria Nyanza and spoored the Congo to its source, could not forget the wilds that gave him fame.

So, in the garden-reaches below the house he had the ground laid out to keep Africa in mind. Mr. Muirhead, the steward of the estate, carried out the work, following the map to which Sir Henry added such substantial areas, and now a miniature Congo drowses in a bed of cement through English underwoods and a winding path between hawthorn and dog-rose leads one to a summer-house on the topmost crest of the Mountain of the Moon.

What this dwarf Congo lacks in breadth it makes up in depth. In the middle of its widest part—where the mighty river is a dozen yards from shore to shore—it is 12 feet deep. There has been no slavish adherence to geographical detail in the design; that was impossible from the first, through the nature of the ground and the size of the original; and the Congo of Pirbright runs around half an acre of island, which the spring has turned into a thicket of young green.

At one place, the Congo turns into the Zambesi, and its waters thunder over a five-foot concrete fall in imitation of the Victoria Falls. When Sir Henry was in residence, there were canoes and a punt on this water, and the youngest members of the family took their turn at solving the riddle of the Congo and cutting their way to the roof of the world on the Mountains of the Moon.

Higher up in the grounds in Victoria Nyanza, a fine sheet of water, from whence issues, as is due and proper, the River Nile. A bridge spans the lake, and there are boats on it, and in this model the Congo itself draws its water from Victoria Nyanza. The whole scheme cost a very large sum, and was an idea in which Stanley himself took the greatest interest.

He spent many an afternoon, alone or in company with his wife, in the summer-house on the Mountains of the Moon. From there the whole of the elaborate and costly toy can be seen, and it is curious and not a little pathetic to think that the man who bored a road through the bleak hostility and imminent dangers of an unknown country should derive pleasure by means of channels and islands in an English garden, Congo, Nile, and Zambesi! There were names that had the force of technicalities for him—they were a part of his trade—and when he had used them, he made them in miniature to keep by him, as an old sea captain keeps a glass-cased model of his ship.

It was essentially his alone. If you ask a villager of the matter you get a blank stare. "Congo? I don't know nothing about no Congo," is your answer. "It cost a heap of money," is the first comment of the men on the estate, and it is only those who had a hand in making it who know which is Congo and which is Nile. It has taught no geography and aroused no local interest. It was Stanley's toy, his momento of days when he carried lives in his hands and pushed the borders of civilization further and further apart

Twenty Odd Fishes.

The Fishmongers' Livery Company of London owns a remarkable painting by Spiridion Roma, which contains portraits of twenty wholesome sea and river fishes, most of which are almost unknown by the general public—viz., weaver, dubs, green, grailing or humber, colefish, willis, smeardabs, ruff, carp, homelings, lumps, allis, coney fish, bass, popes, [illegible], pouting, grigs, shad and bleaks.

"HELPLESS WITH RHEUMATISM"

Mr. S. Barker, of 9 Suffolk Place, Toronto, writes:—"It is only fair to my suffering neighbors to publicly express my great gratitude for the almost miraculous cure from Rheumatism effected in me by the use of South American Rheumatic Cure. For three months I was next door to helplessness, and my sufferings were intense, but two bottles of this great remedy cured me. It relieves in six hours. 18

TIMELY TOPICS.

Mr. Porter was informed a short time ago by Sir William Mulock that the postmaster at Maynooth, Hastings County, had been dismissed on account of the unsatisfactory manner in which the office had been managed. The dismissal had been the result of an investigation, and Mr. James Harriot had been appointed in the postmaster's place. Would it not be well to learn what the "mismanagement" of the office was? Move for the report, Mr. Porter. The true reason for the dismissal will be found in the fact that the postmaster is a Conservative, and that a place was wanted for a turncoat.

General Hutton, who is now in Australia, declares "that Imperial officers are essential, the Australians being unable to enforce discipline because of local political pressure." It is well for Gen. Hutton that he is not in Canada, or the Fisher element in the Cabinet would have him dismissed.

"All patronage should go to the friends of the party.

"The Liberal partisan must receive the favors and patronage of the Liberal Government. The Government will be even excused for straining a point in favor of a friend.

"Every new appointment, every power of patronage belongs by right of system and precedent to the members of the Liberal party.

"In the initial appointment or in the awarding of a Government contract it is expected that the party in power shall be loyal to its friends."

If this principle be acted upon when a change takes place, how they will howl!

AMMUNITION FOR CANADA.

Ottawa, July 19.—Sir Frederick Borden has about concluded a contract with the Armstrong-Whitworth firm in England to erect in Ottawa an ammunition factory, which will be capable of turning out 10,000,000 rounds of ammunition per year. Working night and day the factory will be capable of turning out 20,000,000 rounds. It is understood that the company also agrees to erect factories of small capacity in Manitoba and British Columbia whenever required to do so by the Canadian authorities.

Western Canada Crops.

Winnipeg, July 19.—Within the last five days crop conditions throughout the entire Canadian West have shown marked improvement. Up to that time parts of districts of Saskatchewan, Alberta, Assiniboia and Western Manitoba were beginning to suffer for want of rain, and the crop was at a standstill. Within the past forty-eight hours abundant rains have fallen all over these districts and the drouth is relieved before any damage had been done. The weather is now most favorable, warm enough for good progress and not too hot. Straw is strong and vigorous, but not too lush to prevent early ripening. All grain is well headed out, except in small areas where sown late, and even there the heads are formed, though not so far advanced.

After Lovers' Quarrel.

Berlin, July 19.—A young woman, Lucena Melitzer, aged about 23, committed suicide here Sunday night by taking Paris green. It would appear that she was in company of her young man about 10 o'clock Sunday night at the home of her sisters, Frederick street, and it is thought that she had a quarrel with her lover, as immediately after he left her she went to her room and took Paris green, lingering in dreadful agony till about 5 o'clock yesterday morning, when she died.

MR. JUSTICE FINNEMORE

TO CUTICURA

The World Is Cuticura's Field, Used Wherever Civilization Has Penetrated.

"I desire to give my voluntary testimony to the beneficial effects of your Cuticura Remedies. I have suffered for some time from an excess of uric acid in the blood; and since the middle of last year, from a severe attack of Eczema, chiefly on the scalp, face, ears and neck and on one limb. I was for several months under professional treatments, but the remedies prescribed were of no avail, and I was gradually becoming worse, my face was dreadfully disfigured and I lost nearly all my hair. At last, my wife prevailed upon me to try the Cuticura Remedies and I gave them a thorough trial with the most satisfactory results. The disease soon began to disappear and my hair commenced to grow again. A fresh growth of hair is covering my head, and my limb (although not yet quite cured) is gradually improving. My wife thinks so highly of your remedies that she has been purchasing them in order to make presents to other persons suffering from similar complaints, and, as President of the Bible Women's Society, has told the Bible women to report if any case should come under their notice when a poor person is so afflicted, so that your remedies may be resorted to."

IN FASHION'S REALM.

Straw Toques Are Much Worn—Embroidery Is Smarter Than Lace.

Straw toques are to be worn a great deal this summer, as much so in fact as the larger shapes. These little toques are usually made of some bright colored material, satin straw or flowers, and if of straw they are simply decorated with straw rosettes or soft satin bows and quills.

Bands of embroidery are being used more than those of plain lace. This embroidery is rarely openwork, except in the case of English embroidery or the Tenerife drawn work. The preference is for raised embroidery.

GREEN STRAW TOQUE.

Both on blouses and skirts cording is much used. Checks of every description are very smart. Even on veiling these checks appear in dull rubbed in effect, and they give a changeable effect when combined with a bright lining.

Some of the most effective picture hats are made of black guipure edged with velours and trimmed with one long plume brought around the brim and falling down upon the shoulders.

A magnificent evening toilet may be fashioned of cream chiffon gauze over rich sulphur colored silk. The corsage should be trimmed with spiderweb lace medallions, from which falls a white silk fringe, the sleeves terminating in a deep fall of accordion plaited chiffon, relieved by shirred chiffon and lace medallions. Effective touches of gold cord may be introduced into this costume.

The picture shows a toque of green straw trimmed with a rosette of soft silk and two quills.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

WHAT IS WORN.

Sleeves Are Very Wide and Much Filled In With Lace.

Sleeves are still very wide, and the fullness either hangs bell shaped or it is plaited into a loose cuff, which is filled in with lace. The newest sleeve frills are of plaited lawn edged with color embroidery or yellow lace valenciennes. Some of the new sleeves are decorated with from three to five frills of lace, which reach almost from the elbow down.

TAILOR MADE GOWN.

The heavy coats now worn by motorists are giving way to coats of shantung of pale colored mohair and silky alpaca. These are made long enough to cover the entire costume, with becoming bertha and collar arrangements and very wide sleeves, having lace and plaited frills put into the new loose cuff.

Lace veils lined throughout with tulle are fastened on draped toques of tussore silk or satin straw. Some of these ecru shapes are very becoming when relieved by touches of red or bright blue.

The bolero is still the most popular coat. It is deservedly so, as it is almost universally flattering to the figure, much more so, in fact, than the braided military coat which dressmakers tried to introduce in the spring.

The model shows a tailor made suit of green silk trimmed with strappings of white silk. It has the long shouldered effect, which is so smart at present.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 66 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

Her Prince of Dreams

By IZOLA L. FORRESTER

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

"Of course you are his friend."

"It makes no difference."

"No," she assented doubtfully; "only in the point of view. It would create a certain prejudice, the friendliness. I mean in his favor, and you don't know Marjorie as I do."

Stephen glanced down the long, candle shaded dinner table to where Marjorie sat. A group of yellow chrysanthemums mingled their gold with the tint of her hair, and her face was half hidden by them. Only a slightly tilted chin was visible. It was a delicious chin, piquant and interrogative, and he knew that she was talking to Haworth.

"Do you think she is serious?" he asked.

"Oh, not yet. But she drifts with him, and that is one of his most attractive qualities, drifting. You drift and drift and think you are steering, and all at once"—

She hesitated frowningly.

"Overboard?" suggested Stephen.

"Yes, when you never dreamed of being in love. He seems so harmless, so colorless. You know what I mean. Most men have to be amused. You feel on guard with them. But Haworth is restful. Before you know it you are perfectly natural with him, and you talk and drift and talk, and all he says is yes, yes, and all he does is look at you, not as if you were just a rather good looking girl, but as if you were really a thinking, reasoning individual. And Marjorie will like that. And then some day she'll look in his eyes and wakep and lose self in love."

"Cribbed," said Stephen softly. "Awfully pretty, Con, but it's an echo from a greater even than thou. Have some of the salmon a la heaven knows what. It's coming our way. Don't you remember:

> "Love took up the harp of life and smote > upon the chords with might,
> Smote upon the chord of self, that, trembling, passed in music out of sight.

"Marjorie 'd look sweet doing the harp act, wouldn't she?"

Constance let the salmon pass and smiled contentedly at the plain, youthful face beside her. Even the eyeglasses, perched airily on a nondescript nose, could add neither age nor wisdom to it.

STEPHEN GLANCED AT THE TWO BEYOND THE CHRYSANTHEMUMS.

"Stephen, you are a dear," she said. "You are a blessed relief to a threatened possibility of sentiment. After Marjorie's married to Haworth I think I shall adopt you."

"As a relief to a threatened possibility, etc.?"

"No. The possibility only threatened. It never came true, and, besides, I am three years older than Marjorie. Would you think I was twenty-six, Steve?"

"Thirty-nine," he said pleasantly. "How long were you engaged to him?"

"Two weeks and a half."

"Last October?"

She nodded her head.

"It's a bad time of the year for engagements. Dead leaves and general dampness and all that. I always choose early summer. It don't hang on the nerves so. Try June next time, Con."

She turned to him with sudden impatience.

"It isn't that I don't want to see Marjorie happy or that I care about last October. I am afraid she will waken as I did. He is so perfectly colorless in temperament that it is simply infuriating. A girl doesn't seek a new engagement every summer, Steve. I never was engaged before, and, don't you know, when you've been looking forward to something ever since you could chase butterflies, to falling in love with the one man who was to be your prince of dreams, and all at once you think you've found him, and you love him and promise to be his wife, and nothing happens at all, why, you feel like the boy who spent all his Fourth of July money for one skyrocket, and then it wouldn't go off."

"Better said boy than the boy who shoots the merry rocket and then gets unmercifully batted with the fallen stick," said Stephen gently and philosophically.

"Haworth was just the same. He never seemed to understand how wonderful it all was to me or how a girl wants it to be wonderful. We were good, stanch friends and comrades, and he cared for me, I know he did, last October, but there was the rose mist missing. He wasn't my prince of dreams. He was just himself. One likes the rose mists of life, you know, even if one knows they are all illusion. They give a glory to the path behind and the hills ahead."

"But they aren't worth a cent close around," said Stephen. "Rose mists aren't worth a rap floating around oneself when one is busy flying today. Seems to me I wouldn't want any illusions around the one I loved best either. And I don't think Marjorie would. Haworth's a splendid old chap. We've been friends for over ten years. He's given me many a hand grip over tough places in the first days when I was only a fresh kid fighting for a place in the crowd, and he's always the same. It may be monotonous, but it's mighty comforting. Perhaps after ten years even you might be glad to find a man unchanged."

"Perhaps." She smiled bitterly, but bravely still.

He looked into her eyes interestedly. "Honest, don't you care, Con?"

She hesitated.

"Not as long as it is Marjorie, and she will be happy." Her voice was low. "Of course one may still remember the prince of dreams when the dreams never came true."

Stephen glanced at the two beyond the yellow chrysanthemums. Haworth was looking at Constance, and Marjorie's quick smile flashed on him for an instant. He bent toward Constance again and spoke slowly.

"Haworth was up to my place last night, and we talked sense. No rose mists or dreams, just plain sense. And I told him that I was going to marry the dearest girl in the world if she'd have me."

"Stephen!" Her face was radiant, her tone tender and maternal in its quick sympathy. "I'm so glad for you."

"If she'd have me," repeated Stephen modestly. "And Haworth opened up and told me a few things about a certain dearest girl whom he had wanted to marry, but she wouldn't have him. He wasn't bitter, you understand, or wearing crape for any dead hopes. He just told me. He doesn't quite understand why she gave him up, but he believes she loved him and that some day the world will seem lonesome and strange to her, and the rose mists she cared for will have faded. Then he thinks she may be glad to find him unchanged.

"Stephen!" She turned her head and met Haworth's gaze. His eyes were restful and steady, as she had loved best to remember them.

"And I told him," continued Stephen mildly, "not to wait for the lonesome time, to take the day he was sure of. And he said he thought he'd try tonight."

"But Marjorie!"

Her face flushed and her lips half parted. She was still looking beyond the yellow chrysanthemums.

Stephen smiled across the table.

"The dearest girl in the world said yes just half an hour ago," he said.

Inventors, Attention!

"How rich I'd be," said an umbrella salesman, "if I had patented the umbrella!"

The floorwalker smiled.

"You might as well talk," said he, "of a patent on swimming or cooking. Umbrellas appear to have existed always. Wherever we excavate—Babylon, Nineveh, Nippur—traces of the umbrella are found. This instrument is coequal with mankind.

"It is of oriental origin. The English didn't begin to use it till 1700. Shakespeare, with all his genius, had no umbrella to protect him from the rain. Jonas Hanway was the first English umbrella maker.

"Now, what you might do would be to patent some new sort of umbrella—some rain shield built on better lines. We have proof that the umbrella has existed for 10,000 years, and yet in all that time it has not once been improved. Consider it. It is by no means perfect. It turns inside out readily, and it only protects the head and shoulders from the rain. Change all that. Give us an umbrella that is a complete rain shield. Then you will become a millionaire."—Chicago Tribune.

To New York For Rest.

Isn't it strange that people should go to New York to rest up? You know what Broadway and Fifth avenue are from Thirtieth to Thirty-fifth street—the densest, noisiest place in the world. Yet I know a prominent Pittsburg man who, when he gets tired, slams down his roll top desk, seizes his case and takes the train east. In New York he patronizes a well known hotel much favored by Pittsburgers, asks for a room on the twelfth floor, and if he gets it or one on the floor either above or below he is happy. Twelve floors up he is removed from the noise of the busy pavement below. So far as quietude is concerned he might as well be in a country village. In the morning the bright sunshine steals in at his window, which overlooks the river and the docks below. At night the view is one of enchantment, watching the vessels moving to and fro, with their myriad of lights. And although there is gayety below in a dozen corners of that selfsame hotel no sound of it ever penetrates to his quarters. But this is only one of the many possibilities of a very wonderful town.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Might Have Retorted.

Art, a Dog, and A Husband

By SARAH COMSTOCK

Copyright, 1903, by Sarah Comstock

Instead of rapping, the landlady grasped the knob with her bony, determined hand and rattled it roughly.

"Yes, Mrs. Siefke. Come in."

Mrs. Siefke did not come in, though. She crashed open the door, wounding its varnish on Lois' trunk.

"Packed?" she inquired.

"No, no, I haven't packed," the girl replied nervously, while the fox terrier grumbled. "I can make it all right by this evening. I'm sure I can, Mrs. Siefke."

"You've thought that for a lot o' evenin's. What you lookin' for now?"

"These are the best I've done," she said. "I'm going downtown with them now."

The landlady, her bony hands firmly clasping her hips, said "Humph!" Then she added:

"Tonight's your last chance. Settle or leave." She trod away down the hall, walking heavily on her heels as always.

Lois choked a little. But when she turned back to the cot her pride pricked up.

"Aren't they beautiful, Holy Terror?" she said. "Mrs. Siefke doesn't know anything about art."

The terrier jumped upon the cot and burst into a spasm of glowing barks over them. His ears were up and his stub of a tail quivered.

They were all the work of her hands, and Terror sniffed them lovingly, tracing her in every one. They were the high water mark of her artistic ambition—couch cushions and opera bags and book covers and photograph frames, all of leather, wrought in elaborate designs by burning. On the book covers were outlined willowy ladies, who appeared to be absorbed in their reading. The photograph frames and the opera bags were etched in wreaths and scrolls. One of the cushions was of brilliant green leather, and in its center, in deep black burning and vivid water color, was a life sized portrait of Holy Terror. This was her masterpiece.

SHE SANK IN A HEAP OUTSIDE THE DOOR.

"We can't fail to make money from these, can we, Terror?" she said. "We've worked so hard over them."

It was true that they had worked together. Ever since she had set out to make pyrography her life work Terror had helped her. All the preparations were watched critically by him, and as soon as the hot point began to move over the stamped design his labor commenced. Every line and curve and dot of the etching he followed with his busy strawberry nose, the same nose that had frightened away the bench show prize.

"I like strawberry noses much better than black, Terror," Lois told him when she took him home dejected. It was the only time in his life that he had ever placed his stub of a tail at half mast; he knew bitterly well that he had failed.

When the portrait, the masterpiece, was being etched, he had spent days of exultation.

"Do you think it's like you, Terror?"

At moments she feared it was only the green leather that pleased him so mightily, for green was his favorite color. But it must be that he knew, she reassured herself. At any rate his nose followed the hot point like a sleuth's and whenever the point stopped he would raise his head and bark "Hurrah!" in two sharp yaps.

When the etching of Holy Terror's outline was done, Lois painted in his spots of black and white, and with a dual tender and brilliant carmine touch she colored the strawberry nose.

"Take a last look at your portrait," she said to him now.

She laid the articles in a neat box and wrapped and tied it. Then she dressed for the street. It was close quarters for dressing in the hall bedroom with the cot, the chair, the washstand, the trunk and the chiffonier, that skyscraper of dressing tables that serves in the lack of ground space.

"If I bring back a great deal of money, Terror, perhaps we can throw this away and have a new stole that won't get on your nerves."

With the box under her arm she told him goodby. She hated to leave him. As a rule, they were inseparable, but she had met with those who did not understand him in some of the shops, and she explained to him that it was best he should wait at home for her.

The walk downtown was miserable without him. She longed to feel the tug of his buoyant strength as he dragged her at the end of his chain. She longed to watch his pointed muzzle prying out the way ahead of her and returning with noisy reports. She longed for his infectious cheer that had tided over many a dark hour in the hall bedroom.

On the avenue she came to the shops where pictures are sold. These she canvassed, as she often had done before, feeling that pyrography had its place among works of art. Then there were shops that had departments of fancy goods. She made the rounds.

It was dark when she turned the latchkey. She knew that the dinner would be cold and that the waiter would frown, and she did not care for dinner anyway. She started upstairs.

Mrs. Siefke met her at the first landing.

"Well, got it?" she asked.

"Humph!" said Mrs. Siefke. "I knew you wouldn't. There's no use goin' up. Your room's locked and your goods are attached."

"Oh! Holy Terror!" the girl cried, and ran up the stairs. She seized the knob and shook the door. The barking came from within.

"Terror! Let him out, Mrs. Siefke," she called.

"No! Not Terror! Mrs. Siefke, you can't—oh, take everything else"—

She heard the landlady walking off heavily. "Terror!" she cried passionately, and sank in a little heap outside the door, while he leaped madly against the inside, scratching and yelping and rattling the latch in vain.

When Burr met her at the door he wondered at her being alone.

"It's disobliging of you to be going out just as I'm coming to see you," he said blithely. "And where's Holy Terror? Has he thrown you over?"

"No. He's upstairs," she stammered. "I've got to go—I'm so sorry, but it's urgent business."

He looked at her keenly, then he turned and walked beside her, with his great, sure strides.

"It was a somewhat random shot, but I think it has hit the mark," he said to himself later, after he had delivered her at his aunt's house. Then he set out to call on Mrs. Siefke.

They returned together, Burr and Holy Terror. Lois was down in the kitchen. Terror rushed into her arms like a miniature hurricane, and their emotions merged in a hysteria of sobs and barks.

Burr stood above them and watched. "It's odd," he remarked, "how a life of art bars out a husband, but does not in the least interfere with a fox terrier."

Shellfish as Traps.

The familiar story of a mouse being trapped by a live oyster, though curious, is not the only instance of the kind. The great naturalist Frank Buckland records the story of a rat which was caught by the same apparently harmless shellfish. Some years ago a common rail was found dead on the shores near Penzance. Its beak was tightly caught in the clutches of an oyster, which was still alive. The bird and oyster were removed and mounted. An even more queer case was that of a small salt water fish which was found in a pool in the rocks caught firmly by an immense mussel. One would think that the mussel must have been pretty sharp in closing his shell. A story is told of a colored man who was caught in a similar fashion. He put his tongue into a half opened oyster to get the juice, and the oyster caught him tight by the tongue. Jupiter when released was chaffed by his friends. "Why, the oyster couldn't have hurt you," said one, "for he hasn't any teeth." "No," replied Jupiter; "mebbe not, but de Lawd knows dat he have turrible hard gums!"

Brave Japanese Fishermen.

The Japanese as a race are fearless. This is evidenced by the hazardous occupation of the little brown men who earn a living far from the rocky coast lines of the island. One of the chief articles of diet in Japan is fish. To secure it for the market the Japanese go many miles from land in their tiny craft, which to those who do not understand their strength and buoyancy look as though any ordinary wave would capsize them. These Japanese go 200 and 300 miles at sea to catch fish. Each year the shores of the islands are strewn with wreckage from the boats, while the sea gives up the bodies of the brave men who were caught in the fearful typhoons which sweep around this corner of the earth. Then, again, the ocean liners take the lives of many of these doughty Japanese. There is never a diminution in the numbers of the fleet.

Summer Clearing Sale of Odds & Ends In China

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly—in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

After The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices. Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen, for we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

The Peacock at the Feast.

Brehm informs us that the flesh of the young peacock is very delicate and has "a wild odor" which is very agreeable. He thinks an old bird fit only for stewing. The Greeks must have found it marvelous costly feeding if it be true, as Aelian says, that a single bird was worth a thousand drachmas—nearly £60. The esteem in which it was held in the last days of the Roman republic did not diminish under the imperial regime.

Vitellius and Heliogabalus served up to their boon companions enormous dishes of peacocks' tongues and brains seasoned with the rarest Indian spices. In mediaeval days it was still held in favor, particularly as a Christmas dish, and minstrels sang of it as "food for lovers and meat for lords."

To fit it for the table was no ordinary culinary operation. After the skin and plumage had been carefully stripped off the bird was roasted, then served up again in its feathers with gilded beak. No, I have forgotten that it was first stuffed with spices and sweet herbs and basted with yolk of egg. It floated in a sea of gravy, as many as three fat wethers sometimes supplying the unctuous liquor for a single peacock.—All the Year Round.

Covernor by Proxy

By JOHN TAYLOR WALDORF

Copyright, 1903, by T. C. McClure

On the station platform at desolate Xerxes Junction stood two impatient men. The big, lumbering, round faced man was Colonel Joe Layson; the thin, sallow one was Henry Clay Finley. It was campaign time, and the twain were "swinging around the circle," Colonel Layson as the candidate of the "outs" for governor and Finley as the spellbinder paid to extol the merits of his party's standard bearer.

The afternoon train that was to stop at Xerxes Junction and take on passengers for Ardenia was late, and the rough old colonel began to swear as he studied his watch.

"It'll be here in a minute, governor," said Finley soothingly, carefully observing the custom of addressing candidates by the title to which they aspire.

A scrawny, bent over old woman, carrying an apronful of wood, came out of the clump of trees across the railroad track and limped along until she reached the platform, where she stopped and looked up into the colonel's face with vacant eyed curiosity. Finley was shocked.

"BE YOU GUVNER?" SHE ASKED.

"Such beastly manners!" he exclaimed. "Shall I order her to be off, governor?"

"Be you the guvner?" she asked.

"Won't you pardon my boy? He's servin' five years in Osborn prison. The old man's been sick abed for months, and I ain't able to work, and we're nearly starvin'. Pardon the boy, won't you, guvner? I wanted to go down to the capital a year ago when they took Dannie away, but I had no money, and I couldn't walk that far."

The colonel raised his finger and semed about to explain, but the woman talked on piteously.

"They say he stole a cow for Halder, the cattle king that lives down at Belden. Maybe you know him. I don't believe Dannie did any stealin', but if he did, guvner, it wouldn't be right rushin' him off to prison and leavin' old Halder free and still hirin' honest folks' boys to steal cattle for him."

"It doesn't seem right, for a fact," admitted the colonel.

"But, my good woman," interrupted Finley, "there was certainly no evidence against Mr. Halder, or surely the majesty of the law would have been sustained, and he, too, would have suffered the punishment of the transgressor."

"I don't catch all your fine words, mister, but I know Dan's in prison, and Halder is guilty. Fine words can't get round them facts."

"Well put," chuckled the colonel. "Finley, it would be a good scheme if you'd talk English once in awhile."

The woman looked puzzled a moment, but the colonel's face was kindly, and, throwing down her bundle of wood, she dropped on her knees before him.

"Please pardon my boy, guvner! The old man and me'll die before spring if you don't. It won't hurt you to pardon him. He ain't no dangerous crim'nal. Anybody round here'll tell you Dannie Higgs was never before the judge till this time. He's all the child I got left, guvner. Don't keep him from me!"

The colonel helped Mrs. Higgs to her feet and led her to a bench just outside the door of the little telegraph office. All the while he was thinking deeply. He was the candidate of the "outs" for governor. The "ins" had a natural majority of 50,000 votes. Governor John Randall, with a good official record to back him, was up for reelection, and Colonel Joe Layson had as much chance of becoming governor as he had of gaining the throne of Turkey. He resolved the situation in his mind, and as he found his inspiration Mrs. Higgs started to rise, but he waved her back, saying: "Just wait there, madam, until I send a message and get an answer. I'm going to investigate this matter at once."

Findley whistled, but the colonel only frowned and stalked into the telegraph office. For perhaps two minutes he wrote steadily. When he had finished he hurriedly gathered up the satisfactory sheets and slammed them down on the operator's table.

The operator looked up sleepily, rubbed his eyes and read:

> To Hon. John Randall, Executive Mansion, Eagleton:
> My Dear Governor—I'm running against you, but you know it's only for exercise, and I want you to help me out of a hole that has nothing to do with politics. I've got an old woman here who takes me for you and wants me to pardon her son. It would be a shame to undeceive her, and anyway I'm better looking than you are. The boy's name is Dan Higgs. He was sent up for five years for cattle stealing. His father is sick, and both father and mother are starving. Pardon the boy for me, John. I never envied you your job until this minute, and even now I want it only long enough to pardon a cow stealer. Answer at once. I'll wait here at this God forsaken junction until I hear from you. JOSEPH LAYSON.

It was the longest and by far the oddest telegram known in Xerxes Junction. The operator looked dubiously and timidly suggested, "You might skeletonize this and save money."

"No, sir," said the colonel decidedly. "Send every blamed word of it. This is a matter of state."

The operator labored with the message, while the colonel went out on the platform to tell Mrs. Higgs to wait patiently. Soon after the message had gone over the wires the Ardenia train came puffing in.

"Come on, governor," said Finley. "We can't wait any longer."

"I can't leave now," answered the colonel, leaning languidly against the station door.

"But you must. We speak in Ardenia tonight."

"You can make enough noise for both of us."

"You know I never had any, Finley. What's the use of saying that? Anyhow, I'm not going." With that he took a seat on the bench beside Mrs. Higgs. "You'd better be moving, Finley," he added. "I'll join you at Beedsburg in the morning."

Just then the operator came rushing out with a message. The colonel seized it, almost tearing it in half in his eagerness, then held the pieces in his shaking hands while he read:

> Dear Colonel—Have telephoned to warden at Osborn. No objection there. Higgs' pardon signed this minute. Glad to be of service. JOHN RANDALL.

The colonel turned to Mrs. Higgs. "It's all right," he said thickly. "Your boy will be home tomorrow."

"Thank you! Thank you! You're the best guvner God ever made!" At this she broke down and sobbed.

"All aboard!" shouted the conductor.

The colonel took a step toward the train. "It's all right," he repeated. "I've done only my duty, but if you feel grateful tell the boy to vote for me, John Randall, for governor."

Waterproof Paper.

Japanese oiled papers, made from the barks of trees or shrubs, are astonishingly cheap and durable, according to a writer in the National Geographic Magazine. As a cover for his load of tea when a rainstorm overtakes him the Japanese farmer spreads over it a tough, pliable cover of oiled paper which is almost as impervious as tarpaulin and as light as gossamer. He has doubtless carried this cover for years, neatly packed away somewhere about his cart. The rickshaw coolies in the large cities wear rain mantles of this oiled paper, which cost less than 18 cents and last for a year or more with constant use.

But perhaps the most remarkable of all the papers which find a common use in the Japanese household are the leather papers of which tobacco pouches and pipe cases are made. They are almost as tough as French kid, so translucent that one can nearly see through them and as pliable and soft as calfskin. The material of which they are made is as thick as cardboard, but as flexible as kid.

Tom Corwin Found the Reason.

This story is told of the famous Tom Corwin: During his first term in the Ohio house of representatives, about the year 1823, a bill to stop the whipping of criminals was under discussion. Corwin, a native of Kentucky, ardently advocated the repeal of the old law. A member of the house who had come from Connecticut was active on the opposite side. He urged the retention of whipping as a punishment and asserted as a strong point in favor of his contention that he had noticed while living in Connecticut that whenever a man was whipped in execution of the sentence of a court of justice he immediately left the state and did not return.

Corwin promptly retorted that he knew many people had come to Ohio from Connecticut, but he had never before known the reason for their coming.—Cleveland Leader.

All Things to All Beliefs.

A certain woman of a lively disposition and much beloved in her circle says that she is a woman suffragist once a year, at the time of the annual dinner. "They have such a lot of ice cream and strawberries!" she exclaims, with sparkling eyes. The New York Times tells another story to mate with this:

A woman in Brooklyn who is active in promoting the suffragist cause in that city tried recently to induce a lively young matron to join the Woman's Republican league. She met with a flat refusal. "But your husband is a Republican, and you belong to the Woman Suffrage association."

"I belong to the Suffrage association and to the Antisuffrage association," was the placid reply. "I like the women in one and the refreshments in the other. But honestly I don't believe in either!"

ONE OF THE VILEST DISEASES

is catarrh, which first attacks the nose and throat and finally spreads all through the system. The one sure cure is fragrant, healing Catarrhozone, which is sent by the air you breathe direct to the root of the trouble. Mr. T. Y. MacVicar, of Yarmouth, suffered for years from catarrh and says: "In my long experience with this loathsome disease I never used any remedy that relieved and cured so promptly as Catarrhozone. When my nostrils were so stuffed up that I couldn't breathe I found a few inhalations of Catarrhozone was sufficient to clear away the mucous. I am perfectly cured by Catarrhozone and free from the disease entirely." Use only Catarrhozone Complete outfit $1.00; trial size 25c.

THE GLOBE SIZED UP BY AN INDEPENDENT.

(Toronto Telegram.)

Cowardly untruthfulness reaches its lowest depth in the editorial quibbling of the Globe and its junior counsel in the prosecution of Lord Dundonald.

The two Toronto organs have hounded Lord Dundonald with every weak falsehood that stupid partisanship could devise.

The intentions of the organs may be good if their language is bad and their inaccuracy worse.

Respect due to good intentions is forfeited when the Globe or its local echo belittles, misrepresents and defames Lord Dundonald and then invents a question of etiquette to prevent a wronged man from saying a word in his own defence.

Abuse is explained but not excused by the necessities which are a supreme law unto the Globe and other Police Court attorneys of Liberal journalism, who hold a brief for Hon. Sydney Fisher.

Abuse might be overlooked if it were not associated with the cowardice which denies the right of free speech to the victim of that abuse.

Lord Dundonald is to be assailed by all the hissing ganders in the goose pastures of Liberal journalism and then when he comes face to face with a great assembly of his fellow-subjects he is to be restrained by questions of etiquette from discussing the rights and wrongs of the controversy which brought him to the platform and his audience to the hall.

The Globe and its assistant have taken unto themselves the functions of Major Maude and the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod. These weeping willow organs whine in tones that combine the qualities of a Pecksniff and a Turveydrop.

When poor Lord Dundonald resisted the small partisan spites of Hon. Sydney Fisher the Globe and its associate brayed and wept amid the ruins of the country's "constitooshin."

When Lord Dundonald ventures to speak a word in his own defence the Globe or the journal which figures in the capacity of "Mary's little lamb," brays and bleats and whines and wails that Lord Dundonald is a sinner against every fine point of etiquette.

The Globe and the other feeble far off echoes of machine opinion are not members of religious orders, but under the terms of the British North America Act they claim the right to teach etiquette without having passed an examination or obtained a certificate. The Globe's treatment of Lord Dundonald has not been conspicuous for its truth or fairness. Truth and fairness are great elements in every true code of manners, in every ideal system of etiquette. If Lord Dundonald is content to ignore the Globe's lack of truthfulness and fairness the Globe may be well content to ignore Lord Dundonald's lack of manners.

Canada has something else to do than to weep over the spectacle of a plain, blunt soldier wounding the pure and pious spirit of the Globe and its associate perverters of the truth with his rude, boorish ways.

Canada's first duty is to consider the matter, not the manner, of Lord Dundonald's speech. The country is interested in what Lord Dundonald said, not in the way he said it. Fair-minded Canadians will discover or consider the merits of Lord Dundonald's speech. Defects in the manner of that speech can be corrected in the fullness of time when Lord Dundonald's engagements will permit him to take a post-graduate course in etiquette at a summer school of manners conducted by the Globe and the other organs that might be assembled under the presidency of Hon. Sydney Fisher, B.A.

Mills Are Rolling.

As was foreshadowed in The Intelligencer yesterday, the rolling mills started operations this morning. One train of rolls was started and it is confidently expected that a second train will be in operation to-morrow. Between 40 and 50 men are on to-day, and to-morrow another gang will be put on.

Eighteen British Warships Sent to Alexandria to Check Russian Illegalities

In the Red Sea—First European Complication Re the War Has Arrived.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Berlin, July 19.—Great Britain has informed Germany of the despatch of a British fleet of eighteen warships to Alexandria with the intention of checking Russian illegalities in the Red Sea.

It is expected that demonstration will cause Russia to subside meekly.

The general feeling is that the first European complication with regard to the war in the Far East has arrived.

Suez, July 19.—The P. & O. steamship Malacca, which was seized in the Red Sea by the Russian volunteer cruiser Petersburg last week, has arrived here, flying the Russian flag and commanded by Russian officers and run by a Russian crew.

Admittance of the British Company's agent aboard the vessel was refused.

SMALLPOX IN SIDNEY.

MR. JAMES HARRY, OF THE 3rd CONCESSION, IS A VICTIM OF THE DREAD DISEASE.

A case of smallpox has developed in the Township of Sidney, but the authorities have taken every precaution to prevent the spread of the dread disease. The victim is Mr. James Harry, a yeoman residing in the 3rd concession. As soon as it was learned what the nature of the disease was a meeting of the Township Council was held, resulting in the house where the disease was being quarantined; a physician being placed in charge, also an attendant. The other members of the family have not as yet shown any symptoms of the disease. Mr. Harry is a middle-aged man, well known in the township, where he has lived for many years.

RESPECTED LADY DEAD.

MRS. JOSEPH LEGAULT PASSED AWAY THIS MORNING.

Mrs. Joseph Legault, who has been an invalid for the past five years, died this morning at the family residence on Bridge street. Deceased was born at Vaudreuil, Quebec, in the year 1851, being thus 53 years of age. For the past 32 years Mrs. Legault had been a resident of Belleville. She was a lady who was known to many and was held in high esteem. She was a devout member of St. Michael's Church. In addition to the bereaved husband a family of four sons and two daughters survive. The sons are G. H., of Detroit; Alfred, Joseph and Archie, at home. The daughters are Mrs. C. Larmey, of Detroit, and Mrs. John Cummins, of this city.

LAKE ONTARIO'S LEVEL.

THIRTY-EIGHT INCHES ABOVE NORMAL AND MAY GO HIGHER —WHY THE WATER IS HIGH IN BAY OF QUINTE.

The lake level on Friday was reported to be thirty-eight inches above normal, says the Toronto Mail. Instead of falling this month, as was expected, the water is keeping up to the high level of last month, if, indeed, it is not a trifle higher. In 1870 the lake reached forty-seven inches above normal, and in 1862 it was forty-four inches above normal. It is quite possible that history may repeat itself and the present high level be exceeded by six or seven inches next year. The records of the City Engineer's department show that the variation of levels cannot be reduced to any very definite rule. Climatic conditions, especially during the winter, govern the height of the water each year, and should the first six months of next year prove similar to the last six months it may be that next year the present high water mark will be considerably raised.

It would be contrary to all precedent for the lake level to continue rising from July on.

ESTIMABLE LADY DEAD.

MRS. ALBERT GEROW PASSED AWAY THIS MORNING.

After being a sufferer for some months from lung trouble, Mrs. Albert Gerow passed away at 10 o'clock this morning at the family residence, Wickett street. Deceased, whose maiden name was Miss Emmaline Raney, was born at Bowmanville in the year 1859. She had resided in Belleville for some time. Mrs. Gerow was an amiable woman respected by all who knew her.

She was a member of Holloway Street Methodist Church. In addition to the husband, three sons, Frank, Daniel and Walter, all of this city, and one daughter, Ida, survive. To them will be extended the sincere sympathy of many friends.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

Testing the Apparatus.

At a few minutes before 8 o'clock last evening the firemen had a run, but there was no fire. It was simply for practice and no alarm was given. The hose carts after leaving the stations proceeded at a rapid gait to a point on Coleman street, opposite Christ Church, where they stopped and the hydrants were tested. It was in every respect a successful test, showing that the brigade was prepared for active service, if necessary, at any moment.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

This remedy is certain to be needed in almost every home before the summer is over. It can always be depended upon even in the most severe and dangerous cases. It is especially valuable for summer disorders in children. It is pleasant to take and never fails to give prompt relief. Why not buy it now it may save a life. For sale by all druggists

THE BISLEY MATCHES.

Bisley Camp, July 19.—Colonials were on the alert yesterday when the Duke of Connaught visited the Canadian hut and inspected the Canadians, Natalians and New Zealanders, who were drawn up in open squad in front. After the parade His Royal Highness visited the quarters and remarked to the commandant on their comfortable appearance. It is announced the Prince and Princess of Wales will visit the hut on Saturday.

The principal events yesterday were the first stages of the Alexandra and Prince of Wales competition. The Alexandra is competed for by individuals at two distances, 200 and 600 yards, seven shots at each, the first prize being £30 and the total number of prizes 350. At 200 yards Pte. J. G. Goudie, Quebec, made 35, and at 600 yards 33, but one competitor made 33 at the 200 yards range, and then a possible at 600 yards, so beating Goudie.

Prince of Wales—First Range.

This is a squadded competition open only to winners of N.R.A. gold, silver or bronze, affiliated associations or counties medals (not recruits or revolver medals). Distances are 200 and 600 yards; ten shots at each. There are 64 prizes, aggregating £300, the winner receiving the Prince of Wales prize of £100 and the badge. At 200 yards Pte. Goudie, 8th Que., and Pte. Smith, 21st, made each 49, but other competitors than Canadians made five possibles and fourteen forty-nines.

Capt. John Crowe and Staff-Sergt. C. R. Crowe are so disgusted with their scores in the Prince of Wales at 200 yards that they will not shoot over the 600 yards range in the same match. The first made 43 and the second 40.

Other Results.

In The Daily Telegraph match, seven shots at 600 yards, the following places and prizes were taken by Canadians:

Pte. Neil Smith, Stewart, 34th place, £3.

Capt. Crowe, of Guelph, was 109th, winning £2.

Pte. Neil Smith was 27th, winning £2.

CANADA ATLANTIC SALE

Premier Admits That Government Was Approached.

Mr. F. D. Monk's Resolution For Greater Protection of the Native Tobacco Industry Voted Down—Western Indians Do Well—Improvement Since June, 1876—At Qu'Appelle They Raised 65,000 Bushels of Wheat Last Year.

Ottawa, July 19.—In the House yesterday, before the orders of the day were taken up, Hon. John Haggart asked whether any letter or assurance of any kind had been given by the Government or a member thereof that would encourage the proprietor of the Canada Atlantic Railway to believe that an arrangement for its purchase or lease would be carried out after the next general election.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in reply, said the Government had been approached, but the Government had declined to consider the question just now.

Received Royal Assent.

The Commons was summoned to the Senate chamber yesterday, and Mr. Justice Sedgwick, as Administrator, gave the Royal assent to fifty-two bills. This brings the number of bills formally passed up to one hundred. Among the list of bills assented to yesterday was the bill to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act. The tortuous course of the legislation governing the consitution of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is therefore at an end.

Subsidy Before Completion.

Hon. Mr. Emmerson introduced his bill yesterday respecting the payment of certain railway subsidies. The idea is that the Government can fix the amount of subsidy before the railway is completed.

Mr. Monk's Amendment.

F. D. Monk moved an amendment on going into supply yesterday declaring that the Government had failed to extend to the native tobacco industry the protection and encouragement it deserves.

In support of his resolution Mr. Monk quoted statistics to show that the importation of foreign leaf tobacco was far in excess of what it should be under a system of adequate protection. He also pointed out that the measure tardily proposed by the Minister of Inland Revenue to combat the actions of the American tobacco trust in Canada, would be found to be totally inadequate, and advocated the application of an amendment of the criminal code as the only effective cure for this evil.

Hon. L. P. Brodeur defended the Government's policy of suppressing combines by providing that no Government licenses shall be permitted to enter tobacco combines. He acquitted Mr. Fisher of the charge of neglecting the tobacco industry, as two specialists had been sent to Wisconsin to investigate the subject and they would be sent back again by this autumn. The Minister created some amusement by declaring that prices of smoking tobacco had fallen sixty per cent. since the new duty had been introduced and the production of Canadian tobacco encouraged.

Seymour Gourley congratulated the Minister of Inland Revenue upon having been the first Cabinet Minister to make a distinct, clear-cut declaration in favor of the policy of protection and throwing away the hypocritical garments in which his party had masqueraded so long. Mr. Gourley believed in encouraging the growth of tobacco in Canada to the exclusion of the foreign article. Statistics, he said, did not show that the increase in the growth of tobacco was general throughout Canada. In 1898 Ontario produced eleven million pounds of tobacco, and last year only seven millions.

Mr. Monk's amendment was negatived on a vote of 19 to 50.

The Destitute Italians.

Sir William Mulock stated in reply to Uriah Wilson that as soon as Judge Winchester had concluded his investigation with the employment of aliens on the Grand Trunk Pacific, he would enquire into the circumstances of the arrival of a number of destitute Italians in Montreal last winter.

The estimates of the Department of the Interior were under discussion in the House last night.

Western Indians Do Well.

When the Indian Department estimates were being considered, E. F. Clarke asked how much the Indians of the west were helped by the industrial schools.

Mr. Sifton replied that there has been a marvelous improvement in the condition of the Indians since June, 1876, but the full advantage was not derived from the industrial school, where the Indians were taught trades because the Indians had not the mental, moral or physical stamina to compete with the white man.

Day schools and boarding schools were found to give better results. At the Qu'Appelle agency the young Indians are placed on separate farms on a separate part of the reserve where their relatives cannot eat them out of house and home. These Indians last year raised 65,000 bushels of wheat, and have large herds of cattle.

Indian Estimates All Passed.

Thanks to the oppressive heat, which took the life out of the House, Mr. Sifton was able to make fine progress. All the appropriations for the Indian Department were passed, whereupon the House concluded that it had sweltered long enough and adjourned at 10.30.

Struck By Lightning.

Comber, July 19.—During a severe thunderstorm here yesterday afternoon, Adam Fennie, a farmer, living near the village limits, while in the act of putting up an eavetrough on his residence, was struck by lightning and lies in an unconscious condition. The Town Hall was also struck, and one corner shattered.

Both Legs Taken Off.

Arnprior, July 19.—A terrible accident occurred here at 7 o'clock yesterday morning. John Murphy was drawing a carload of lumber out of McLachlin Bros.' yard, and fell in front of the car. Both legs were taken off.

DUNDONALD INCIDENT

Causes Questions to Be Asked in the British House.

Could Not, However, Be Answered Without Full Notice—London Papers Urge That Lord Dundonald Be Called Home—Daily Mail Says He Serves the Larger Interests of the Empire Most Indifferently.

London, July 19.—(C.A.P.)—J. Henniker Heaton, M.P. (Conservative), asked the War Secretary yesterday whether the name of Lord Dundonald was on the active list of the War Department, whether his services had been dispensed with by the Canadian Government, whether it had come to the knowledge of the War Office that Lord Dundonald had been making inflammatory speeches in Canada against the Government of Canada, and that at meetings largely attended by the Opposition he had been cheered and hooted by the various parties. The Speaker intervened and said: "I hope the question will not continue in the same tone, because those controversial expressions are not admissable. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Heaton continuing, asked whether the War Secretary had been warned that the action of Lord Dundonald might be resented and might greatly endanger the loyal and kindly feeling now existing between Canada and Great Britain.

W. Bromley-Davenport, financial secretary to the War Office, replied: "I think the honorable member will see that these are questions which the Secretary of State cannot properly answer without full notice. (Hear, hear.)

To Call Dundonald Home.

The Daily Mail says the sooner the War Office and the British Government turn their attention to the doings and sayings of Lord Dundonald, the better it will be for both the Motherland and Canada. Lord Dundonald has embarked upon what looks perilously like a political campaign against the Canadian Government and has appealed to the Opposition like the merest demagogue. It is no part of the duty of an Imperial officer to cause friction between England and Canada, and a soldier who does so serves the larger interests of the Empire most indifferently.

Risk of Imperial Crisis.

The Daily News asks: "Are we to have the risk of an Imperial crisis raised over that trumpery quarrel in which Lord Dundonald has not the shadow of a case. The threatened meeting at Montreal should be emphatically vetoed. It is high time the British Government, which closures Parliament, closured this indiscreet bearer of a great name and assured the Canadians that England disassociates itself from this fire-eating general."

Controversial.

London, July 19.—Henniker Heaton, M.P., in the House of Commons, desired to ask the Secretary of State for War a question re Dundonald, but the speaker said it was too controversial to be admissible.

No Difficulties Raised.

London, July 19.—(C.A.P.)—Premier Balfour, replying to T. Gibson Bowles, M.P., (Conservative), said the Newfoundland Government had raised no difficulties affecting the rights conceded to the French in connection with the local regulations for bait fishing and the concurrence of the Newfoundland Government had been obtained during the negotiations.

Child Killed Outright.

Hamilton, July 19.—Yesterday morning shortly after 9 o'clock there was a distressing accident at the corner of King street and East avenue, where a street car crashed into a buggy containing Mrs. George Schuler, Union Park; her daughter, Mrs. Herman Myers, and her granddaughter, Bertha Myers, aged four years. The three occupants of the rig were thrown under the car wheels. The child was killed outright, Mrs. Myers was seriously injured and Mrs. Schuler was painfully bruised. An inquest will be held this evening.

They Are at Liberty.

Toronto, July 19.—At 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon Samuel Thompson, Thomas Kerr and Abraham Cahoon walked out of the Central Prison. They had been sentenced by Judge Winchester to two years for ballot-stuffing, conspiracy, etc., at the last municipal elections. None of them look any the worse for their confinement.

Fell Off a Bridge.

Brockville, July 19.—A man named James Beggs was brought to the General Hospital yesterday in a serious condition. He went to sleep on the bridge across the canal at Cardinal and fell off. He sustained a compound fracture of the thigh, lip and chin cut and numerous bruises. He is about 30 years of age.

After One Year.

Ottawa, July 19.—The Government has just received the first official information of the wreck of a steamer in charge of the Northwest Mounted Police at Hereschelle Island, which occurred on Aug. 25, last year. This station is 2,000 miles north of Edmonton, which accounted for the belated information.

Killed By Lightning.

Chalk River, July 19.—During heavy thunders and hail storm Sunday night, William Hurley, a station man, was struck by lightning and instantly killed. He leaves a wife and three small children. The Presbyterian Church was also struck and slightly damaged.

Killed at Burlington.

Hamilton, July 19.—George Worley, C. P. R. brakeman, fell off the train and was killed at Burlington Junction yesterday morning. He lived at 170 East Wood street.

Sunlight Soap is recommended, by those who have investigated the different kind of soaps, as being the best and purest on the market. Those who have gone still farther and tried the different methods state that the Sunlight way of washing is greatly superior to ordinary methods because it requires much less work and makes the clothes whiter and cleaner. Because Sunlight Soap is quite pure and free from adulteration it will not injure delicate fabrics or the user's hands.

STRICTURES Cured To Stay Cured

Strictures, no matter where located, are apt to involve the surrounding structures. If neglected or improperly treated, urethral stricture will produce distressing symptoms. Cutting, stretching and tearing are the old barbarous methods of treating this disease. The strictly modern and original methods employed by us are free from the horrors of surgery and are absolutely safe and harmless. The abnormal stricture tissue is dissolved and leaves the channel free and clear. All unnatural discharges cease, any irritation or burning sensation disappears, the Kidneys, Bladder, Prostate Gland and other surrounding organs are strengthened and the bliss of manhood returns. Our ABSORPTIVE TREATMENT will positively cure you. YOU CAN PAY WHEN CURED.

We Cure Varicocele, Blood and Skin Diseases, Nervous Debility, Strictures, Bladder, Kidney and Urinary Diseases.

CYCLONE IN ESSEX.

Houses and Barns Unroofed and Barns Struck By Lightning.

Walkerville, July 20.—A cyclone swept over the county between Wolf's Hotel and Walkerville Monday afternoon. Trees were uprooted and broken and barns demolished. The barn of Joseph Balliergeon, a Sandwich East farmer, was struck by lightning. The structure burned, entailing a loss of $400.

The house of Ernest Langlois, another farmer, was unroofed by the storm, but fortunately the inmates escaped harm. Four Windsor young men who were in the boathouse owned by Alexander St. Louis, on the river front, had a thrilling time. The storm ripped the boathouse to pieces. The party was blown into the river, where they remained throughout the hailstorm.

GREAT BRITAIN IS ANGRY AT "RUSSIAN PIRACY."

Russian Volunteer Fleet Steamer Described As "An Armed Pirate" —Palmerston Would Have Acted Promptly in Such a Crisis —Display Type in British Newspapers – Russians Lost 2,000 Men at Motien Pass – Japs Loss 300.

London, July 20.—Once again the leading English newspaper editorials are in the gravest tones on the Russian seizure of British vessels. Even the conservative Standard declares that the nation looks to the Foreign Office to take more effectual action than the ordinary conventions of diplomatic intercourse prescribe.

"The case is not one for fastidious treatment. If nothing is done officially to relieve the painful strain, the irritation of this country may grow into stubborn resentment. We cannot, even for the sake of peace, sit down under a series of undisguisedly provocative measures."

A similar warlike tone pervades almost every other paper. The Morning Post says Great Britain cannot tolerate the seizure of the steamer Malacca except by the abandonment of her self-respect as a great power.

An Armed Pirate.

The paper declares that either the volunteer fleet steamer St. Petersburg is an armed pirate or Russia has violated the Treaty of Paris.

"Palmerston," says The Post, significantly, "would not have required half an hour to make up his mind what to do in such a case."

All details in connection with the seizures of ships by the Russian volunteer fleet of steamers are printed in the most prominent type. No such bitter feeling has been aroused in the English press since the German Emperor's telegram to the Boers.

Intense Apprehension.

Intense apprehension prevails at Cardiff and other British coal ports, and the chartering of vessels for the Far East is practically at a standstill.

From all sides come urgent demands that the Government take swift action to prevent a recurrence of seizures by the volunteer fleet.

"Russian Piracy," as one paper heads it, takes precedence of all other news.

Admiral Sir Edmund Robert Fremantle, in The Daily Chronicle, says "The crisis no doubt is grave, but I hold that our safest course would be at once to inform the Russian Government that our cruisers have orders to prevent our merchantment being interfered with by vessels which we cannot admit to be men-of-war, and to request that their proceedings be disavowed, and that they be immediately recalled to Russian ports after their prizes have been released."

The Daily News declares that the Cabinet yesterday drew up a strongly worded protest which will be forwarded to St. Petersburg. The Cabinet, the paper says, had an interchange of views with the Admiralty and a program of action in the case of eventualities was decided upon. It was decided also to protest to Turkey.

Another Cruiser Goes.

London, July 20.—The Constantinople correspondent of The Daily Mail, in a despatch dated July 18, says: "A Russian cruiser has just passed through Odessa with several guns covered with canvas on her deck. She also carried torpedo tubes."

Russians Lost 2,000.

General Kuroki's Headquarters in the Field, via Fusan, July 20.—More Russian troops were engaged in Monday's battle at Maotien Pass than in previous engagements. There were probably double the number of those which took part in the fight at the Yalu River, while opposed to them were only one brigade and one battalion of the Japanese forces. The Russian loss is estimated at 2,000. The burial of the dead continues. The Japanese casualties aggregated 300. The engagement has conspicuously demonstrated the wonderful efficiency of the Japanese infantry. They proved incomparably the better marksmen, with more initiative, and they outfought and outgeneraled the Russians on every point.

Japanese Losses Were 299.

Tokio, July 20.—The Japanese losses in the fighting at Motien Pass and its vicinity Sunday were 299 killed or wounded. The Japanese lost four officers and thirty-nine men killed and fifteen officers and 241 men wounded. The casualties all occurred in the second division. Gen. Kuroki mentions, but he does not enumerate, the trophies captured. He estimated the Russian losses as exceeding his own.

When the Russians finally retreated, they were pursued by the entire Japanese line. Seven battalions of the enemy made a halt on the heights of Tawan and with four guns checked the Japanese pursuit.

Japs Fought on Without Officers.

The attack on Hsiamatang began at 8 o'clock in the morning. A battalion of Russian infantry and a squadron of cavalry assaulted the Japanese company on outpost there. The Russians received reinforcements until they were a regiment strong. The Japanese resisted doggedly. All their officers were either killed or wounded, but still the men fought on. The Japanese finally received reinforcements, and the Russians retired at 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

That Fake Again.

Che Foo, July 20.—A junk with eight Russians and fifty Chinese on board arrived here yesterday afternoon, five days from Port Arthur. The Russians refused to talk, but the Chinese say that on July 11 and 12 the Japanese captured and occupied with 4,000 men one of the eastern forts near Port Arthur. Before reinforcements arrived the Russians cut off the 4,000 troops in the fort and exploded mines which resulted in the killing of every Japanese soldier there.

Russian Cruiser Sunk.

St. Petersburg, July 20.—A story has been going the rounds that three cruisers rejected by Germany were transferred to the Russian service, and joined the Vladivostock squadron. One of the cruisers and a torpedo boat, it is added, struck mines and went down. The story is not confirmed. The Admiralty has no news of any vessel having been lost at Vladivostock.

After the Japanese.

Tokio, July 20.—The armored cruisers Rossia, Rurik and Gromoboi of the Russian Vladivostock squadron, passed through the Taugaru Strait into the Pacific Ocean to-day.

STRATHCONA REPORTS.

London, July 20.—The annual report of Lord Strathcona has been received, and will form the weekly report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for Aug. 8. The High Commissioner forwards extracts from the returns of the British Board of Trade which indicate a very gratifying development in Canadian trade.

Speaking of the butter trade, the High Commissioner says that it is generally conceded that the standard and quality of Canadian butter have been improved and the refrigerator service has likewise been found of a more satisfactory character. There is an increasing demand for apples.

The High Commissioner reports there is a good opening for canned eggs in gallon tins, for which the baking and confectionery trade are waiting. Quite a trade, which is capable of great development, has sprung up during the last year in bottled fruits. The report also speaks very highly of the samples of Canadian tobacco which have been sent over and examined by experts in London, who made a decidedly favorable report.

BOY'S TRAGIC DEATH.

Winnipeg, July 20.—The mystery of the disappearance of Stewart, the nine-year-old son of Joseph Hughes of Ninette, who has been missing since Friday afternoon, was solved by finding his body in the woods about a mile from Ninette. On Friday morning the boy and a companion some years older than himself, were out shooting in the woods, and returning about 2 p.m. separated near the schoolhouse.

After leaving his companion, the boy started through the woods, carrying an old .22 rifle, the barrel of which was found near a stone on which he had evidently been striking the breech of the barrel in an attempt to dislodge a jammed cartridge thereby causing it to explode. The ball had entered his forehead.

STRIKES—AND WHAT COMES AFTER THEM.

It begins to be more and more apparent that civilization, which has invented much machinery to economize labor, should, and must, soon strive to find some cheaper and more effective method of settling disputes between labor and capital than a general strike. As a proof of this we have only to look at the affairs of our neighbors across the line.

Some 50,000 hands who should be engaged in killing cattle and preparing meat, have quit work, either because they were called out, or because their work depends upon others who were called out. These people worked in Chicago, Kansas City and in other western and eastern cities. Ninety per cent. of them had no dispute about wages. The other ten per cent. demanded two cents per hour additional to the unskilled labor wages which they received. Ten men who can earn two to five dollars each are earning nothing, because one man who gets a dollar and a half should have ten or fifteen cents more. Thousands of the hands who are ordered to be idle are hundreds of miles from the employee who has the grievance and from the employer who is to be persuaded. But the suffering goes far beyond the idle men. The price of meat throughout the United States was raised the day of the strike. It has gone up steadily ever since. All people who buy meat are included in the list of sufferers. By and by the strike will be over. The price of meat will not fall to the normal figure until long after. In the meantime the dealers and operators, the persons with whom the strikers are fighting, will gather in their gains. Many classes of people lost money by the great Pennsylvania coal strike. The only persons who made money out of it were the coal owners and operators. They are getting rich out of it still, for the price has never gone back to the old figure. The strike was a bonanza for the employers. So it will probably be with the meat men. It is not so with all employers. We may be pretty certain that the Sydney strike is a dead loss to all concerned.

TIMELY TOPICS.

A bright little boy, his mamma's joy,
had an awful taste for fruit
Not an apple did show its face on a tree, but Willie was in pursuit
His parents told him it was wrong to eat the apples green
But Willie winked the other eye and for greenies was more keen
One day he climbed a neighbor's tree and thought it splendid fun
Had a terrible toot on the forbidden fruit and his day's work was done.

Won't it be a blessing when Parliament prorogues, and the Hon. Syd. Fisher can find time to come down and lay the corner-stone of our drill shed?

• • •

A shrewd suspicion exists, however, that the delay is caused by the fact that the Government wants to give the job to a firm of Grit contractors who are busy at present.

• • •

That's what we call a downright injustice. Belleville money paid for the site, and the contract for the work should be given to Belleville people. It doesn't make any difference whether the contractor is a Grit or a Tory; all conditions being equal, the Government should, if possible, give the contracts to residents of this city. But then, bless us, what's the use of talking about work that, apparently, won't be started till about 1910!

• • •

Hard to tell, though. Perhaps Mr. Barren O. Lott may soon go up to Ottawa again and order the Government to go on with the work at once.

Taking into consideration the fact that a judge, three ministers and a host of ordinary philistines have gone fishing, we ought to hear some tall stories when they return.

Considerable nonsense has been uttered re the Dundonald incident, but it remained for Mr. Timothy Healy, whom the late Charles Stewart Parnell described as a "guttersnipe," to cap the climax. In a speech in the British House of Commons Mr. Healy said "he believed Dundonald had attacked the Government of Canada because it had a French Catholic Premier. It was very useful to have French Catholics side with the British Empire in the Boer War, but when the war was over an officer of the Imperial army made partisan statements outraging the feelings of the majority of the people of Canada. He would like to know why Lord Dundonald was permitted to remain while his speech was rankling in the French heart."

Mr. Timothy Healy is a fair specimen of the men who are slandering Lord Dundonald. How aptly the late Mr. Parnell "sized him up!"

ONE OF THE VILEST DISEASES

is catarrh, which first attacks the nose and throat and finally spreads all through the system. The one sure cure is fragrant, healing Catarrhozone, which is sent by the air you breathe direct to the root of the trouble. Mr. T. Y. MacVicar, of Yarmouth, suffered for years from catarrh and says: "In my long experience with this loathsome disease I never used any remedy that relieved and cured so promptly as Catarrhozone. When my nostrils were so stuffed up that I couldn't breathe I found a few inhalations of Catarrhozone was sufficient to clear away the mucous. I am perfectly cured by Catarrhozone and free from the disease entirely." Use only Catarrhozone. Complete outfit $1.00; trial size 25c.

Oils, Plasters and Operations Fail to Cure Cancer

There is a peculiar condition of the blood which favors the growth of cancer germs in the system, and that is the reason that local treatment like the above fails to make permanent cures.

Those who suffer from cancers or tumors will be glad to learn of a Constitutional remedy that is pleasant to use and can be taken in the privacy of one's own home without even the members of your own family knowing it. Mention this paper and send 6 cents in stamps to B. I. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont., for a useful booklet, "Cancer, its Cause and Cure."

The civil service of India and other British provinces in the East is a matter of national pride, and no one can study its records and its methods without admitting its success and superiority to the ordinary official adminstration of other Governments.

The reason for the character and efficiency of the official staff in Egypt, India, Burma, Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, the Malay Federation, Hong Kong, and other British provinces in the East is easily found. The Government gets good men because it offers suitable inducements, permanent positions at large salaries, rapid promotion for merit, with liberal leaves of absence and pensions upon retirement at the termination of certain periods of service.

Lieutenant-Governors in India receive $38,800 a year, and secretaries or heads of bureaus in the Provinces are paid $12,500. Members of the Boards of Revenue in India receive $15,000 a year. All magistrates of the first class throughout the Empire are paid $10,000 a year, which is the minimum of the judiciary. District and session judges receive from that amount to $15,000 a year, according to their length of service and importance of the circuit over which they preside.

In Burma, where official responsibilities and duties are as light as in any other country of the world, and where the population is only 7,605,560, the Governor receives $38,000 a year, the cheif secretary $12,500, four under secretaries $8,000 a year each, the finance officer or treasurer $14,500, disbursing officer $11,500, commissioners, who are local executives in charge of districts, $12,500 each, and a commissioner of agriculture $11,500.

All of the gentlemen now occupying these positions, and drawing these salaries, excepting the judges, began at the bottom of the ladder. They entered the public service in the Indian colonies before they were 25 years old after passing two examinations, the second occuring after one year of probation, in which their administrative qualities and adaptability had been fairly tested, and the record they made during that first year counted so many numbers in their total standing. They have been compelled to submit to similar examinations at every promotion since, and have worked their way up by merit without political influence, although, as is always the case, the personal equation entered into every calculation.

A good many weak ones drop out by the wayside. The civil service in the East Indies is a survival of the fittest; and you may be sure that a man who survives all of the tests and conditions incident to advancement is made of good stuff. At the same time, when he enters the service he knows that nobody but a better man can get ahead of him; he is sure that he will not be displaced by the favorite of some member of Parliament, and that every time a vacancy occurs he stands an equal chance of promotion with everybody else of his rank. He knows, too, that his employment is permanent upon good behavior, and, that, after twenty-four years of service, he will be entitled to a pension if he desires to retire. These pensions vary from $360 to $1,080 a year, according to the rank of the official, and they have the privilege of commuting them and receiving a stated amount of cash, which is calculated by an actuary on the same basis as is a life insurance premium.

The British Government gives pensions to both its civil and military officers upon retirement for age or disability, but requires both to provide for their wives and children after death by a form of compulsory insurance. The details may be found at length in the army regulations. Similar regulations prevail in all the European countries. Every officer who enters the military service, if he be married, must, as a condition of his appointment, pay into the treasury a stated sum for his wife and for each of his children. This sum varies according to his age and is based upon the same risks as life insurance premiums. Every time he is promoted and upon the birth of every child his premium, or "contribution," as it is called, is increased, and each officer, both married or unmarried, must submit to a monthly deduction from his pay for insurance purposes.

LONDON UNDERGROUND.

Streets Below Streets That May Be Followed for Miles.

"If a man were to live to be a hundred," the late Sir Walter Besant declared, "and were to spend every day of his life in exploring this vast London of ours, I am quite sure it would be possible to put him down in a different part of it every day for a year, and nine days out of ten he wouldn't have the ghost of an idea where he was. And the same man might easily die without knowing anything really of that other London which lies beneath our feet, and which, in a way, is more wonderful than the one we see."

There are probably hundreds of thousands of people who think they know pretty well all that is worth knowing about London who would "open their eyes with surprise" if they were told that when taking their walks abroad they are walking over a buried city with its network of hundreds of miles of streets following exactly the lines of the streets above ground and bearing the same names, with an historic river fed by many a tributary, with waterfalls and baths, bookstalls, bakeries, and restaurants—a vast, silent city to which the roar of the traffic above cannot penetrate, but without which the London we know could scarcely exist.

If anyone doubts this let him get permission to explore this buried metropolis, and within a minute he will find himself transported from a crowded, noisy, city street into clean, well-paved, well-lit passages, along which he may wander at will for hours or days. By his side run huge pipes carrying water, gas, electric wires, pneumatic tubes—all for the use of the millions of people above his head.

He will find that these vaulted streets branch off in all directions just as do the streets above-ground, and he need never be at a loss to know precisely where he is, for each street bears its name in plain letters. And not only this, but on the walls are numbers corresponding to those borne by the houses immediately overhead.

If, for instance, he is walking eastward along Gresham street he will find Old Jewry branching off to the right and Coleman street to his left, while a few yards further on he can continue his walk along Princess street or Moorgate street at will. Thus he may wander for scores of miles along these white-bricked, clean, well-ventilated subways, now startled to find himself peering down on a railway station far beneath his feet, and a moment later by the thunder of an underground train just over his head.

Deep below these subways are others, through which run enormous gas and water mains; and in between, at different levels, is the most wonderful network of underground railways in the world. If curiosity carries him farther there are hundreds of miles of sewers to explore, but the task is not a savory one, and he will encounter rats by the thousand on his way. In his wanderings he will re-discover the old Fleet River, so familiar to long-gone generations, which now finds its way to the Thames through a channel more than twice one's own height, and which in time of flood thunders down in great volume. Beneath Ludgate Circus it is recruited by a stream which falls into it like a miniature Lodore.

But wherever you wander in subterranean London there is something startling or interesting to greet you. There are cavernous wine-vaults which, if they ran continuously, would reach halfway from the city to Brighton, and which contain thousands of casks of wine. Beneath St. Paul's churchyard—your 'bus or cab passes over it—is a spacious, well-equipped restaurant where hundreds take their meals every day deep below the city traffic, and to gain access to which you must walk under a large block of warehouses; and this is but one of many underground eating houses, while there are scores of bakeries which daylight never enters.

Underneath Bucklersbury you may look on a venerable arch and doorway which were built about the time Pompeii was destroyed, and near the Strand you may have a dip in an underground bath into which Severus may have plunged seventeen centuries ago.

"After all," remarked the sentimental wife, "home is the dearest spot on earth."

"Yes, verily," rejoined the head of the matrimonial trust as he finished auditing last month's grocery bill.

WILL ENGLAND BUY EGYPT.

Not Likely Then War With Turkey Is Bound to Come.

When last I wrote we were on our lovely Nile voyage. I think the next real mile-stone was the Temple of Hathor at Denderah. We had a long donkey ride to reach there, and it was our first temple and will always seem very impressive. I have seen many since, but the peculiar arrangement of some of the symbols, and of the temple itself, and its location, lead me to think it was the scene of greater mysteries than any place we have seen since. It took us four weeks and three days to reach Luxor, so after long and prayerful consideration we decided to abandon the Dahabeyah. We went to the hotel at Luxor and spent a week seeing Karnak and Thebes, and those days at Thebes were simply overwhelming. Then we went on by rail to Assouan and stayed there four weeks and a day. We went to Philae and rode donkeys every day out on the desert, and had a perfectly delightul time. The heat became quite intolerable, 101 in a cool place, and 130 in a warm one, before we left. We returned to Cairo by a Cook steamer, four days making the journey. Cairo was so much colder that in spite of every precaution we took heavy colds. Yesterday we went to the El Azur, the oldest university in the world. There are over 7,000 students there, ranging in age from 9 to 10 years to elderly men. They all, of course, sat or squatted on the floor and studied aloud. They kept rocking back and forth, and whenever one felt sleepy he simply tumbled over and went to sleep. It was the most remarkable sight, in a way, that I have ever witnessed. We did not receive many pleasant looks, and I think I was especially scowled upon. These are such singular people, judged by our standards, and the hold that their religion has upon them is wonderful. The best and wisest European is to the Bisharin beggar merely a dog of a Christian, whom he would not hesitate to kill if he could thereby serve the Prophet, and if he were not such a coward. They are so importunate with their wares and their begging that one needs a stick at all times, but they will whine and cower when it is raised. I have not yet determined at what stage the Ego needs Egyptian experience. There is the finest possible physical development, especially as one nears Nubia. The Nubians are magnificent, and there must be more or less of spiritual consciousness, but there seems to be an almost total lack of the intellectual. The contemplative bearing of the whole people is very interesting. The little children sit down, and just sit still and do nothing. A mother will hoist her little child astride her left shoulder, down goes his little head on her head, and he is asleep instantly. The man in front of you may be walking along like anyone else. All at once, down he goes in the gutter, on the sidewalk, in a doorway, and he is sound asleep in the broiling sun by the time you come up to him. I have "snapped" men asleep in all sorts of places.

We have become greatly interested in modern Egypt, and I have adroitly questioned every English person I could concerning the English "occupation." I cannot see how it is possible for the present English policy to be prolonged without eventually bringing on war with Turkey. No one seems to think there is the least possibility of England buying Egypt, and certainly the Sultan will not relinquish it without a struggle. When that time comes, the bond of Islam will hold the Egyptian, and he will be loyal to Turkey.

HONOR FOR "LORNA DOONE."

On the occasion of the unveiling of the Blackmore memorial in the cathedral Eden Phillpotts said there were paramount qualities that underlay all Blackmore's books. A supreme dramatic artist, he showed that goodness was man's only hope, that evil, sooner or later, reaped the whirlwind. Blackmore upheld the purest ethical ideals; he indicated the virtue of courage and humility, the propriety of tolerance, the value of self-reliance, and the distinction of patience, that rarest modern gift. He rated men not by their achievements, but by their desires, by things they held good and strove for. Lifted above the least shadow of selfishness by his human sympathy he surveyed mankind with mercy, but with justice.

The Dean of Exeter, in accepting the memorial on behalf of the chapter, said that Blackmore was a true child of nature. His memory would be perpetuated in that cathedral alongside that of the late Dr. Temple, fellow students together at Blundell's School, who had both exercised great influence upon their generation. Dr. Temple had his early religious teaching at the hands of Blackmore's father.

The memorial took the form of a beautiful stained-glass window in the cathedral, the magnificent central fane of the county which the author of "Lorna Doone" loved best. The figures filling the panels are respectively those of Jonathan, David and Samson. The tablet, beautifully carved in Carrara marble, bears a medallion containing what is said to be a good portrait of Blackmore. The inscription states that the tablet and window are a tribute of admiration and affection, mentions that Blackmore was educated at Blundell's and at Exeter College, and that he was the author of "Lorna Doone," "Springhaven" and other works. He was born in June, 1825, and died in January, 1900. At the foot of the tablet are the following lines from Cradock Nowell:

Insight and humor, and the rhythmic roll
Of antique lore, his fertile fancies sway'd,
And with their various eloquence array'd
His sterling English, pure and clean and whole.
He added Christian courtesy, and the humility
Of all thoughtful minds, to a certain grand
And glorious gift of radiating humanity.

BRAHMA.

If the red slayer thinks he slays,
Or if the slain thinks he is slain,
They know not well the subtle ways
I keep, and pass, and turn again.

Far or forgot to me is near,
Shadow and sunlight are the same;
The vanished gods to me appear,
And one to me are shame and fame.

They reckon ill who leave me out,
When me they fly, I am the wings;
I am the doubter and the doubt,
And I the hymn the Brahman sings.

The strong gods pine for my abode,
And pine in vain the sacred seven,
But thou, meek lover of the good,
Find me, and turn thy back on heaven.
—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

STIPEND FOR M.P'S.

Motion in British Commons Takes One Back to Edward II.'s Time.

Mr. Arthur Henderson's motion in the House of Commons to the effect "that all members of the House should receive from the State a reasonable stipend during their Parliamentary life," takes us back to the days of Edward II., says The Westminster Gazette, when Knights of the shire were allowed by statute 4s. a day, but burgesses only half that sum. In 1377 the two members for Lancashire received £26 8s. for a session of sixty-six days. Members also used to enter into arrangements with their constituents either to take their wages in kind or compound them in some other way. In 1463, it appears, John Straham, the member for Dunwich, agreed to take his wages in red herrings: "The sayd John Straongne granted no more to be taken for hys wagys than a cadoful of herying and half a barell full of herying. This is to be delivered by Chrystmasse next coming." Southampton Corporation's register for 1432 contains this entry: "Item. Paid the iii. day of Aprill to my master the mayre (M.P. that year), in part payment of his Parliament wages, xls." It seems that wages became uncertain and irregular, and fluctuated according to an assessment, for in Henry VIII.'s reign another law was passed again, fixing them at the rate ordered by that of Edward II.

Members absenting themselves from the House without adequate or reasonable excuse were rigorously punished. A law in Richard II.'s reign declared that "if any person summoned to Parliament do absent himself and come not at the said summons, unless he may reasonably and honestly excuse himself to our Lord the King, he shall be amersed or otherwise punished according as of old times hath been used to be done within the same realm in the said law." Committal to prison, fines, or the forfeiture of their wages were some of the means used to keep members to their duties, but hunting with the King was another matter, the following being recorded in James I.'s time: "Sir Robert Wroth hath leave to absent himself for a se'nnight, upon the King's hunting in the forest; hath leave, paying a buck to Mr. Speaker." In later Parliaments fines were inflicted for absence, but the practice ceased altogther towards the close of the seventeenth century.

How few there are like the charming lady in one of Brillat-Savarin's anecdotes! How few there are who know what a good dinner is! But she did, although she had been brought up in an artificial school. She had called on a simple cure to offer alms for his poor, and she did not know that cures dine in the middle of the day. Dinner had just been announced, and the cure asked her to dine with him. She consented. It was a new era in her life. After that culinary complications became vulgar in her eyes, pate de foie gras and cream laden sauces disgusted her, and even Nesselrode pudding, unless made by an artist, made her unhappy. As for liqueurs, she learned to regard a liking for them as a symptom of advancing age.

It was a fast day, and this made perfection all the more difficult to attain on the part of the cure's old servant, Juliette. The tablecloth glistened, the porcelain was exquisitely white and the plates were kept hot over boiling water. The soup was bisque of crabs, followed by a salmon trout, with a sauce admirably proportioned, and then came an omelet of fish roe, so round, so odorous, so redolent of parsley and chives, that for a moment all conversation stopped. A salad, on the leaves of which light, dewlike drops quivered, preceded the dessert of three luscious pears, a cheese resembling Camembert and a pot of conserves. The cure did not say grace until he and his guest had sipped from fragile, but not costly, cups the limpid and hot Mocha. "No liqueurs," the cure said. "For my friends, yes. But no strong drinks for me. They are the resources of age."

It is recorded that the lady was affected almost to tears by this combination of simplicity and elegance. It was a revelation, and to this appreciative marquise the introduction of the famous omelet au thon, the secret of which was almost lost in the revolution, into Parisian society is due.—Maurice F. Egan in Smart Set.

Seventeen and Twenty

By KATHERINE M. YATES

Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure

"Marie, I've some news for you. Run up and put on your best bib and tucker, quick."

Marie dropped her novel and sat up in the hammock, blinking her eyes at the sunlight and the tall figure which obstructed it.

"What on earth! You don't mean the advent of an eligible man in this out of the way hole?"

"That's just it!" Elizabeth, slender, willowy and thirty, balanced herself on the arm of a veranda chair. "I just saw the register, and Captain Bleazby has arrived!"

There was a note of such genuine pleasure in her tone that Marie dropped back into a reclining posture, with her hands behind her head. "Well," she said slowly and disgustedly, "if you are so wonderfully glad, what is the use of my putting on the bib and tucker. Who is he, anyway?"

"HE HASN'T EVEN KISSED ME!"

"Marie! Goosie! Don't be foolish! Haven't I always taken a grandmotherly interest in you and tried my best to find a satisfactory husband for you? Now, here is Captain Bleazby, the very epitome of perfection, falling right into your hand. Of course I'm glad."

"But if you like him so much"—persisted Marie.

"Fudge!" Elizabeth's lip curled. "He's younger than I am. I thought I told you that. He was my sweetheart ten years ago. He was only seventeen, and I was twenty. Think of the difference between seventeen and twenty! Of course I didn't care anything about him, but he was an awfully nice boy and splendid company, and he thought that he was so terribly in love." Elizabeth leaned against the back of the chair and smiled reminiscently.

Marie sat up again, her face showing renewed interest. "What are you smiling at? It's an incident. I know by your eyes. Tell me about it and then I'll know his character better and how to captivate him."

Elizabeth's face flushed, and she laughed guiltily. "Oh, it was nothing. I was just thinking of the last time I saw him. He was going to New York, and he came to make his adieus. I walked down to the gate with him in the moonlight and—and he kissed me goodby." Again the flush crept over her face and the fascinating corners of her mouth curled upward in spite of herself, while the gray eyes, shining with merriment, kept themselves fixed persistently upon the toe of her patent leather slipper.

Marie gazed at her curiously. "Well, what was there so amusing about that?" she inquired tentatively.

"Oh, the kiss itself, it was so funny. Positively the funniest one that I ever had in all my life. It was the first time that he had ever kissed me, and—and—well, it was exactly the kind of a kiss that he would have given to his grandmother."

Both of the girls laughed.

"Really, Marie, you've no idea how funny it was. Such a gentle, pretty little kiss. If it had not been for the shadow of the lilac bush he certainly would have seen me laugh. But there, he was a dear boy." Elizabeth's tone took on a little self reproach. "And it's a shame to laugh at him; but, truly, I shall remember that kiss as long as I live."

"And is he still a dear boy?" asked Marie maliciously.

"How do I know? I've never seen him from that day to this. He quite distinguished himself in the war; went as a volunteer, a rough rider or something. He was awfully fond of the military and cavalry even as a boy. Now do run along and fix up, Marie, and I'll watch for an opportunity to renew old acquaintance and say a good word for you. And, Marie, don't disappoint me this time, for he is just exactly the man for you."

Marie rose lazily. "Well, then, see that you keep in the background, my lady, or perhaps the old love"—

"Marie, don't be silly! Think of the difference between seventeen and twenty! I don't want to take a boy to raise."

Captain Bleazby proved to be an exceedingly tall and well set up "boy," and seemed to fall in with the plans laid for him with remarkable facility, for during the following three weeks pretty Marie Nesbit and her graceful chaperon were rarely seen without a tall military figure in attendance, carrying golf clubs or handling oars or reins. Marie seemed to enjoy herself tremendously, so much so that Elizabeth occasionally glanced at her uneasily and then up at the tall captain, and when she had looked away again Marie glanced at her mischievously and then up at the tall captain.

The end of the captain's stay was at hand. After the first week the girls had not discussed him as they did in the beginning; in fact they had rather avoided the mention of his name when they were alone, and sometimes awkward silence fell between them. The morning before the day set for his departure Marie was swinging drowsily in the hammock and Elizabeth sat beside her with a book. Marie looked out lazily beneath her lids.

"Captain Bleazby goes tomorrow, doesn't he?" she asked suddenly.

Elizabeth read on to the end of the paragraph and then laid down her book. "Yes, I believe so," she said, looking off over the lake.

Marie's lashes shaded her eyes. "Well," she said meditatively, "evidently the campaign has been a failure. He hasn't even kissed me."

The pink color stole up around Elizabeth's temple, and Marie went on:

"It's an awful disappointment. I didn't care so much about marrying him, but I would like to know whether in ten years he has learned to kiss. Do you suppose he has, Elizabeth?"

Elizabeth's lips were pressed quite tightly together. "Probably," she answered briefly.

"And Elizabeth," continued the incorrigible Marie speculatively, "if he has, who do you suppose taught him? Did you ever think of that?"

Two tiny wrinkles appeared between Elizabeth's soft eyebrows, but she made no reply.

Marie yawned and placed a hand over her mouth. "I wouldn't in the least have minded teaching him. Would you, Elizabeth?"

No answer.

"Have you noticed, Elizabeth," she went on, "that there is not nearly so much difference between twenty-seven and thirty as there is between seventeen and twenty? I call that a very curious mathematical verity. Don't you really think so?"

Receiving no reply, she returned to the original proposition. "But he doesn't really look as if he needed instruction. Do you think he does, Elizabeth?"

But Elizabeth had fled.

The next evening Marie came softly behind her friend as she sat alone on the veranda, placing a soft little hand upon either cheek. "Elizabeth," she whispered, "has he learned how?"

She felt the cheeks grow warm beneath her palms, and Elizabeth caught the soft hands lovingly in hers.

"Yes," she whispered.

Company Privileges.

That company privileges can be abused is readily seen from the following incident:

When Bessie, a four-year-old, came to live next door to Susie, another four-year-old, it did not take long for an acquaintance to ripen into an intimate friendship. Susie had been taught to give her company always the first choice of goodies and privileges, but as her visitors had been different children, and the visits not very frequent, complications had not arisen. With Bessie, however, as her visits grew to be everyday affairs and all day affairs, and as the visiting was all on one side, the situation grew perplexing. One day Susie's mamma heard the following alarming conversation:

Bessie—You shut up.

Susie—I won't. You shut up yourself.

"Mrs. G.," piped Bessie's voice, "Susie told me to shut up."

"But, Bessie," replied Mrs. G., "I heard you tell Susie to shut up first."

"Well," said Bessie, with a pout, "ain't I her cumptny?"—Anaconda Standard.

An Unfailing Test.

"I've just learned a new charm to tell whether or not a man loves you," said the girl with golden hair.

"What is it?" asked the girl with the new diamond ring.

"Why, you take four or five apple seeds and name each of them for a particular man and place them—the apple seeds, I mean—on the stove, and the first one that pops is the one that loves you."

"Humph!" mused the girl with the new diamond ring, absentmindedly twisting that piece of jewelry about her finger. "I know a surer way than that."

"You do?"

"Yes, indeed. You take one particular man and place him on the sofa in the drawing room and sit close to him, with the light a little low, and look up to him very attentively, and if he doesn't pop you know it's time to put another man on the sofa."

Legend of the Tonkawa Tribe.

The early history of the Tonkawa Indians is wrapped in mystery. A legend exists that at an early period the earth was covered with Tonkawa Indians and that a great flood came and scattered in all directions the tribes, who never again came together. The oldest living members date back their knowledge of the tribe from the first authentic location of which we possess any record. That is in the Wichita mountain country of what now constitutes south central Oklahoma. During the great civil conflict the Tonkawas remained neutral. This attitude during the war brought upon the Tonkawas the hatred of the Comanches, Caddoes, Wichitas, Delawares, Shawnees and Kickapoos, who combined their united efforts in an attempt to wipe out the entire nation of Tonkawas. The attack was made in true Indian fashion, and over 2,300 Tonkawas were killed.—Kansas City Journal.

Rev. Mr. Weeks, a Baptist minister known in this city, made some silly remarks in his pulpit last Sunday about the Dundonald reception. He said, among other things, that the cheering for Dundonald was "an expression of the national thirst for blood." What nonsense! The national thirst at present, we venture to believe, is more for ice cream soda than blood. The people of Toronto sympathized with Dundonald because he had been unfairly treated. It is a pity Mr. Weeks made such a foolish speech. It will be months before people forget it.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

Tom Bowens' Love

...By...

JAMES NORFLEET

Copyright, 1904, by K. M. Whitehead

The girl of the "I. X. L." ranch was Nora Davis, niece of the proprietor, who was passing a year in the far west by the advice of her doctor. The presence of a woman at the ranch house was no strange thing, as Mrs. Davis was there and had two or three women helpers, but the sight of a good looking girl of twenty riding and walking about kept the cowboys in a state of excitement.

Soon after the arrival of Miss Nora the jokers began to level their shafts at Tom Bowens. Tom was no cowboy, and was, therefore, looked down upon with good natured contempt. He was a poor rider, and he owned to a lack of nerve, and he had, therefore, been employed as a general "chore man." It was announced by the jokers that Tom had fallen head over heels in love with the young lady and would soon propose marriage.

Tom was too bewildered to deny or affirm. He had only caught sight of the girl once or twice and had then gazed upon her as something new in the menagerie line. The chaff set him to thinking, however. He began to wonder if he was not in love with the girl, and within three or four days he had convinced himself that he was. He was unlettered, uncouth and without a dollar to his name, but it did not occur to him that those things barred him out of the race. He acknowledged his passion to the men about him, but had opportunity been offered him a hundred times over he would not have broached the matter to the girl by word or look. Some time in the future, he reasoned to himself—some time after he had loved a long, long time and got to be a rich cattle owner, and the squint had been taken out of his eyes and the crook out of his legs—he might declare his love, but not till then.

The boys on the ranch had other things to think of besides guying Tom Bowens, but they let up on him for only a few days at a time, and, therefore, there was little chance for his love to wane. It happened, too, that when Miss Nora went to ride by herself Tom was sent along to gallop about fifty feet in the rear and act as groom. She was somewhat haughty, and she was something of an aristocrat, but she was no snob. She spoke to her groom with a smile, and on many occasions drew him out regarding ranch life and its work and adventures. He was always respectful to a degree, and the thought never entered her head that he aspired.

"YOU'LL GET AWAY ALL RIGHT, AND YOU'LL TELL 'EM AT THE HOUSE."

After her first three months at the ranch there came an Indian scare. A band had broken away from the reservation and taken to the foothills and killed stock and a man or two. The daily gallops were not interrupted, but shortened, and Tom Bowens, who was a good shot, if no cowboy, buckled on a pair of revolvers every time he was sent to act as guard and groom. Soldiers were ordered out to drive the breakaways back, and after a few days the scare subsided. Some of the red men surrendered and returned to accept the beef and blankets of the Great Father, but half a dozen stood out for the warpath and dodged the soldiers and remained in the hills. They were cute enough to remain quiescent until forgotten, and then they one day emerged from their hiding place in search of scalps. It happened to be a day on which Miss Nora was taking a longer ride than usual, and it was fated that they should be brought together.

After riding a straight twelve miles out from the ranch the girl halted her horse at the mouth of Wolf pass. It was a ravine or gulch 300 feet long cutting through the hills. Tom Bowens was with her, as usual, and he held her horse as she dismounted and wandered about among the bowlders to cull a flower here and there. As he watched her he fell to musing. His love was growing day by day, but he was successfully concealing it. When would the time come to reveal it? When revealed would it be reciprocated? All of a sudden the thought came to him for the first time:

"Can a man like me ever hope to win a girl like her?"

Tom was scared at the thought, and he began to size himself up. He had often been called "Bow Legs" and "Squint Eye." He knew that he was "off" in looks; he was uneducated; he was without means. He was only a "chore man" at $20 a month on a ranch, without the slightest prospect of rising higher. For the first time he realized the gulf between them. He had been an idiot, he admitted to himself, but he would be an idiot no longer. He would cease to love—go away—fall in love with the cook as a counterbalance.

He was thinking harder than he had ever thought before when a slight noise in the pass startled him, and he thought he made out a human figure skulking about. If it was a human figure it could only be that of one of the renegade Indians, and if he was skulking he meant murder. Tom Bowens had been charged with a lack of nerve and had always been ready to admit it. He had never been tried out, and, therefore, did not know himself. Within a minute after catching sight of the skulking figure he had turned the horses and was walking them slowly back toward the girl, whistling as he went. She looked up in surprise as he drew near, and he carelessly dismounted and calmly said:

"Miss Nora, don't be startled at what I say. There are Indians in the pass. I have seen one of them, and there is probably half a dozen. I want you to get on your horse and ride off slowly for a ways and then ride like fire for the ranch."

"Do you mean it?" asked Nora in a puzzled way.

"But you—you"— she asked as he lifted her into the saddle.

"I'm going to stay here a bit. The Indians must have their ponies in there with 'em, and they'd overhaul me before I got a mile away. Don't stop now, but ride on. You'll get away all right, and you'll tell 'em at the house."

She would have said more, but he gave her horse a slap, and the animal moved forward. His own would have followed, but he made it fast to a bush and then went whistling back to the mouth of the pass and dropped behind a bowlder and drew one of his revolvers. Five, seven, ten minutes passed. Then came a yell from the Indians, who had been tricked, and a band of six rushed out. Pop, pop, pop, went Tom's revolver, and then they closed in on him, and all was over.

Two hours later when a dozen cowboys rode up they found two dead Indians and the trail of a wounded one, and Tom Bowens lay there stiff and cold, with a smile on his face. He couldn't win the girl he loved, but he had died for her.

The Queen of Romance.

An English lady tells a story of Queen Victoria which she knows is true. Three children were walking along the road between Windsor and Stoke Pogis. They heard the sound of carriage wheels. It was the queen's carriage, and she was in it.

The oldest child, a little boy, had been reading oriental stories and fairy lore. He knew what was due to a queen, and cried to the others:

"Get down flat in the dust before the carriage, and we'll all call out at once, 'O queen, live forever!'"

Down went the three little bodies flat in the dust, much to the mystification of the coachman, who reined up sharply.

The queen leaned forward and asked: "What in the world is the matter, children? Are you frightened?"

Three voices came out of the dust in a smothered treble.

"Yes, O queen!"

Then there was a pause, and one reproachful voice said, "There, we forgot the 'live forever part.'"

The queen grasped the situation and laughed aloud, as her coachman afterward said, "more heartily than she had laughed for years."

A Tiger's Charge.

A writer in the Bombay Gazette describes the rare experience of seeing the charge of a famous man eating tiger which ended harmlessly. "A camel with a slipping load had," the writer says, "been halted not far from his lair, when with a 'wrouff' (once heard never to be forgotten) the tiger charged for the man leading the camel. The tiger, I have no doubt, would have carried off the camel man, but when he saw the long, and to him unfamiliar, neck of a camel coming between him and his intended victim I dare say he thought things were not quite as he had calculated. Anyway, he paused, casually surveyed the whole party and, with tail erect, calmly walked back into the jungle. The camel man was either so frightened or the whole thing from beginning to end had occupied so short a time (less than a minute, I should judge) that he did not stir from the place where he was when the tiger first made his attack."

An Omission to Be Rectified.

A German nobleman, in course of a visit to New York, commended the wines of America. He praised especially the California red wines, which seemed, he said, to be exceedingly pure. Then, apropos of wine's purity, he narrated a recent happening in Berlin.

"A Berlin vintner," he said, "was accused of selling a wine made of chemicals. He was brought to court, found guilty and fined. After he had paid his fine he approached the chemist whose testimony had convicted him. 'How did you know,' he asked curiously, 'that my wine was manufactured?'

"'Because it contained no bitartrate of potash,' said the chemist. 'In natural wines bitartrate of potash is always found.'

"'Thanks,' said the vintner in a tone of relief. 'It will be found in my wines hereafter.'"—New York Tribune.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation—Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 66 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

THE CRIME OF THE CENTURY

BY RODRIGUES OTTOLENGUI,

Author of "An Artist In Crime," "A Conflict of Evidence," "A Modern Wizard," "Final Proof," Etc.

Copyright, 1896, by G. P. Putnam's Sons. All rights reserved.

A LETTER.

MY DEAR WALTER—Let me ask you to turn back the pages of memory until you reach that one upon which is inscribed the record of our first night in camp on the banks of Massabesic. You remember that we named the beautiful spot "Idalia," and you will recall the wondrous aurora which so brilliantly illuminated the broad expanse of the heavens, which covered us as we rocked gently in our boat, waiting vainly for the nibble which never came. What a night that was! We did not catch anything—not even a cold, thanks to our warm cardigans—but we gazed upon the gaudy panorama in the skies and felt the littleness of self, as man ever must when viewing the marvels of nature.

But the northern lights dimmed and died away at last, and we talked of lesser things, finally reaching that ever absorbing topic, our own work. In time we discussed certain stories which I had already published, and I remember how severely you criticised what you called my "stupid soaring into the realms of the impossible" when, in your opinion, you thought that I ought rather to confine myself to "the probabilities of everyday life."

How often during that holiday did you use the phrase "in all human probability" till at last we all made jest of your habit, when finally you silenced me by saying, "At any rate, your stories are not within human probability!"

Well, my friend, I have often thought over your words, even though I have not yet been convinced that the most interesting phases of human life are those which are of most common occurrence. After all, the main object of fiction is to entertain, and, even though a little instructive lesson may be deftly interwoven with the plot, I fear that the modern novel is sometimes too highly spiced with philosophic dissertations. And in seeking to entertain is it not best to offer something out of the common, something a little different from the dull routine of daily experience?

I send you herewith a copy of my new story. With what zest you will rush through its pages seeking for incidents which may not be "within human probability!" But I warn you that in these pages there are hidden many traps for you. The plot is purely fiction, but every character has a prototype in life. Those incidents which you will be most eager to call "impossible" have all happened.

You may doubt whether a foundling may become an heiress to $5,000,000 and may also develop into a society lady, but the original of this character was a debutante last season, and the main facts are true.

You may doubt the possibility of the Burglar's Social union, but the floating gambling saloon flourished in our harbor very recently, and I visited it in company with a man who is practically at the head of the criminal fraternity of the metropolis. This man is a college graduate, has never been arrested, and he dominates a great band of "crooks," so that, however implicated he may be in their crimes, they never "peach," but when convicted serve their sentences without betraying this master hand. On that boat I met at least 50 men whom society would like to see in Sing Sing.

But I do not intend to point out all the pitfalls for you. Go ahead with your search for "impossibilities," and when you have found them all send your list to me, and I will gleefully tell you, for your bewilderment, which have been borrowed from life.

Another word. I know that you dislike "dialect," and I agree with you in the main. Nevertheless "dialect" is sometimes essential. It should never be the object of the story teller to show his acquaintance with people who distort English, but when an author reaches a locality where all love of grammer is dead it would be absurd for him to put rounded periods in the mouths of his characters. Therefore excuse the language of my "slum people." Just one thing more. You may write to me that "slum people" do not speak even as well as I make them, but your views are taken from the Bowery tough of stageland, and believe me that in a hundred visits to the poverty districts I have never met that exaggerated individual. Very sincerely yours, RODRIGUES OTTOLENGUI.

CHAPTER I.

A MYSTERIOUS CASE.

"I am delighted to see you," exclaimed Mr. Mitchel, entering his library and advancing to meet his visitor, with hand outstretched in cordial greeting. "Here I have been over to the other side, and in London, Paris, Berlin, Rome—in fact, everywhere—I find that our fame has preceded us. As soon as a man learned that my name is Leroy Mitchel he would ply me with questions about the great New York detective, Mr. Barnes. And now, within 24 hours after leaving shipboard, here you are in propria persona to answer for yourself. Well, tell me, what is the latest, the newest, the most mysterious, case which may be troubling your waking hours and disturbing your slumbers with nightmares of escaping criminals and crimes undiscovered? There is some great case on hand, I am sure, or you would not look me up so quickly. But of course you have solved it, eh? You do not need any hints from me?" Here he nudged Mr. Barnes playfully, while a sly twinkle enlivened his eye.

"No; I cannot say that I have solved it yet," replied Mr. Barnes, releasing his hand from Mr. Mitchel's hearty grasp and resuming his seat. "In fact, if I had done so, I suppose I should not be here."

"Just so," said Mr. Mitchel, with a dry laugh.

"I saw your name in the published list of arrivals by the Paris," continued Mr. Barnes, "and, as I knew that the case with which I am occupied would interest you, I thought I would look in and talk it over with you."

"And incidentally get my assistance, eh?"

"Nothing would please me better than to have your co-operation," said Mr. Barnes eagerly. "May I count upon it?"

"That must depend upon the nature of your case. What is it—a common police court affair, which has baffled the uniformed force because the criminal, by chance or design, has managed to enshroud the facts with a thin veil of mystery, or have you really run across a classic crime?"

"It will prove to be the crime of the century," said the detective, with a touch of enthusiasm in his voice.

"The crime of the century!" repeated Mr. Mitchel musingly. "You speak without fully weighing your words, Mr. Barnes, a common fault. Every word in the language has a definite meaning, and no two words, unless they be names for the same thing, express the same shade of thought. If this be true of a single word, how much more so must it be when we unite several into a phrase! This one, 'the crime of the century,' means more than you have perhaps intended to convey. The crime of the century has not been committed by one man. It is too stupendous. It is the problem to which I myself have given much study without having as yet reached any ultimate conclusions. No, Mr. Barnes. Your case is not the crime of the century. Mine is. Some day I will tell you about it—when I have traced it to the end, you know. But now about your case."

"Mr. Mitchel," said Mr. Barnes, "I do not know what crime it is to which you have given so much attention and which you choose to consider so great, but if it be more startling, more mysterious or more difficult to unravel than the one upon which I am engaged then I shall look forward with keen expectancy to the time when you can give me the history of it."

"I may perhaps talk it over with you some day. I may even avail myself of your assistance. But tell me of your affair. It may have a connection with mine, after all. I should not be at all surprised."

"Ah! You have discovered that, have you!"

"Ah! You have discovered that, have you?"

Mr. Mitchel said this so quickly that Mr. Barnes was puzzled. He gazed at Mr. Mitchel intently for a moment and then replied without having fully comprehended his companion's meaning.

"Why, yes," said he. "It is certainly a fact that one crime may lead to another. But what point do you make of that?"

"An important one," said Mr. Mitchel, with a wave of his hand toward his guest. "I find that I am in the presence of a detective with brains enough to look beyond the immediate case in hand, for surely, if you have found by experience that crime breeds crime—pardon the harsh phrase, which, however, exactly expresses the truth—it follows that you cannot hope to fully comprehend a specified case until you have searched back into the past to learn whether it be merely a result of previous wrongdoing or an initial departure from rectitude. You agree with me?"

"Oh, I suppose so, theoretically at least, though you are carrying me deeper than a practical detective would go."

"Oh, very well! We will go no deeper." Mr. Mitchel dismissed the line of thought with that incisive manner so peculiar to himself. "I did not know how far you would care to go. We will return to the shallow waters of regular detective work, by all means. Pardon the digression and proceed with your narrative."

Mr. Barnes felt slightly annoyed. He realized that Mr. Mitchel was depreciating his talents, placing him on the plane of the common thief taker, a plane which he knew that Mr. Mitchel considered a very low one intellectually. Nevertheless he did not even now know wherein he had offended. Was it not true that the practical detective should confine himself to the immediate facts connected with the crime in hand, if he hoped to bring the wrongdoer to justice, rather than to make speculative pilgrimages into the remote past? He still believed so, yet it annoyed him to find that he was evidently at variance with Mr. Mitchel on this point, for, though he thought that gentleman egotistical in the highest degree, he fully appreciated his intellectual capabilities. He would now have preferred to discuss the question, but it was not easy to reopen the subject, Mr. Mitchel having dismissed the topic. This made him irritable, as he often was when in Mr. Mitchel's society, despite the uniform courtesy with which he was always treated. Mr. Barnes therefore found himself obliged to confine himself to the relation of his case.

"Well, then," began the detective after a pause, "about a week ago a most startling murder aroused the interest of the community. The victim was no less a man than Matthew Mora, a many times millionaire, prominent in Wall street banking circles as well as in Fifth avenue drawing rooms and conspicuous for his many deeds of philanthropy."

"How was the killing effected?"

"In a most brutally horrible manner. The old man was clubbed to death. This is not speculation, but fact. The murderer did not deign to hide the weapon, but left it upon the floor near the body. This was shrewd, because had he taken it away from the house its discovery might have been a clew which would have led us to a solution. But as it appears that the bludgeon was one of a collection of Indian implements of war owned by Mr. Mora its presence in the bedroom tells us nothing."

"Oh, yes, it tells you something!" interjected Mr. Mitchel. "Every known fact connected with a crime tells its quota of the truth and is therefore more important than the theoretical or circumstantial evidence which may be gathered."

"Of course I know that," said the detective testily. "What I mean is that the weapon left in the room, having belonged to the dead man, gives us no direct clew to the identity of the murderer. It does, however, tell us something, and it may even, however indirectly, point to the right man. For example, it is positive that the murderer did not bring this club with him. From this postulate there are two possible deductions—first, the man may not have intended murder when he entered the house; second, he may not have entered the house at all."

"Ah! Now you are doing better, Mr. Barnes," said Mr. Mitchel, with a pleasant smile.

"You mean that the criminal may have been an inmate of the house and therefore did not need to look for a weapon, being familiar with those at hand, eh?"

"Exactly. And this is the more plausible of the two theories because the Indian weapons were kept locked in a case in the library on the floor below Mr. Mora's bedchamber."

"This case was not broken open, I suppose?"

"No; but as the key was commonly in the lock this counts for nothing. The condition of the cabinet, however, together with the weapon used, furnishes us with another safe deduction. As you know, it is often difficult to decide whether a crime be premeditated or not. In this instance it was certainly planned."

"This is interesting. How do you prove it?"

"The cabinet, as I have said, is usually locked, though the key is left sticking. On the morning after the murder the door was found open. Thus it is evident that the master of the house had not himself taken the club to his room, for, being a man of exceedingly orderly habits, he would have locked the door. No; the murderer, knowing that a weapon of this kind was to be had, took it from the cabinet, but in his excited or abstracted frame of mind he might naturally have left the door open."

"You said awhile ago, Mr. Barnes, that the more plausible theory is that the criminal was an inmate of the house. This may be, but do not overlook the possibility that, coming from outside and planning against detection, the murderer may have chosen this weapon for the very reason that it would divert the attention of a detective away from himself and toward some other man. He would need, of course, to have knowledge of the existence of the Indian weapons and of the fact that they were within easy reach."

"He would also have needed the opportunity of entering the house and of escaping unobserved. Now, in the first place, the only way of getting into the house is through the front door, a large storage warehouse occupying all of the street at the back, and, secondly, Mr. Mora had a special night watchman patrolling the front of his premises."

"And this night watchman saw no one go in or come out of the house?"

"On the contrary, he saw a man do both. This man entered through the front door, using a latchkey, some time between 1 and 2 o'clock. He came out again about an hour later. But the watchman recognized him both times. It was Matthew Mora, Jr."

"The son?"

"The only son."

"And heir, I suppose?"

"And heir. The only child. Mother dead."

"That is suspicious."

"Very."

"Anything else against the young man?"

"He returned to the house at 5 o'clock in the morning, differently dressed and"—

"Differently dressed, you say?"

"Yes. Of this the watchman is positive."

"That ought to be significant."

"I should say so. He went in, but within a few minutes he emerged again in great excitement. Passing the watchman, he exclaimed: 'My father has been murdered! Let no one enter the house until I return.'"

"And then?"

"Then he went directly to the police station and reported the case."

"A clever young man!"

"You will continue to hold that view the more you hear. Two policemen were detailed to return to the house with him, and the central office was notified, so that within an hour experienced detectives were on the spot. One of these, my friend Mr. Burrows, was kind enough to stop for me and ask me to accompany him, so that I was present at the first official investigation."

"You were fortunate."

"Yes. I always dislike to take up a case after others have moved things about and tramped over the scene of the tragedy. We found the room in great disorder, furniture overturned, the rugs about the room in tangled heaps where the struggling men must have kicked them about, bric-a-brac strewn on the floor and broken—in fact, every evidence to prove that the old man had yielded up his life only after a desperate encounter with his assailant."

"Was he a powerful man? You said he was old."

"Old is a figure of speech. He was something over 50, but he had been an athlete in his youth and could give a good account of himself in a boxing bout at any time. If his son was the murderer, the men were evenly matched. He is not so heavy as his father was, but he is sinewy and has muscles of steel. I found Mr. Mora's watch under the bed, where it must have been knocked from the dressing table. The fall had caused it to stop, and the hands indicated 7 minutes of 2, agreeing with the time during which the watchman testifies that young Mora was at home."

"Yes," said Mr. Mitchell, "but do not go too fast. The watch may have run down. It is uncommon for a good watch to stop merely because it falls to the floor."

"Both of your points are good in theory," replied the detective, "but neither applies in this instance. If a watch runs down, it cannot be started again without winding. By merely shaking this one I set it going, and to make assurance doubly sure I let it run for an hour, when it was still keeping time. Next, though it be true that most watches would not be so easily stopped, this one, for some reason, is very sensitive to a blow. I tried the experiment of pushing it from the table to the floor, and at every attempt I found that it would cease its movement."

"You certainly have been thorough on this point," admitted Mr. Mitchel, "and I presume we may consider it established that the first attack upon Mr. Mora occurred at or near 2 o'clock."

"During the hour when the watchman claims that young Mora was at home," added Mr. Barnes.

"The watchman's testimony must be remembered, certainly," said Mr. Mitchel.

"Of course," continued the detective, "the first theory in these cases is naturally that of the midnight marauder in search of plunder, but a careful examination showed that nothing had been abstracted, though various articles of furniture, and especially Mr. Mora's writing desk, had been ransacked. I ought to mention that an open package containing several thousand dollars in notes was conspicuously in view in a small drawer and was untouched."

"Untouched? Is not that merely a presumption? Why may not this shrewd criminal have taken half or two-thirds of the cash found, leaving the rest, as he did the club, to baffle detectives?"

"I have said that Mr. Mora was most methodical. We found a notebook in which was entered from time to time a detailed account of his worldly possessions. This included a statement of the cash balances in various banks and the cash on hand. Under a date two days previous to the murder is an entry giving the balance of cash on hand, which is only a hundred dollars more than the amount of the notes found in his desk."

"Well, then, if not money, what did the murderer seek in the desk which you say was ransacked?"

"Why not the will?"

"Ah, of course, the will! Do you know that there was a will?"

"His lawyers declare that they made one for him recently—within a month, in fact. He bequeathed one half of his fortune to his son, and the other half was distributed among various charitable institutions."

"What was the total?"

"It is estimated that the fortune amounts to 18 millions."

"One-half of which is nine millions," mused Mr. Mitchel, "enough, quite enough, to be considered an incentive for murder—a legal incentive, I mean."

"Yes. The will cannot be found, and if not found charity loses and young Mora gains nine millions. Now we come to another point. We—that is, I—found blood stains upon the young man's clothing."

"Did I not understand you to say that he came back to the house in different clothing?"

"That could only apply to his outer

Summer Clearing Sale of Odds & Ends In China

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly—in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

After The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices. Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen, for we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

MASSASSAGA

Mrs. James Houston left last week to visit friends in Manitoba.

Mrs. Howard Huff and Miss Lorna Post were visiting at Mr. Asa Broad's one day last week.

Miss Ethel Jose was visiting friends in Belleville a couple of days last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Seeley, of Sidney, were visiting their daughter, Mrs. Percy Catheral, on Sunday last.

There is a large number of city people camping out along our beautiful Massassaga Point.

Mr. Howard Wallbridge was visiting friends in Belleville on Sunday evening last.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Caldan, of Victoria, were visiting at Mr. Asa Broad's on Sunday last.

Mr. Edgar Adams, who is still camping at Simonds' Point, was visiting friends here on Sunday last.

Quite a number from here attended the A.O.U.W. sermon at Roblin's Mills on Sunday last.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Ketcheson of Fish Lake, were visiting at Mr. Alfred Anderson's on Sunday last.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

TURNER'S SETTLEMENT.

The farmers here are rushing the hay crop in and getting ready to cut the fast ripening fall grain. Potatoes promise a bumper crop, but the corn crop is mostly in a backward state.

Misses Blanche and Bella Baker, of Trenton, have been spending the past week here visiting their uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. A. Ward, and calling on other friends.

The flow of milk keeps up well, but some of our farmers who bought $60 cows at auction sales last winter have got the idea they paid too dear for the whistle, with cheese selling at seven and a half cents per pound, after the booming prices of the past two years.

Mr. Wm. Bleecker, of Belleville, is preparing to build a dwelling house on his farm here on the site of the one he had burned down last December, and Mr. S. Roblin is also going to build a dwelling, as he lost also by fire last fall.

Mr. J. A. Bird has been tearing down and rebuilding his house this summer, and now has one of the neatest looking and best arranged houses in the place. He is one of our most enterprising farmers and does nothing in a half-way manner in any line.

The Baptist S. S. picnic at Oak Hill Lake on Wednesday last was slimly attended. Interest in these things seems to be waning. It ought not to be so. People need waking up in these matters.

Mr. A. Ward has disposed of the large factory on the Cooley estate to Mr. H. Bird, of Thurlow, for barn purposes, as he lost his barn buildings in May last and had to rebuild at once for storing this season's crop. It was taken down and put up again in a short time, without accident and no loss worth speaking of.

How He Evaded the Suicide Law.

Lord Chief Justice Hankford of England, who lived in a former century, notwithstanding his high position became so tired of life that he determined to shuffle off this mortal coil. But he feared to commit suicide, because at the time a verdict of felo de se followed as a matter of course and the body of the suicide was buried at four crossroads, with a stake thrust through it. Further, he had to avert the consequences to his relatives of forfeiture of his goods, which was also one of the penalties for self destruction. He adopted a novel expedient. Several of his deer having been stolen, he gave orders to his keepers to shoot any person they met in or near the park at night who did not immediately stand when challenged. Then on a dark night he threw himself in the path of the keepers and, not answering the challenge, was shot dead on the spot. The stump of an old oak under which he fell still marks the scene of the tragedy and goes to this day by the name of Hankford's oak.

"Save the Mark."

The ancient use of a cross instead of a signature was universal alike by those who could and by those who could not write. It was a symbol of an oath from its earliest associations. On this account Charles Knight, in his notes on "The Pictorial Shakespeare," explains the expression "God save the mark" (Henry IV.) as a form of ejaculation approaching to the form of an oath. Kelly, in his "Comments on Scotch Proverbs," observes that the Scots, when they used to compare person to person, used the expression, "Save the mark." Another explanation of the expression is that in archery when an archer shot well it was the custom to cry out, "God save the mark"—that is, prevent any one coming after to hit the same mark and thereby displace the arrow. Ironically, it was said to a novice whose arrow struck nowhere.

Blood as a Tree Fertilizer.

For several seasons a very ancient walnut, with long, gaunt boughs, carrying much dead wood, had been struggling to live, but each year manifested signs that its life was fast disappearing. The keeper in front of whose house the tree stood took to slinging the carcass of each deer he killed over one of its boughs for dressing. During the process all the blood dripped on the ground and was absorbed. The following spring this tree put forth an astonishing crop of leaves, and in less than three seasons it was making new wood and showing all the vigor which had characterized it thirty years before. Its renewed youth was entirely attributable to the fertilizing properties of the blood with which it had been so liberally dressed.—Country Gentleman.

DRESS REFORM.

No Danger That the Graces of Costume Will Vanish.

As women advance in the scale of progress will they leave the love of dress behind? Fifty odd years ago, when the first women's rights convention met in New England, this did not seem a debatable question. Short hair and bloomers characterized the feminine champions of the cause. Dress was proclaimed as one of the vanities from which the sex was to be emancipated. But fifty years have passed, and now Miss Susan B. Anthony, in her gracious and serene old age, wears point lace, like any other woman fortunate enough to possess it. The leaders of a suffrage convention and those of a whist club could be shaken up together nowadays, and no one would know which was which as far as their clothes were concerned. The advanced woman no longer cuts her hair short, and the speaker at a woman's club is often the most daintily gowned woman in the room. The dress of the future will follow the conditions of the future woman. It is prettier and daintier today than it ever was, and as long as women continue pretty and dainty there is little fear that the graces of costume will vanish. It would be a graver world if they did. Dress reform always has a field, but when it is a reform against nature no one need worry lest it should succeed. Dress is safe in the hands of the women of today, and ought to be safer still in the hands of the women of tomorrow. The alarmist has small cause for fear on that score.—Harper's Bazar.

THE BABY'S SLEEP.

If It Be Sound and Refreshing Don't Fear Its Length.

The young mother is usually distressed because she thinks her baby sleeps too much, but she worries herself unnecessarily. For the first three months an infant's time, provided it is in good health, is almost entirely spent in sleep. It wakes when hungry, and being fed goes to sleep again.

For the first two months it should be given an extra amount of bed covering, more than twice as much as is needed by an adult, because an infant's power of generating heat is very feeble. After two months the covering should be reduced, and particular care should be taken that it does not cover the child's face.

Little noise or talking should be allowed, because even if it does not wake the child it renders the sleep disturbed and unrefreshing. The room should be kept quiet and darkened during the daytime by drawing the blinds or closing the shutters.

The length of time required for sleep gradually gets less as the child becomes older, but until the growth is complete a great deal more sleep is required than afterward. As long as the sleep is sound and refreshing it is not too long and is required, but dozing between waking and sleeping does more harm than good.—New York Press.

BEAUTY SPOTS.

Scars which are not deep may be removed by the daily rubbing with cocoa butter.

Never scrape the finger nails; it will thicken and make them uneven and full of ridges.

Pretty throats are never yellow; they are white, firm and smooth. Let nature come to the rescue. Discard tight ribbons; they make wrinkles.

For thin eyebrows add three grains of muriate of quinine to one teaspoonful of vaseline and one of lanolin; mix thoroughly and apply with a camel's hair brush.

The thickening of the skin brought about by handling golf sticks and tennis rackets can easily be rubbed down and away with pumice stone. Afterward rub into the palms borated vaseline and put on gloves to keep it from rubbing off.

Cold Foods.

A mistake which housekeepers often make is to serve cold food. A meal exclusively of cold food is one of the most difficult to digest. Cold meat, heated up in a little curry, is far more digestible and therefore more nourishing than cold meat alone. Never serve cold slices of meat unless they are accompanied with a little highly seasoned catchup or sauce. Even iced tea, that favorite beverage of summer, is a drink of doubtful value on the dining table. Hot tea heats the stomach and prepares it for its work, while cold tea, like ice water, taken at dinner, retards digestion by chilling the stomach.

Slim Waists.

That gymnastics are more powerful than corsets in making slim waists is the conclusion of Dr. Alice Sugden, director of the girls' "gym" at the University of Michigan. It seems that gymnastic work is compulsory for the girls during their first year at the university and that on entrance and again at the end of the academic year they are measured. Six charts, taken at random, show an increase in strength, in breadth of shoulders and lung capacity and a decrease in the measurement of the waist and hips.

The Nursery.

The nursery ought to face either south or west. If the children sleep in it an eastern exposure with its bright light will waken them too early in the morning, and a north light gives them no sunlight at all. Neither is it wise to have a room under the roof, as the rooms up there have lower ceilings, which make them warm in summer and less protected in winter.

NOTICE OF INTENTION TO PASS A BY-LAW TO ALTER, WIDEN AND DIVERT VICTORIA AVE. AND PINNACLE ST.

To Whom it May Concern:—

Take notice that the Municipal Council of the Corporation of the City of Belleville intend to pass a by-law for the purpose of altering, widening and diverting the northwest corner of Victoria Ave and Pinnacle St. in the City of Belleville by taking in and including with the said streets at that point a part of the Lot known as the Hotel Lot on Henry Carr's plan of the City of Belleville, composed of 592 square feet more or less, and being described as follows:

Commencing at a point on the west limit of Pinnacle St. northward 40 feet from the intersection of the northern limit of Victoria Ave. with the western limit of Pinnacle St.; thence southwesterly on the outside of an arc of the circle, with a radius of 63 feet, to a point on the northern limit of Victoria Ave., 40 feet westward from above described intersection; thence easterly along the northern limit of Victoria Ave. 40 feet to Pinnacle St.; and thence northerly along the westerly limit of Pinnacle St. 40 feet to the place of beginning.

And take notice further that the said by-law will be read a first time and may be finally passed at a meeting of the said Municipal Council on the 1st day of August, 1904, commencing at 8 o'clock in the evening.

And take further notice that any person whose land may be prejudicially affected by the proposed by-law will upon petition be heard either personally or by counsel or solicitor at such meeting of the Council, or if desired at any previous meeting thereof.

And take further notice that the plan of the proposed street may be seen at the office of the City Clerk in the City Hall in the City of Belleville.

Russia Said to be Prepared to Disavow Action of Her Red Sea Fleet.

Claims Orders Were Misunderstood by Fleet's Commander --Malacca at Port Said.

Paris, July 20.—It is learned from a high diplomatic source that Russia is prepared, at least in part, to disavow the action of the Red Sea fleet, because it is claimed the fleet's commander misunderstood orders.

Port Said, Egypt, July 20. — The liner Malacca, seized in the Red Sea by the Russian cruiser Petersburg, arrived here to-day with many indignant passengers on board and her crew prisoners under armed guards.

The passengers were transferred to the Marmora of the same line and will proceed to their destination. They announced their intention of appealing to the British Government for redress.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

(The Globe.)

News comes this morning of an engagement on Friday last near Tatchekiao, the most southerly position held by Russia on the Manchurian railway. The Russian General had posted 5,000 men on the heights seven miles south of the town. General Oku's command has been close to this position for almost two weeks, and on Friday he sent 10,000 men to drive the Russians from the heights. The Times' correspondent says the engagement lasted nine hours, and that the Russians were driven out, although reinforced during the battle. They left two hundred dead on the field. Allowing the proportion of wounded in other recent battles, the Russian loss in killed and wounded must have been between 800 and 900. The Russian losses in the Motien Passes on Sunday are now placed as high as 2,000, but this may be an exaggeration. The Japanese believe that Kuropatkin will make another attempt to recover these passes, which are essential to the safety of his line of retreat from Tatchekiao and Haicheng should retirement become necessary. Retreat, with the Japanese in possession of the passes, would be, as was pointed out in this column a few days ago, more hazardous even than a general engagement at Tatchekiao.

The Japanese and Russians have now met under almost all conditions likely to arise, and there has not yet been placed to the Russian credit a single win. The thing is amazing looked at in detail. At the Yalu the Japanese crossed two rivers and climbed almost precipitous heights. At Kinchow they took a splendidly fortified position bristling with guns, wire entanglements and mines. Military critics say they did there what was regarded as theoretically impossible. At Telissu the Japanese artillery changed the Russian retirement into a rout and killed almost two thousand men. At the Motien Passes, where Russia made her first attack on an entrenched Japanese position, her troops were driven back in confusion by an inferior force. Again at Tatchekiao the Japanese took entrenched heights by assault. The Russian losses in these battles have been at least twenty thousand killed and wounded, while Japan has lost probably less than half that number, her only really great casualties being at Kinchow. In face of all this the only conclusion one can reach is that Japan has fought her great adversary to a standstill, and will in all human probability emerge victorious.

SALVATION ARMY SAID TO WANT TO TAKE IT FROM MENIER, WHO WOULD SELL OUT.

New York, July 19. — During the course of the Salvation Army Congress just held in London, General Booth made the announcement that he was on the point of completing the acquisition of an island of large area for the use of Salvation Army colonies. Pressed for an explanation as to the locality of the island in question he declined to give any further information until all the arrangements in connection with the transfer of the property had been completed. It is now asserted on good authority that the island in question is that of Anticosti, lying at the mouth of the St. Lawrence River, which was purchased some ten years ago for about $150,000, by a Frenchman, Henri Menier, of chocolate manufacturing fame.

Menier has spent almost $2,000,000 on the island, but has apparently tired of it, and has not only decided to waste no more money on the place, but to get rid of it at any cost. Indeed, it is understood that General Booth has secured the island for what is really a merely nominal sum.

Menier has had no end of trouble with Anticosti, first of all, in connection with the eviction of the squatters whom he found there, and then in relation to his attempts to treat the place as if it were an independent sovereignty, instead of part and parcel of the Canadian Dominion, and subject to the laws and rule of the latter. Indeed, at the time of the death of Queen Victoria he sent a telegram of condolence to the Governor-General of Canada phrased in such a manner that Lord Minto, regarding it in the light of a pretension to the sovereignty of the island, declined to accept it.

One very strict rule and law which Henri Menier established on the island was that not a drop of alcoholic liquor should be brought on to it, or drunk there, and any case of infraction of this rule was followed by expulsion. The island has an excellent soil, huge forests and an abundance of fish, and there is no doubt that in the hands of the Salvation Army its resources will be fully developed.

How The Gas Works Are Getting Along.

OVER SEVENTY NEW CONSUMERS ALREADY THIS YEAR — SOMETHING OF INTEREST TO OUR CITIZENS GENERALLY.

The Intelligencer this morning had a short conversation with Ald. Sinclair in regard to the Gas works and matters "touchin' on and appertainin' thereto."

Mr. Baxter, of Detroit, a member of the firm which has the contract for installing the new coal retort system, is in the city, taking measurements, etc., and work will, we were told, begin shortly. It will take three months to finish it. The present oil system will, however, be retained, in case of an emergency arising.

In answer to a question, Ald. Sinclair explained how the committee had decided to award the contract for changing the system to Messrs. Baxter & Young, of Detroit. After the visit of himself and Mr. Thomson to various other places in Ontario, they arrived at the conclusion that a coal retort system was the only up-to-date and economical one, and in their report so recommended to the Council. Then the local authorities, agreeing with them, notified different companies, which were qualified to do the work, of Belleville's intentions, and asked them to send representatives here to look into the matter. The representatives came, inspected the works, and each firm submitted a plan, the blue prints in connection with which can now be seen in the local Gas office. Then the committee had the different plans examined by experts, afterwards accepting the tender which, in the opinion of the experts, was the best. This explanation should satisfy some pessimistic people who have been freely insinuating that the Council bought, as the old saying has it, "a pig in a poke."

"Are you satisfied with the local consumption of fuel gas?" was asked Ald. Sinclair.

"Perfectly," was the reply; "we have had seventy new consumers so far this year, and new services are being put in as fast as we can manage them. We have had some rather irritating delays in regard to inspection of meters, but I hope that will soon be overcome."

"When are you going to equalize the price of lighting and fuel gas?" asked the scribe.

"I predict," said the Alderman, impressively, "that next year you will see the price of lighting and fuel gas the same, and I think, too, that next year you will see a big change in the personnel of the Council."

And he was called away before the newspaper man could ask him what he meant by that last remark.

OVERCOME BY HEAT.

Whilst in attendance at the picnic at Twelve o'Clock Point yesterday, St. Thomas' Rector, Rev. G. R. Beamish, was overcome by the heat, and at first it was feared that he had sustained a severe sunstroke. He, however, revived somewhat shortly after and was brought home in the evening. Although to-day he still feels the effects of his prostration, his condition is much improved.

A False Alarm.

At a few minutes after 10 o'clock last night a telephone message was received at the police station that a small craft and some clothing were upon the shore of the bay, near the hospital. It was estimated that a drowning accident had occurred. An officer investigated the affair and ascertained that two boys had been out in a boat and had pulled it up on the shore for a few minutes, and shortly after rowed away again. They had left a portion of a sail and some other articles near the boat.

A FAVORITE VOCALIST

ONCE MORE DELIGHTS HER BELLEVILLE ADMIRERS —MRS. LEO RIGGS AND PROF. HUNT IN BRIDGE ST. CHURCH LAST NIGHT.

There was, in spite of the warm weather, a very good attendance at Bridge Street Church last night to listen to the organ recital and concert given by Prof. Hunt and Mrs. Leo Riggs (nee DeGuerre). The lady in question was always a popular favorite in the city, and that she has lost none of her talent and power of pleasing was amply evidenced last night. Mrs. Riggs sings about the same as she did when she was soloist in Bridge Street Church. Following is the programme rendered last night:

Batiste— Offertoire — D Major (St. Cecilia) ....Organ
Mr. V. P. Hunt.
Ashford—"Save Me, O God" ......Song
Mrs. Leo Riggs.
Salome—(a) Cantalene A Minor
Lund—(b) Before the Altar, from the Wedding Music
Ambroise Thomas—(c) Gavotte, from Mignon
Mr. Hunt.
Del Riego — "O Dry Those Tears" .... Song
Mrs. Riggs.
Violin Obligato by Miss Sidra Brown.
Flagler—Variations on an American Air ....Organ
Mr. Hunt.
Haydn — "And God Said" ....Recit. and Aria
Haydn—"With Verdure Clad" ....Recit. and Aria
Mrs. Riggs.
C. A. E. Harriss—Fantasia on Church Chimes .... Organ
Mr. Hunt.
I Will Lay Me Down in Peace ...Song
Mrs. Riggs.
John Sebastian Bach—Toccata and Fugue in D. Minor...Organ
Mr. Hunt.

Mrs. Riggs' numbers were all delightful, but especially pleasing was "O Dry Those Tears," which was charmingly sung, Miss Browne's violin obligato being excellently played.

Mr. Hunt was in fine form, his execution in the Flagler and Harriss numbers being superb, while his accompaniments were unobtrusive and played with marked sympathy.

FISHING.

What Would You Do.

Supposin' 'at you had fished all day,
An' you hadn't got a bite;
Supposin' th' shadders wuz gettin' long
An' it was a-comin' night;
Supposin' 'at then you tho't of your friends
Who would laff and jeer at you;
What would you do in a case like that,
What do you s'pose you'd do?

Wal, we'll say 'at you'd give it up
An' doggedly row ashore,
Declarin' 'at fate wuz ag'in you so
It was useless to try no more;
But supposin' you see a man on the bank
With some bass, say a dozen or two,
An' supposin' he'd sell 'em to you fur a song,
What do you s'pose you'd do?

Wouldn't you kind o' smile at him,
An' cautiously look about,
Before you reached deep down in your clothes
To haul you wallet out?
An' wouldn't you lower your voice to say,
"This, you know's 'twixt me an' you?"
Isn't that just th' way you'd act?
Isn't that what you'd do?

An' then when down thro' th' streets of the town
Your admirin' friends, as they'd pass,
Would stop to congratulate you an' ask
Fur the secret of catchin' bass,
Wouldn't you tell 'em fishin' wuz kind of a knack
'At was only acquired by a few?
Isn't that what you'd say now?
Isn't that what you'd do?

Statement Untrue.

Montreal, July 20.—Judge Winchester has arrived in Montreal to wind up the Grand Trunk Pacific alien labor commission, and take up the enquiry into the recent flood of Italian pauper immigrants which invaded Montreal. Sir William Mulock wired Judge Winchester in the following terms: "Have been asked in the House whether the statement of Mr. Griffith is correct that Grand Trunk or Grand Trunk Pacific was furnished daily with verbatim copies of evidence taken by you in connection with present enquiry. What are the facts?" To this Judge Winchester replied: "No evidence whatever has been furnished any one in connection with enquiry. I have myself only received certain portions of it on which to found my interim reports. Griffith's statement untrue."

Wife's Body in Fire Ruins.

Halifax, July 20.—William S. Robinson, charged with the murder of his wife, Theresa Robinson, on the night of May 25th, at Burlington, N.S., was brought before Judge Townsend, Kentville, yesterday. Robinson's house was burned to the ground and the remains of Mrs. Robinson found in the debris mutilated. Robinson, who was first at the scene of the fire, did not attempt to rescue his wife, but went to a neighbor's some distance away, and gave the alarm.

In the Prince of Wales competition at 200 and 600 yards, the Canadians did not do so well. The following is their standing: 13, Pte. Neil Smith, £3; 14, Corp. McGregor, £3.

Alexandra Match.

In the Alexandra, at the same distances, they had better success. The following got into the prize list: 5, Pte. J. G. Goudie, £10; 28, Pte. H. Tyers, £5; 96, Major Moore, £3; 99, Pte. C. S. Scott, £3; 109, Sergt. Crowe, £3; 189, Sergt. Davidson, £2; 190, Capt. Anderson, £2; 228, Corp. McGregor, £2; 308, Sergt. Youhill, £2.

Secretary of State.

It looks as though the first prize in the "Secretary of State for War" competition was going to fall to a Vancouver man. Pte. J. Perry, of the 6th D.C.O.R., has scored 48 out of 50. The range is 800 yards. The first prize is £20.

In the "Secretary of State for War," Pte. T. Westman, of Ottawa, made 44; Sergt. W. Fowler, of the 12th York Rangers, 40; Major W. P. Moore, 38.

Kynock.

In the Kynoch Competition, at 1,000 yards, Major Moore succeeded in making only 38 out of a possible 50. A bicycle and 1,000 rounds of ammunition is the first prize in this match.

Shooting For King's.

In the "King's Prize" Competition Pte. Neil Smith, of the Essex Fusiliers, who has been doing things at Bisley, made a possible in the first stage at the 200 yards range.

The "King's Prize."

"His Majesty the King's Prize" has never been won by a Canadian. It is the most coveted of all Bisley honors, consequently of all shooting honors in the world. To win it a man must excel at the 200, 500, 600, 800, 900 and 1,000 yards' ranges.

The King's Prize was instituted in 1901, replacing the "Queen's Prize," which had been given since 1860. The "Queen's" was won only once by a Canadian, that was when Pte. Hayhurst, of the Hamilton 13th, brought it home in 1895.

Canadians at 200 Yards.

Shooting at 200 yards, Pte. Neil Smith, of the Essex Fusiliers, and Staff-Sergt. T. S. Bayles, of the 10th Royal Grenadiers, each made a possible. Other scores were: Baynton 29, Blair 32, Capt. J. Crowe 33, Staff-Sergt. C. R. Crowe 31, Davidson 32, Dillon 32, Gardner 34, Goudie 32, McGregor 31, Mortimer 30, Perry 31, Scott 30, Youhill 32, Fowler 29, Gould 20, Tyers 29, Westman 32, Moore 34, Will 32.

Besides the Canadian scores, there were 25 possibles at the 200 yards range and 60 cards were returned with 34.

Sergt. Fowler, of the 12th York Rangers, made 29; Sergt. W. Gould, of Guelph, made 20; Pte. H. Tyers, of the 10th Royal Grenadiers, made 29; Pte. Westman made 32.

In the "Secretary of State for War," Pte. H. Tyers scored 46 out of a possible 50.

G.T.R. Telegraphers.

Montreal, July 20.—The G.T.R. officials, fearing that a telegraphers strike would be called, have made a personal canvas of the men, but matters are now in the hands of the Minister of Labor, who is applying the Railway Labor Dispute Act.

Deadly Rioting in France.

Cluses, France, July 20.—During a riot of strikers here Monday several shots were fired, resulting in the killing of four persons and the wounding of twenty-five. The gendarmes, who attempted to disperse the rioters, were stoned.

REQUESTED TO RETURN

Message From the British War Office to Lord Dundonald.

Arnold Forster, Secretary For War, Says His Lordship May Be Heard in His Own Defence—Meanwhile He Must Not Take Any Further Part in Political Controversies—Does Lloyd-George Represent Sir Wilfrid?

London, July 20.—(C. A. P.)—Lloyd-George, M.P. (Liberal), introducing the debate in the House of Commons, contended that Lord Dundonald's conduct was such as could not be encouraged in the future. After his dismissal Lord Dundonald had practically initiated an agitation against the Canadian Government. It was a purely political agitation with Lord Dundonald as the centre of it. The case was similar to that of General Buller, but there was a double reason why it should not be permitted in the case of Canada. It was grossly unfair and mischievous that Lord Dundonald should be allowed to stir up strife and feud between the two races in Canada.

During his speech Mr. Lloyd-George quoted from The Toronto Globe's correspondence in The Standard as proof that the Toronto speech was purely a political agitation. There was nothing more dangerous and pernicious if Lord Dundonald went to Montreal, where all the material was ready for a conflagration, and set a match to the material. General Buller only made a speech at a luncheon to defend his own conduct, and was practically dismissed. Lord Dundonald, on the other hand, made violent speeches in a political propoganda, accusing the Government of corruption. Lord Dundonald should be reprimanded both for his speeches and general conduct.

Winston Churchill, along with whom rose Arnold-Forster, the latter giving way, amid a scene of considerable commotion, seconded the motion, declaring that no motion for adjournment had greater reason behind it. Though Lord Dundonald considered himself right in making his protest, he could have done so in a less harmful way. He ought to have been at once recalled by the British Government. No one could deny Lord Dundonald was being exploited by the Opposition for party purposes. He deprecated prominent intervention by military officers in the party politics of self-governing colonies, where the position of an Imperial officer should resemble that which he bears towards the Crown in England. He wanted the Government to make it clear that they were in no way associated with the action taken by Lord Dundonald.

Winston Churchill said that Lord Dundonald's utility as a militia officer absolutely terminated at the publication of the correspondence and his dismissal, when he should have been ordered home. Instead, however, he had gone on a triumphal tour in the provinces, making scathing remarks about Canadian ministers, who were ministers of the King.

Arnold-Forster, Secretary of State for War, welcomed Mr. Churchill as the spokesman of the Opposition. This debate was not calculated to contribute to the public advantage. (Hear, hear.) The one question was that of discipline, of which he was in charge, and the other of the advisability of this debate. He saw no advantage that could arise from this debate except to make bad blood between two great branches of the Empire. (Cheers and cries of "Oh, oh.") He asked did Lloyd-George speak as the representative of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. (Cries of "Oh.") No representation had been made by the Government of Canada, which was well able to take care of itself. (Opposition cheers.) The discussion would not tend to establish good feeling between the motherland and Canada. Lord Dundonald went to Canada as an officer of the Canadian Government, and no one imputed any misconduct to him other than want of judgment. Not being in agreement with the Canadian Government, the latter dismissed him at once. When he became an officer on half-pay he could stand as member of the Canadian Parliament and could not be deprived of the right to take an active part in public life. He believed it to be undesirable for any officer to take part in public controversies, and the War Office had informed Lord Dundonald that his conduct was undesirable and requested him to return, when he could be heard in his own defence. He had instructed Lord Dundonald to return home and not to take any further part in political controversies. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Arnold-Forster said Lloyd-George had spoken of the pain this controversy would cause Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who, as he truly said, was one of the staunchest friends of the Empire in the time of its great struggle. Did Lloyd-George speak as the agent or representative of Sir Wilfrid Laurier?

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman (Liberal leader) said it was a grave piece of bad taste for Lord Dundonald to act as he did, but Mr. Arnold-Forster had taken the course the Opposition approved in recalling him home.

T. Healy (Irish Nationalist) found no fault with Lord Dundonald, who was only attacking the War Office, but why was Lord Dundonald not recalled sooner, instead of six weeks after his dismissal? When was the order to return home conveyed to the noble Lord?

Mr. Healy believed Dundonald had attacked the Government of Canada because it was French and Catholic. It was very useful to have the French Catholics on the side of the British Empire in the Boer war, but was there ever an officer of the Imperial army who made partisan statements outraging the feelings of the majority of the people of Canada? He would like to know why Lord Dundonald was permitted to remain while his speech was rankling in the French heart. When was the telegram of recall sent. Yesterday the right honorable gentleman's subordinate knew nothing about it.

Lloyd-George offered to withdraw his adjournment motion, but the Government side insisted on negativing it, and this was done without a division.

Dr. Goldwin Smith.

London, July 20.—Dr. Goldwin Smith, writing to The Manchester Guardian on the Dundonald affair, says the quarrel of Lord Dundonald with the Canadian Government is the last in a long series in the clash of opposite interests representing the Imperial need of armaments and the Canadian need of bread. He ridicules the necessity of providing defence fortifications along the frontier, adding that, to bid Canada arm against the States, you might as well bid Yorkshire arm against the rest of England.

Sir Henri Taschereau.

London, July 20.—Sir Henri Taschereau says he is indignant that political capital is being made of the Dundonald affair. The Times is loaded up by Ottawa Tory sources, and a few Scotsmen are at the back of the whole agitation. He cannot see how the British Government, if alive to its own interests, can fail to recall Lord Dundonald before the end of the week.

TASCHEREAU'S UTTERANCES

Government Awaits Fuller Reports of His Speech Before Giving a Full Reply—House Proceedings.

Ottawa, July 20.—Sir Elzear Taschereau's alleged utterances in England concerning the Dundonald incident were brought to the notice of the Government by E. F. Clarke yesterday. Mr. Clarke said:

"I would like to ask the Government if the statement has been brought to their attention; if this statement has been authorized; if the Government approve of it, and if they will make some definite announcement as to the position of the Government, either now or at the sitting of the House to-morrow?"

The Minister of Finance, who was leading the House, replied that he could not now or to-morrow give a precise answer to the question.

Waits For Information.

"We cannot deny," he said, "that our attention has been called to the matter, but it wouldn't be wise for us to assume anything to the disadvantage of the distinguished chief justice of Canada on a mere cable report. I think before forming any opinion as to any utterance of Sir Elzear Taschereau, it would be wise for us to get fuller information. We have none at the present time upon the matter to which the hon. gentleman has drawn attention."

Col. Hughes Answered.

Col. Sam Hughes' statement made the other day in the House, to the effect that privates coming into the Ottawa camp for musketry training were made to do servants' work, drew from the Minister of Militia a long reply.

Lieut.-Col. Cartwright, director of the School of Musketry, had drawn up a report, which Sir Frederick read, to the effect that privates were not put at servants' work, but that men of the permanent force did fatigue duty, and it would be hardship to forbid them making a little extra as officers' servants.

Paid $800,000 For a Railway.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson brought down a resolution authorizing the purchase of the Canada Eastern Railway from Alexander Gibson at a cost of $800,000. The acquisition of this road will give the Intercolonial Railway direct connection with Fredericton, N.B. The Government has purchased with the railway the Fredericton and St. Mary's bridge, terms for the acquisition of which are set forth in the resolution.

Dog Fish in Commons.

Mr. R. L. Borden by a question brought up the problem of the dogfish, the redoubtable enemy of the Nova Scotia fishing interests.

Hon. Mr. Prefontaine, in a brief statement, expressed the hope that works might be established which would render dogfish of some commercial value for fertilizers, for oil, and other things. In some parts of Europe the people had no objection to eating dogfish, but in Canada they were regarded as too coarse.

The House made some progress on the estimates of the Department and adjourned.

New York's Harbor Eagles.

Above the pier—close to it and together, as if for comfort—huddled a cluster of tugs, those curious, powerful, persistent little steam craft that ply back and forth and up and down, saucily and busily important, their rows of fenders trailing in the water, their black smoke bannering out behind. Often I had watched them nosing in and out among the heavier craft, nudging a great ocean liner into midstream and singly or together pushing or pulling some huge helpless bulk, as an ant or as two might seize and trundle a great dead bumblebee. Their power and their impudence had filled me with wonder. Viewing them now in repose, I was impressed by the fact, hitherto unconsidered, that upon almost every pilot house was a golden eagle with extended wings—a symbol of power and swiftness—and it was borne in upon me that the tug in truth is the harbor eagle, with all other craft for its prey.

To give up of your own will what would cost too much in time and strength is not failure—it is success.

DAINTY HEADGEAR.

Torpedo Toques of White Roses. Purple Straw Hats Popular.

Some pretty hats for girls are of cream leghorn, simply trimmed with a fall of fine lace or hand painted chiffon or gauze and sometimes a bandeau on which rest tiny pink roses.

The torpedo toque is by no means laid aside, and its smartness is undeniable. It is now being made of tiny white roses or lilies of the valley.

Black or white straw is a favorite mixture. The old fashioned chip hat trimmed with one long black plume and black chantilly draped on the brim is considered very smart.

PURPLE STRAW HAT.

Straws this year are both light and pliable. Sometimes as many as three different shades are mixed in one hat.

Purple straw and chiffon toques are even smarter than the all flower hat. To match the purple gowns even shoes are now being dyed. They are made of the finest and most pliable leather.

The "flatiron" hat is becoming decidedly popular, the only adornment being a broad band of contrasting straw, drawing the brim well off the sides of the face.

Ribbon trimmings have become more and more popular. The flowered gauze trimmings set with fagot stitching are a most charming addition to a summer gown, while the Louis or Pompadour bows are to be seen on almost everything. For the adornment of the full dress toilet nothing could be more charming than the gold and silver gauze ribbons on which are embroidered flower designs in delicate faded tones.

The picture shows a purple straw hat trimmed with grapes and a shaded green bow. JUDIC CHOLLET.

THE LATEST IN GOWNS.

The horizontal tucks appear on a good many fine veiling and silk gowns. Five large tucks often appear from the knees downward, and the upper part down to the knees is simply relieved by the fullness at the waist line.

Linen gowns with cut embroidery are among the latest novelties, and some of these decorated with English embroidery have ribbons half an inch wide run through.

Grass green and a rich cherry red will both be seen a great deal on ecru linens and pongee.

Voile is without doubt the popular fabric this summer. Gray voile inlet with ivory lace and mounted on pink mauve or black is charming, and a dress of this veiling will be found both reasonable and useful.

BRIDE'S GOWN.

Brown taffeta and pongee tailor mades are to be worn by smart people this summer, combined with an ecru straw hat trimmed with pale yellow roses.

Shoes in a light champagne shade will be much seen this summer, embroidered in the prevailing tones of the costume. Distinctly novel are the tongueless shoes, the stocking showing through the lacing, although lacing is rather a misnomer, for they are fastened by the most lovely ribbons imaginable, termintaing in a large bow near the toe. The smartest tongueless shoes have a perforated pattern. Naturally, with the hose so much in evidence, only the very prettiest designs are worn.

ONLY REMEDY NEW TARIFF SYSTEM.

London, July 21.—The report of Joseph Chamberlain's tariff commission on the iron and steel trades arrives at the conclusion that the decline of the British iron and steel industry is due to the fact that the manufacturers of America and Germany have secured control of the home markets by means of high tariffs and an organized system regulating their export trade; that they are in a position to dump their surplus products on the British and other markets, irrespective of cost, and that the dumping could not be carried on except for the British system of free imports. The committee expresses the opinion that the situation can only be remedied by a system of tariffs arranged as follows:

(1.) A general tariff consisting of a low scale of duties for foreign countries admitting British wares on fair terms.

(2.) A preferential tariff, lower than the general tariff for the colonies, giving adequate preference to British manufacturers and framed to secure freer trade within the British Empire.

(3.) A maximum tariff consisting of comparatively higher duties, but subject to reduction by negotiation to the level of the general tariff.

RECALL OF DUNDONALD DISCUSSED AT OTTAWA.

Canadian Commoners Roughly Handle British Radicals.

Preston, Lemieux, Taschereau Employed to Influence British Government Against Lord Dundonald—Opposition Declares Incident Has Been Made Political to Protect Hon. Mr. Fisher—Liberal Party United to Discredit the Late G. O. C.

Ottawa, July 21.—Revived by the debate in the British Parliament, the dismissal of Lord Dundonald and His Lordship's conduct since his retirement from office were made the subject of another bitterly contested battle in the House yesterday. R. L. Borden brought on the discussion by calling in question the utterances of Sir Elzear Taschereau and the Hon. Rodolph Lemieux. The bold warning of the two gentlemen, that unless Lord Dundonald was recalled a bitter feeling would be aroused in Canada against the Imperial authorities struck Mr. Borden as strangely ill-suited to a member of the Government and the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, with slight reservations, defended his colleague and Sir Elzear Taschereau.

Col. Sam Hughes displayed keen resentment of the action of the British Government in recalling Lord Dundonald, and soon the controversy became general. The merits and demerits of Lord Dundonald as a general officer commanding, his quarrel with Hon. Sydney Fisher and the final rupture of his relations with the Dominion Government were argued all over again. On His Lordship's conduct since his dismissal, centred the really bitter part of the debate. The Liberals did not fail to make use of the argument that in recalling Lord Dundonald the British Government admitted that he was playing an improper part in Canadian politics. It was a source of considerable solace to them that the British Government and the British Parliament had "sat on" Lord Dundonald so unceremoniously.

English Radicals Scored.

The names of Arnold-Forster, Lloyd George, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and Winston Churchill were referred to by Liberal speakers with a tender regard for the sound sense and clear judgment of the men who realized that the general officer commanding was doing mischief to the fabric of the Empire. Two at least of these suddenly exalted heroes were roughly handled by members of the Opposition. Lloyd-George, it was pointed out, was a pro-Boer, and Winston Churchill, according to Sam Hughes, was a soldier glorified by the mere incident of being brought out of captivity. The Liberals argued that Lord Dundonald was being exploited by the Conservative party for political advantage. This charge the Opposition vigorously denied and insisted that the question had been deliberately made political in order to afford protection to Hon. Sydney Fisher. Some bitter remarks were passed on the conduct of Lord Dundonald, his speech in Massey Hall, Toronto, coming in for the heavy part of the criticism.

Frank Oliver, the degenerate independent of Alberta, went so far as to refer to Lord Dundonald as a "party hack." Cries of "Shame!" did not restrain him. He formally committed Lord Dundonald to the ranks of the Conservative party and wished the party much joy of him.

Adam Bell of Pictou showed how Preston, Lemieux and Taschereau had been employed to influence the British Government and British public opinion against Lord Dundonald

"To the last joint in the tail," he said, "the Liberal party has set itself to the work of throwing discredit on this man."

Thompson Veers Around.

Col. Thompson, who a year ago declared the rural militia of Canada to be "the skeleton of a skeleton," evidently thought that these words lent weight to Lord Dundonald's statement that our militia is wretchedly ineffective. Acting on this shrewd suspicion, he assured the House yesterday that, thanks to the mighty efforts of the Minister of Militia, strength had succeeded weakness in our armaments, and the ghost of the Canadian militia walked no more. Incidentally Col. Thompson suggested that Col. Sam Hughes was a "lip loyalty" patriot.

The words proved to be singularly ill-chosen, for they gave Dr. Sproule an opening, and he took advantage of it in brilliant style. Col. Thompson was confronted with the embarrassing bit of history, that though he was a dress parade hero at the Queen's Jubilee, and again at the Coronation, he was "under the bed" when Sam Hughes was on the field of battle in South Africa.

Grocers See Government.

Ottawa, July 21.—A deputation of leading wholesale grocers of Canada, together with representatives of the American Tobacco Company, waited upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Hon. Mr. Fielding and Hon. Mr. Brodeur yesterday afternoon to protest against the proposed legislation prohibiting any tobacco manufacturer making an exclusive contract with a wholesale merchant for the handling of his goods. There were about thirty-five in the deputation, the majority being members of the Wholesale Grocers' Guild.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier promised to take their representations into consideration, reminding them at the same time that certain tobacco manufacturers had waited upon them and had pointed out that the present conditions were detrimental to their interests. They had set out that under the exclusive contract system they had no chance to exist, as it gave a monopoly of the business to one or two manufacturers.

The Bill a Fraud.

Ottawa, July 21.—"The bill on the face of it is a fraud." In these strong words Senator Wilson expressed his opinion of the bill to amend the Insurance Act, discussion upon which was renewed in bitter earnest when the Upper House met yesterday afternoon. The point still at issue is whether the bill shall be passed in advance of the report of the committee that investigated the affairs of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association.

The discussion continued till midnight, when Senator McMullen's amendment deferring consideration of a bill till the report of the investigating committee was received was lost on a vote of 21 to 21. The Speaker gave the casting vote against the amendment.

On a vote of 26 to 16 the amendments to the bill recommended by the banking committee were carried.

The fight will be renewed to-day on the third reading.

DUNDONALD NOT REPRIMANDED.

Ottawa, July 21.—Lord Dundonald had many newspaper callers yesterday. To all of them he gave the same polite but firm answer. He would make no statement regarding the cable communication from the Imperial authorities, nor would he discuss any feature of his differences with the Dominion Government. This much is known, however, that Lord Dundonald will not leave Canada till July 29, Tuesday, which he fixed some time ago for his sailing. He will carry out the engagement he has made with the places desiring to honor him, and he will speak freely if the occasion demands it.

Lord Dundonald is not at all displeased with the communication which he has received from the Imperial authorities. He has not been ordered to return to England. He has not been enjoined to silence while he is in this country. He is an officer on the active list of the British army on half pay, and the War Office has no power to dictate to him what he shall and shall not do in his capacity as a citizen of Canada or a citizen of England. This was admitted by Arnold-Forster in his official announcement in the Imperial Parliament.

What the Imperial authorities did do was to make certain representations to Lord Dundonald suggesting his early return to England and a discontinuance of public speeches. The communication is friendly in tone and cannot be construed to be an order or a reprimand. How Lord Dundonald will respect it remains to be seen.

It is very generally stated here that both Sir Elzear Taschereau and Hon. Rodolph Lemieux were prompted by the Dominion Government to do their utmost to bring about Lord Dundonald's immediate recall. The utterances of Sir Elzear Taschereau have awakened strong resentment in the Opposition. It is noted that the remarks of the Chief Justice were of a marked political bias, and already the Opposition is considering the advisability of bringing in a resolution of censure or possibly an impeachment.

Mind is the beginning of civilization, but the ends and fruitage thereof are of the heart.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

In the matter of the estate of John George Frost, late of the city of Belleville, in the County of Hastings, furniture dealer, deceased, notice is hereby given pursuant to the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, chapter 129, that all creditors and others having claims against the estate of the said John George Frost, who died on or about the 10th day of May, 1904, are required on or before the 30th day of July, 1904, to send by post, prepaid or delivered, to H. Parker Thomas, Esq., of the City of Belleville, Ont., Solicitor for Margaret Frost, sole executrix of the last will and testament of the said deceased, their christian and surnames, addresses and descriptions, the full particulars of their claims, the statement of their accounts, and the nature of the securities (if any) held by them, verified by Statutory declaration.

And further take notice that after such last mentioned date the said executrix will proceed to distribute the assets of the deceased among the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to the claims of which she shall then have notice, and that the said executrix will not be liable for the said assets, or any part thereof, to any person or persons of whose claims notice shall not have been received by her at the time of such distribution.

Dated the 30th day of June, 1904.
H. PARKER THOMAS,
Solicitor for said Executrix

A SINGULAR COINCIDENCE.

SPECTACLE WHICH ADDED TO TERRORS OF A DYING SLAVE TRADER.

"In a squalid court in Edinburgh," it says, "many years ago a man who had been notorious for his cruelties as a slave trader lay dying. Mental terror made his end appalling to witness. According to Scotch custom, the family opened the door to let the spirit pass. To their infinite horror the bloody head of a black man suddenly rolled into the room. The family shrieked with fright, the man on the bed gave a yell of terror. They turned to his bedside, but he expired as they watched. When they looked toward the door again the head had disappeared. There was a splash of fresh blood upon the floor to mark the spot where it had been, but nothing else to certify that the horrid sight had not been the creation of morbid imaginations.

"This appearance of a negro's head in the room of a man dying after he had committed innumerable barbarities upon black slaves was a strange coincidence and nothing more. Prof. Owen, the famous anatomist, had been attending an anatomical lecture, where the body of a negro had been dissected. He was taking the head home with him to examine it more carefully. The streets were wet and slippery. Just as he was passing the open door of the house in which the man lay dying, he slipped, and the head, slipping from the cloth in which he had rolled it, rolled into the little room. The cry of the dying man diverted the attention of those who were in the room, so that Owen was able to secure his treasure and depart unnoticed."

YOU MAY HAVE KIDNEY TROUBLE.

If your back aches and you suffer from dragging pains it is an evidence of diseased kidneys. Get Ferrozone at once and take it regularly. Ferrozone makes kidney sufferers feel better at once. "I was bothered a great deal with my kidneys last year," writes S. G. Denton, of Everett, "but got quick relief from Ferrozone. My trouble manifested itself by pain in the back, dull, heavy feeling and constant headache. I quite recovered after using a few boxes of Ferrozone, which has given me more strength and better health than I ever had before. I can recommend Ferrozone as a positive cure." Price 50c at all druggists.

WHY THEY HATE THE AUDITOR-GENERAL.

When you come to think of it, it is no wonder the members of the Laurier Cabinet hate the Auditor-General, for he, honest man, has an awkward habit of telling things the ministers would rather not have known. For instance, he reports that for the year 1902-03, six Cabinet Ministers disposed of the enormous sum of $203,399 for travelling expenses, railway fares, cab hire, tips and sundries. The largest single item for travelling expenses is that for Hon. Sydney Fisher, whose newspaper, by the way, also cuts the largest figure in the printing account. It is no matter to Fisher and his colleagues that every Minister travels free on every railway in Canada; the travelling fees are counted up, just the same. The Auditor-General shows such things as these up, and 'tis no wonder they don't love him.

WHY GRIT GOVERNMENT IS COSTLY.

The following from the St. John Sun shows why a Grit Government of this country is costly: "It appears that when the Dominion Government abolished canal tolls an important step was neglected. The officers who collected the fees were retained in their positions. Dr. Reid mentioned in the House the case of a man who has a salary of $1,000 as collector, with an allowance of a dollar a day for driving from his village to the locks and special allowances for Sunday work, though he collects nothing, does not have to drive to the lock, and the canal is closed to business on Sundays." How would you like to be a Grit collector, with nothing to collect but your salary?

TIMELY TOPICS.

Owners of vacant property in this city are unanimous in the opinion that it is easier to raise weeds on the lots than the taxes.

• • •

The chairman of parks is going to grant that request and have a band concert on the hospital lot. It looks like a good idea. The park is an awful teetotal looking place.

• • •

Well, no matter what Rev. Mr. Weeks says, it cannot be affirmed that Belleville ladies have warlike ideas. There hasn't been a torpedo hat worn here this summer.

• • •

Talking about war, it might be well for Ald. Sinclair to fortify that island of his before the Russian war vessels begin to come up this way.

• • •

However, if the water in the bay gets much higher it is quite likely that the island in question will go out of business.

• • •

The British Government cheerfully granted permission for Kruger's burial in South Africa. They would probably have granted the permission years ago, with much pleasure.

• • •

The old yarn about St. Swithin's day has proved unreliable. Must have been gotten up by a Grit Cabinet minister in days gone by.

• • •

The Globe, with characteristic and shameless mendacity, publishes, beneath a picture of young Scholes, the statement that "his win was not a popular one in London." That is an untruth, so proven by many correspondents. The Globe itself, on Wednesday, published a statement in its sporting columns that Scholes' win was a popular one with the English people. Why does the chief Liberal organ thus try to spread maliciously false reports? Probably to try and offset the effect of the Dundonald "foreigner" incident. But the scheme is too transparent.

• • •

A little gentle exercise this kind of weather helps digestion and promotes slumber. The lawn mower people are never troubled with insomnia.

• • •

Kingston old boys will gather in the old town on Saturday next. They've got the habit, and make a practice of going home every year. It's a good habit, too. Pity we couldn't get our old boys to do the same thing.

• • •

Burglars in Brockville stole a lot of white vests. Really, there was almost an excuse for them, with such weather as we had lately.

• • •

Well put. The Toronto Telegram says.—

"Cowardly untruthfulness reaches its lowest depth in the editorial quibbling of the Globe and its junior counsel in the prosecution of Lord Dundonald.

"Abuse might be overlooked if it were not associated with the cowardice which denies the right of free speech to the victim of that abuse.

"Lord Dundonald is to be assailed by all the hissing ganders in the goose pasture of Liberal journalism, and then when he comes face to face with a great assembly of his fellow-subjects he is to be restrained by questions of etiquette from discussion the rights and wrongs of the controversy which brought him to the platform and his audience to the hall."

Mr. Gourley, M.P. for Colchester, N.S., hit the nail straight on the head the other day, when in debate in the House of Commons he said: "In fact the reduction of the tariff in 1893 had done much to defeat the Conservative party at the general election in 1896. Yes; our party showed weakness in listening to you people, to your endless talk about the ills of protection, something you didn't believe in yourselves."

• • •

A REPENTANT IRISHMAN.

(London Chronicle.)

Michael Davitt's recently published "Fall of Feudalism in Ireland" gives the following as a sample of the letters that used to reach the Land League offices in the good old days:

"Ballinrobe, Mayo, Jan. 8, 1881.—To the Honorable Land League.—Gintlemin, in a moment of wakeness I pade me rint. I did not no there was a law aginst it or I wud not do it. the people pass by me dure as if the smal pox was in the hous. I hear ye do be givin pardins to min that do rong, and if ye will sind me a pardin to put in the windy for ivery one to rede it, as God is me Judge I will never komit the crime agin. Misther Scrab Naly will give me a Karacthur if ye write to him, at Bal."

• • •

The rolling mills, in sporting parlance, are evidently "off to a good start." And here's hoping they keep a-rolling till the bay runs dry.

• • •

The Conservative Opposition in Ottawa yesterday certainly threw hot shot into the British Radicals. Lloyd-George, the pro-Boer, and Winston Churchill, the Boy Hero, a la Capt. Mayne Reid, came in for rough, though truthful, treatment. "Gutter Snipe" Tim Healy, of course, got no notice. He is unworthy of it.

• • •

It is suggestive, though, that all, or nearly all, of the papers and personages who, in the Old Country, have defended Laurier and condemned Dundonald were either pro-Boers or self-confessed traitors to the Crown. That's enough to start patriotic men thinking.

Dundonald is recalled, just as the Foreigners in this city were thinking of inviting him to come here. Tough luck! And Piper McIntosh's pipes were never in better tune.

• • •

CANADA A "NATION."

(Toronto Telegram.)

Canada looks like a nation, doesn't it, with "Winnie" Churchill and Lloyd George and Tim Healy butting into domestic affairs of this great and glorious country.

• • •

The Laurier Government makes much ado of the claim that they have made no request to the British Government for Dundonald's recall. But the Chief Justice of the Canadian Supreme Court, Sir Elzear Taschereau, a violent Grit, is in London, also the Hon. Rudolph Lemieux, a member of the Laurier Cabinet. Both these men have made misrepresentations in England concerning Dundonald, and there is no reasonable doubt that they made the balls which the pro-Boer Lloyd-George and traitor Tim Healy fired in the British House of Commons.

• • •

The Czar is highly displeased at the seizure of British ships in the Red Sea, but, by Jiggers, he isn't a bit more displeased than one J. Bull, Esq.

• • •

The Vladivostok squadron is out again looking for trouble, but it doesn't want to meet anything stronger than a merchantman or transport. One of these days Togo will catch it, and then it will be Davy Jones for the "daring" Russian sailors.

A gentleman writes concerning the unreasonable way in which some people act at excursions. The crowding, shoving, etc., on the wharf, indulged in by those who should know better, is, our correspondent thinks, disgraceful, and may result in loss of life if not stopped. It is to be hoped the timely hint may be taken, ere a drowning accident or two takes place.

FOUND HER LOST FORTUNE

Mrs. Norman Cooke, of Delhi, Ont., doctored for Kidney disease until she was tired—tried plasters and a dozen remedies before she tried South American Kidney Cure. When she had used one bottle she had derived great benefit. After taking six bottles she was cured. She was so great a sufferer at times that she couldn't lie down—was totally unfit for household duties. South American Kidney Cure gives relief in six hours. 54

FAVEROLLES.

New Breed of Fowls—Mature Early and Lay Well in Winter.

According to a writer in Feathered World, the Faverolles breed of fowls has been developed from French mongrel fowls refined by English breeders and bred up to a recognized standard.

"In type the Faverolles is a modification of the Dorking and Houdan by the mixture of Cochin or Brahma blood. The head rather thick, neck short, covered well, with hackle, breast broad and full with great width between the short thighs, which should be straight and, like the not too lengthy legs, fine in bone. A big coarse boned bird and a low set dumpy one should be avoided. To my mind the legs should have a small fringe of feathers, and finish with five toes; ample, profuse leg feathering is neither seemly nor desired by anybody. The back is broad, flat, and somewhat short; here many otherwise good bird, particularly cocks, seem straying from the proper type.

A FAVEROLLES HEN.
Winner of many First Prizes at English shows.

"A long-backed, low-legged bird, with the tail flow, carriage, and style of a Dorking is not a Faverolles. It should rather be a short-backed fowl with a sprightly semi-upright gait, and the short, almost bunchy, upright Brahma tail."

This description must serve for the hen, allowing her more length of back and emphasizing the width of breast and alert upright carriage. The comb in both sexes should be very neat, single, upright, and free from excrescences. I would not be too hard on a fresh looking hen if her comb fell over, providing it was not coarse or meaty. The head is comfortably finished by a profusion of beard and muffling; this, though only one point, should receive due weight, yet it does not entirely constitute a Faverolles, so a class should not be judged for the quantity of head-feather. In cocks, at any rate, there seems to be a departure in color from that of the first Faverolles which were exhibited. The neck and saddle hackles are too white. The standard asks for them to be straw color; the meaning intended was the applications fanciers make of the word "straw" to describe a yellowish white, a creamy white, rather than the color of red wheat straw. I think the hackles of the cock should be the same color as the breast of the hen. Beard, muffling, breast, and undercolor should be black; at present I have not seen such a bird; white still shows in the feathering. Let the legs and feet be as white and fine in scale as you can breed them. The back may boast of a few brown feathers, which often spread on to the shoulders without annoyance; whatever white there is about the back and shoulders should be of the same creamy tint of straw color (i.e., what would be "off" color in a white fowl). The tail is short, broad in feather, black in color, with bronze or bronze-black coverts. I forget the hen is salmon color, preferring to think of her as fawn color. Her neck, back, shoulders, and wings should be a fawn-brown; her muffling, breast and undercolor a creamy white. I like her wings free from black, but would pass a little in her tail. Her hackles should be laced with the lighter color, making them brown striped, without any black in them. This freedom from black is frequently seen, and should be encouraged; still, breeders must expect these thoroughly brown-hackled birds to be in a minority amongst their chickens. Hens white on head, in hackle, on breast, or a washy white-brown color on the back, are out of place in a show pen, the aim being a combination of the two distinct delicate shades of fawn-brown.

Some of the best birds of either sex have been bred from one pen containing parents similar to those I have attempted to describe. Hatch your Faverolles chickens when you like, give them a long spell in the nest under their mother, so that they may gain strength, and then coop them in the open, and let them take their chance, which is considerably in favor of rearing them, bar accidents. In a decently dry coop, with ordinary food and attention, they will grow at an amazing pace. The chickens are continually changing color, white nest-down gives place to successive feathers darker or showing more color than their predecessors, until, at the last moult into adult plumage, the breast of the cockerel becomes the solid black most of us wish to see. These hardy, independent, ever-foraging chickens are almost perfect subjects for artificial rearing; they learn their way into the rearer in a few hours, and then may be depended upon always to get home.

The Faverolles offers scope to the most experienced breeder of show fowls; as a utility fowl its strongest competitor is the buff Orpington. I have come to the conclusion, after some years' experience of the two side by side, that the Faverolles is preferable, as it lays earlier and lays more eggs before coming on broody; some never sit. True the eggs are neither so large nor so dark in color, but the utility Faverolles keeper would have no difficulty in establishing a strain possessed of these requirements, as some hens lay large and rich brown colored eggs. The Faverolles being a good winter layer must have some credit for quantity, if not of the very highest quality.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Considering the strained relations between Great Britain and Russia, isn't it about time we began looking round for ammunition for those guns on the park?

• • •

The Wednesday half-holiday is being pretty generally observed this year. In this city, yesterday afternoon, it was as quiet as Kingston.

• • •

Funny, isn't it. Since the ladies began wearing those cute little tan shoes they have given up the long dresses they used to sweep the sidewalks with.

• • •

Of course we could hardly expect the drill shed to be built just now, when so many of the Masons are in Brockville.

ONE OF THE VILEST DISEASES is catarrh, which first attacks the nose and throat and finally spreads all through the system. The one sure cure is fragrant, healing Catarrhozone, which is sent by the air you breathe direct to the root of the trouble. Mr. T. Y. MacVicar, of Yarmouth, suffered for years from catarrh and says: "In my long experience with this loathsome disease I never used any remedy that relieved and cured so promptly as Catarrhozone. When my nostrils were so stuffed up that I couldn't breathe I found a few inhalations of Catarrhozone was sufficient to clear away the mucous. I am perfectly cured by Catarrhozone and free from the disease entirely." Use only Catarrhozone Complete outfit $1.00; trial size 25c.

FIRST STAGE OF KING'S

Three Canadians Make 96 Each and Will Be in Second Stage.

They Are Corp. McGregor, G.G.F.G., Sergt. Crowe of Guelph and Pte. Baynton, Toronto—Ninety-Six With Scores of 92 Will Shoot For 54 Places in the Second Stage, So There May Be Others—Yet—Bronze Medal Winner.

At 600 Yards.

There was poor scoring all along the line in the "King's Prize" match at 600 yards. The members of the Canadian team scored as follows: Blair 28, Staff-Sgt. Crowe 30, Davidson 28, Dillon 21, Gardner 29, Mortimer 32, Scott 24, Youhill 24, Bayles 26, Will 18, Fowler 26, Gould 29, McGregor 34, Moore 29, Perry 29, Tyers 26, Westman 28.

Won Bronze Medal.

In the contest for the King's Prize the bronze medal was won by Sergt. Walker of the Northumberland Fusiliers, with a score of 101. Among the Canadians, Corp. McGregor, Sergt. Crowe and Pte. Baynton each scored 96; Pte. J. W. Smith 95, and Major Moore and Pte. Perry 94 each.

The bronze medal is awarded for the highest aggregate score in the first stage of the contest for the King's Prize.

There were three counts of 100, nine of 99, twelve of 98, and twenty of 97.

It will require scores of 96 over the three ranges, 200, 500 and 600 yards, to enable a competitor to get into the second stage of the "King's Match. The possible over the three ranges is 105.

Ninety-six competitors with scores of 92, over the three distances, will shoot for 54 place in the 300 who shoot in the second stage of the King's Prize.

Duke of Cambridge.

In the "Duke of Cambridge," ten shots at 900 yards, the Canadians put on the following scores: Baynton 45, Blair 39, Capt. J. Crowe 35, Davidson 27, Dillon 39, Fowler 33, Gardner 42, Gould 42, Moore 43, Mortimer 31, Scott 35, Tyers 43, Westman 35, Will 27, Youhill 38, Goudie 31, Smith 43, Perry 41.

Corp. McGregor retired from the match.

All Comers' Aggregate.

In the "All-Comers' Aggregate" Corp. McGregor of Ottawa, took 33rd place, winning £2. Staff-Sergt. Crowe was 56th, and also won £2.

The "All-Comers' Aggregate" includes the Alexandra, The Daily Graphic, Daily Telegraph and The Graphic. It covers the 200, 500 and 600 yard ranges.

Secretary of War.

With a score of 48, made by eight bulls and two inners, Private Perry of the Canadian team, won fourth prize of £6 in the Secretary of State for War competition, a ten-shot match at 900 yards. Bayles won the eighteenth prize, Tyers the twenty-first and Smith the twenty-third, each of £2, with scores of 46.

Range Prizes.

Martin's Cup.

In the "Martin's" Challenge Cup, a rapid fire competition at 200 yards, Sergt. W. Gould is the only Canadian who figures in the prize list. He took 116th place, winning £1.

Canadian Bag.

The winnings of the team to date have been about £62. Those who have entered individual matches have secured a total of about £50.

Trolley Killed Child.

Toronto, July 21.—As a result of injuries sustained by being knocked down by a street car, little Nellie, the three-year-old child of James Brown, 7 Gladstone avenue, died shortly before midnight. An inquest will probably be held.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation—Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 66 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

THE CRIME OF THE CENTURY

A LETTER.

MY DEAR WALTER—Let me ask you to turn back the pages of memory until you reach that one upon which is inscribed the record of our first night in camp on the banks of Massabesic. You remember that we named the beautiful spot "Idalia," and you will recall the wondrous aurora which so brilliantly illuminated the broad expanse of the heavens, which covered us as we rocked gently in our boat, waiting vainly for the nibble which never came. What a night that was! We did not catch anything—not even a cold, thanks to our warm cardigans—but we gazed upon the gaudy panorama in the skies and felt the littleness of self, as man ever must when viewing the marvels of nature.

But the northern lights dimmed and died away at last, and we talked of lesser things, finally reaching that ever absorbing topic, our own work. In time we discussed certain stories which I had already published, and I remember how severely you criticised what you called my "stupid soaring into the realms of the impossible" when, in your opinion, you thought that I ought rather to confine myself to "the probabilities of everyday life."

How often during that holiday did you use the phrase "in all human probability" till at last we all made jest of your habit, when finally you silenced me by saying, "At any rate, your stories are not within human probability!"

Well, my friend, I have often thought over your words, even though I have not yet been convinced that the most interesting phases of human life are those which are of most common occurrence. After all, the main object of fiction is to entertain, and, even though a little instructive lesson may be deftly interwoven with the plot, I fear that the modern novel is sometimes too highly spiced with philosophic dissertations. And in seeking to entertain is it not best to offer something out of the common, something a little different from the dull routine of daily experience?

I send you herewith a copy of my new story. With what zest you will rush through its pages seeking for incidents which may not be "within human probability!" But I warn you that in these pages there are hidden many traps for you. The plot is purely fiction, but every character has a prototype in life. Those incidents which you will be most eager to call "impossible" have all happened.

You may doubt whether a foundling may become an heiress to $5,000,000 and may also develop into a society lady, but the original of this character was a debutante last season, and the main facts are true.

You may doubt the possibility of the Burglar's Social union, but the floating gambling saloon flourished in our harbor very recently, and I visited it in company with a man who is practically at the head of the criminal fraternity of the metropolis. This man is a college graduate, has never been arrested, and he dominates a great band of "crooks," so that, however implicated he may be in their crimes, they never "peach," but when convicted serve their sentences without betraying this master hand. On that boat I met at least 50 men whom society would like to see in Sing Sing.

But I do not intend to point out all the pitfalls for you. Go ahead with your search for "impossibilities," and when you have found them all send your list to me, and I will gleefully tell you for your bewilderment, which have been borrowed from life.

Another word. I know that you dislike "dialect," and I agree with you in the main. Nevertheless "dialect" is sometimes essential. It should never be the object of the story teller to show his acquaintance with people who distort English, but when an author reaches a locality where all love of grammer is dead it would be absurd for him to put rounded periods in the mouths of his characters. Therefore excuse the language of my "slum people." Just one thing more. You may write to me that "slum people" do not speak even as well as I make them, but your views are taken from the Bowery tough of stageland, and believe me that in a hundred visits to the poverty districts I have never met that exaggerated individual. Very sincerely yours, RODRIGUES OTTOLENGUI.

CHAPTER I.

A MYSTERIOUS CASE.

"I am delighted to see you," exclaimed Mr. Mitchel, entering his library and advancing to meet his visitor, with hand outstretched in cordial greeting. "Here I have been over to the other side, and in London, Paris, Berlin, Rome—in fact, everywhere—I find that our fame has preceded us. As soon as a man learned that my name is Leroy Mitchel he would ply me with questions about the great New York detective, Mr. Barnes. And now, within 24 hours after leaving shipboard, here you are in propria persona to answer for yourself. Well, tell me, what is the latest, the newest, the most mysterious, case which may be troubling your waking hours and disturbing your slumbers with nightmares or escaping criminals and crimes undiscovered? There is some great case on hand, I am sure, or you would not look me up so quickly. But of course you have solved it, eh? You do not need any hints from me?" Here he nudged Mr. Barnes playfully, while a sly twinkle enlivened his eye.

"No; I cannot say that I have solved it yet," replied Mr. Barnes, releasing his hand from Mr. Mitchel's hearty grasp and resuming his seat. "In fact, if I had done so, I suppose I should not be here."

"Just so," said Mr. Mitchel, with a dry laugh.

"I saw your name in the published list of arrivals by the Paris," continued Mr. Barnes, "and, as I knew that the case with which I am occupied would interest you, I thought I would look in and talk it over with you."

"And incidentally get my assistance, eh?"

"Nothing would please me better than to have your co-operation," said Mr. Barnes eagerly. "May I count upon it?"

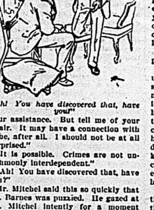
"That must depend upon the nature of your case. What is it—a common police court affair, which has baffled the uniformed force because the criminal, by chance or design, has managed to enshroud the facts with a thin veil of mystery, or have you really run across a classic crime?"

"It will prove to be the crime of the century," said the detective, with a touch of enthusiasm in his voice.

"The crime of the century!" repeated Mr. Mitchel musingly. "You speak without fully weighing your words, Mr. Barnes, a common fault. Every word in the language has a definite meaning, and no two words, unless they be names for the same thing, express the same shade of thought. If this be true of a single word, how much more so must it be when we unite several into a phrase! This one, 'the crime of the century,' means more than you have perhaps intended to convey. The crime of the century has not been committed by one man. It is too stupendous. It is the problem to which I myself have given much study without having as yet reached any ultimate conclusions. No, Mr. Barnes. Your case is not the crime of the century. Mine is. Some day I will tell you about it—when I have traced it to the end, you know. But now about your case."

"Mr. Mitchel," said Mr. Barnes, "I do not know what crime it is to which you have given so much attention and which you choose to consider so great, but if it be more startling, more mysterious or more difficult to unravel than the one upon which I am engaged then I shall look forward with keen expectancy to the time when you can give me the history of it."

"I may perhaps talk it over with you some day. I may even avail myself of your assistance. But tell me of your affair. It may have a connection with mine, after all. I should not be at all surprised."



"Ah! You have discovered that, have you?"

"Ah! You have discovered that, have you?"

Mr. Mitchel said this so quickly that Mr. Barnes was puzzled. He gazed at Mr. Mitchel intently for a moment and then replied without having fully comprehended his companion's meaning.

"Why, yes," said he. "It is certainly a fact that one crime may lead to another. But what point do you make of that?"

"An important one," said Mr. Mitchel, with a wave of his hand toward his guest. "I find that I am in the presence of a detective with brains enough to look beyond the immediate case in hand, for surely, if you have found by experience that crime breeds crime—pardon the harsh phrase, which, however, exactly expresses the truth—it follows that you cannot hope to fully comprehend a specified case until you have searched back into the past to learn whether it be merely a result of previous wrongdoing or an initial departure from rectitude. You agree with me?"

"Oh, I suppose so, theoretically at least, though you are carrying me deeper than a practical detective would go."

"Oh, very well! We will go no deeper." Mr. Mitchel dismissed the line of thought with that incisive manner so peculiar to himself. "I did not know how far you would care to go. We will return to the shallow waters of regular detective work, by all means. Pardon the digression and proceed with your narrative."

Mr. Barnes felt slightly annoyed. He realized that Mr. Mitchel was depreciating his talents, placing him on the plane of the common thief taker, a plane which he knew that Mr. Mitchel considered a very low one intellectually. Nevertheless he did not even now know wherein he had offended. Was it not true that the practical detective should confine himself to the immediate facts connected with the crime in hand, if he hoped to bring the wrongdoer to justice, rather than to make speculative pilgrimages into the remote past? He still believed so, yet it annoyed him to find that he was evidently at variance with Mr. Mitchel on this point, for, though he thought that gentleman egotistical in the highest degree, he fully appreciated his intellectual capabilities. He would now have preferred to discuss the question, but it was not easy to reopen the subject, Mr. Mitchel having dismissed the topic. This made him irritable, as he often was when in Mr. Mitchel's society, despite the uniform courtesy with which he was always treated. Mr. Barnes therefore found himself obliged to confine himself to the relation of his case.

"Well, then," began the detective after a pause, "about a week ago a most startling murder aroused the interest of the community. The victim was no less a man than Matthew Mora, a many times millionaire, prominent in Wall street banking circles as well as in Fifth avenue drawing rooms and conspicuous for his many deeds of philanthropy."

"How was the killing effected?"

"In a most brutally horrible manner. The old man was clubbed to death. This is not speculation, but fact. The murderer did not deign to hide the weapon, but left it upon the floor near the body. This was shrewd, because had he taken it away from the house its discovery might have been a clew which would have led us to a solution. But as it appears that the bludgeon was one of a collection of Indian implements of war owned by Mr. Mora its presence in the bedroom tells us nothing."

"Oh, yes, it tells you something!" interjected Mr. Mitchel. "Every known fact connected with a crime tells its quota of the truth and is therefore more important than the theoretical or circumstantial evidence which may be gathered."

"Of course I know that," said the detective testily. "What I mean is that the weapon left in the room, having belonged to the dead man, gives us no direct clew to the identity of the murderer. It does, however, tell us something, and it may even, however indirectly, point to the right man. For example, it is positive that the murderer did not bring this club with him. From this postulate there are two possible deductions—first, the man may not have intended murder when he entered the house; second, he may not have entered the house at all."

"Ah! Now you are doing better, Mr. Barnes," said Mr. Mitchel, with a pleasant smile.

"You mean that the criminal may have been an inmate of the house and therefore did not need to look for a weapon, being familiar with those at hand, eh?"

"Exactly. And this is the more plausible of the two theories because the Indian weapons were kept locked in a case in the library on the floor below Mr. Mora's bedchamber."

"This case was not broken open, I suppose?"

"No; but as the key was commonly in the lock this counts for nothing. The condition of the cabinet, however, together with the weapon used, furnishes us with another safe deduction. As you know, it is often difficult to decide whether a crime be premeditated or not. In this instance it was certainly planned."

"This is interesting. How do you prove it?"

"The cabinet, as I have said, is usually locked, though the key is left sticking. On the morning after the murder the door was found open. Thus it is evident that the master of the house had not himself taken the club to his room, for, being a man of exceedingly orderly habits, he would have locked the door. No; the murderer, knowing that a weapon of this kind was to be had, took it from the cabinet, but in his excited or abstracted frame of mind he might naturally have left the door open."

"You said awhile ago, Mr. Barnes, that the more plausible theory is that the criminal was an inmate of the house. This may be, but do not overlook the possibility that, coming from outside and planning against detection, the murderer may have chosen this weapon for the very reason that it would divert the attention of a detective away from himself and toward some other man. He would need, of course, to have knowledge of the existence of the Indian weapons and of the fact that they were within easy reach."

"He would also have needed the opportunity of entering the house and of escaping unobserved. Now, in the first place, the only way of getting into the house is through the front door, a large storage warehouse occupying all of the street at the back, and, secondly, Mr. Mora had a special night watchman patrolling the front of his premises."

"And this night watchman saw no one go in or come out of the house?"

"On the contrary, he saw a man do both. This man entered through the front door, using a latchkey, some time between 1 and 2 o'clock. He came out again about an hour later. But the watchman recognized him both times. It was Matthew Mora, Jr."

"The son?"

"The only son."

"And heir, I suppose?"

"And heir. The only child. Mother dead."

"That is suspicious."

"Very."

"Anything else against the young man?"

"He returned to the house at 5 o'clock in the morning, differently dressed and"—

"Differently dressed, you say?"

"Yes. Of this the watchman is positive."

"That ought to be significant."

"I should say so. He went in, but within a few minutes he emerged again in great excitement. Passing the watchman, he exclaimed: 'My father has been murdered! Let no one enter the house until I return.'"

"And then?"

"Then he went directly to the police station and reported the case."

"A clever young man!"

"You will continue to hold that view the more you hear. Two policemen were detailed to return to the house with him, and the central office was notified, so that within an hour experienced detectives were on the spot. One of these, my friend Mr. Burrows, was kind enough to stop for me and ask me to accompany him, so that I was present at the first official investigation."

"You were fortunate."

"Yes. I always dislike to take up a case after others have moved things about and tramped over the scene of the tragedy. We found the room in great disorder, furniture overturned, the rugs about the room in tangled heaps where the struggling men must have kicked them about, bric-a-brac strewn on the floor and broken—in fact, every evidence to prove that the old man had yielded up his life only after a desperate encounter with his assailant."

"Was he a powerful man? You said he was old."

"Old is a figure of speech. He was something over 50, but he had been an athlete in his youth and could give a good account of himself in a boxing bout at any time. If his son was the murderer, the men were evenly matched. He is not so heavy as his father was, but he is sinewy and has muscles of steel. I found Mr. Mora's watch under the bed, where it must have been knocked from the dressing table. The fall had caused it to stop, and the hands indicated 7 minutes of 2, agreeing with the time during which the watchman testifies that young Mora was at home."

"Yes," said Mr. Mitchell, "but do not go too fast. The watch may have run down. It is uncommon for a good watch to stop merely because it falls to the floor."

"Both of your points are good in theory," replied the detective, "but neither applies in this instance. If a watch runs down, it cannot be started again without winding. By merely shaking this one I set it going, and to make assurance doubly sure I let it run for an hour, when it was still keeping time. Next, though it be true that most watches would not be so easily stopped, this one, for some reason, is very sensitive to a blow. I tried the experiment of pushing it from the table to the floor, and at every attempt I found that it would cease its movement."

"You certainly have been thorough on this point," admitted Mr. Mitchel, "and I presume we may consider it established that the first attack upon Mr. Mora occurred at or near 2 o'clock."

"During the hour when the watchman claims that young Mora was at home," added Mr. Barnes.

"The watchman's testimony must be remembered, certainly," said Mr. Mitchel.

"Of course," continued the detective, "the first theory in these cases is naturally that of the midnight marauder in search of plunder, but a careful examination showed that nothing had been abstracted, though various articles of furniture, and especially Mr. Mora's writing desk, had been ransacked. I ought to mention that an open package containing several thousand dollars in notes was conspicuously in view in a small drawer and was untouched."

"Untouched? Is not that merely a presumption? Why may not this shrewd criminal have taken half or two-thirds of the cash found, leaving the rest, as he did the club, to baffle detectives?"

"I have said that Mr. Mora was most methodical. We found a notebook in which was entered from time to time a detailed account of his worldly possessions. This included a statement of the cash balances in various banks and the cash on hand. Under a date two days previous to the murder is an entry giving the balance of cash on hand, which is only a hundred dollars more than the amount of the notes found in his desk."

"Well, then, if not money, what did the murderer seek in the desk which you say was ransacked?"

"Why not the will?"

"Ah, of course, the will! Do you know that there was a will?"

"His lawyers declare that they made one for him recently—within a month, in fact. He bequeathed one half of his fortune to his son, and the other half was distributed among various charitable institutions."

"What was the total?"

"It is estimated that the fortune amounts to 18 millions."

"One-half of which is nine millions," mused Mr. Mitchel, "enough, quite enough, to be considered an incentive for murder—a legal incentive, I mean."

"Yes. The will cannot be found, and if not found charity loses and young Mora gains nine millions. Now we come to another point. We—that is, I—found blood stains upon the young man's clothing."

"Did I not understand you to say that he came back to the house in different clothing?"

"That could only apply to his outer garments, for of course the watchman could not observe whether he had changed his underwear. The blood stains were on the wristband of his shirt and on the sleeve of the right arm."

"Did you call his attention to this?"

"I did. For an instant he seemed disconcerted, but quickly recovered himself. Then he claimed the stains got on his shirt when he examined his father's body and was feeling his breast to see whether life was extinct."

"He is a clever young man, Mr. Barnes."

"You said so before, and I told you that you would not alter your opinion. But I next asked him to explain how it happened that blood was upon the wristband while none showed upon his cuffs?"

"Of course—a good point. He might have changed his cuffs when he changed his other clothing. That was your idea, was it not? How did he answer?"

"He said he had been away from home all night."

"Away from home all night?"

"So he claimed, and that, returning about 5 in the morning, he had first thought of retiring and had thrown off his coat and removed his cuffs when a light burning in his father's room attracted his attention thither, as it was the old man's habit to sleep in darkness. Thus he had no cuffs on when he examined the body, but put them on again before going out to the police station."

"He had noticed the blood upon his wristband and washed it off."

"He is shrewd, Mr. Barnes, very shrewd. This is a point of which I have often thought. The prosecution says, 'Prisoner, there is blood upon your garments.' Prisoner foolishly replies, 'That is not blood, but rust, or, if blood, it is chicken blood.' Then the expert stalks in and testifies, 'It is blood, human blood.' But this young man disarms the prosecution at the outset. He says, 'Yes; it is blood, the blood of my father.' Then he explains plausibly how it happens to be upon him."

"Ah, yes, very good, Mr. Mitchel! But if he were really innocent why should he wash or attempt to wash the stain off, and why should he stop to replace his cuffs if he were really in a hurry to report to the police?"

"So! He had attempted to wash away the blood. That was an error, I fear. But they all make mistakes. How did he answer these questions—that is, if you asked them?"

"Yes; I asked them, and he replied." Mr. Barnes spoke rather reluctantly. "He said that he had noticed the blood upon his wristband and washed it off because he thought some fool of a detective might conceive the idea that he had killed his father; that he had put on his cuffs because he was in too great a hurry to stop to change the shirt, and he had hoped that the cuff would hide the fact that the wristband had been washed."

"By heavens, Mr. Barnes, a brilliant answer, a very brilliant answer!" Mr. Mitchel laughed heartily.

"It may be brilliant," retorted Mr. Barnes, "but it is false, and I will prove it so if it be so."

"If it be so! Ah, wisely added, Mr. Barnes—if it be so!"

"You of course agree that the crucial point in this affair is the conflicting statements of the watchman and young Mora. The watchman asserts positively that he saw the son enter the house and leave it again. He has been in the employ of the deceased for several years and was acquainted, therefore, with his son. Yet the young man stoutly denies that he was at home before 5 o'clock in the morning. Evidently one of these men is lying."

"Pardon me, Mr. Barnes, but you say that one of the men lies because you think that young Mora is telling a falsehood. You do not mean that by any possibility the watchman is lying, yet it may be that Mora tells the truth and also that the watchman believes that his own statement is accurate."

"You mean that the watchman was perhaps mistaken and that it was some other person who entered the house?"

"Precisely so. It is possible."

"Possible, yes, but far from probable. It seems that Mora has been wearing a peculiar brown plaid suit of late. The material he procured in Scotland, and it is not likely that another bit of cloth like it could be found in this city. The watchman was familiar with this suit of clothing and swears that the man who entered the house that night wore that suit of Scotch plaid. Yet in the face of this positive assertion young Mora denies that he wore that suit at all that night and suggests that the murderer, after committing the crime, may have dressed himself in this suit, wearing it over his own clothing. He claims that the watchman may have been mistaken about what was worn by the man going in, though he seems to have been quite accurate about what was worn by him who came out, for, oddly enough, the plaid suit is missing."

"And young Mora says that the murderer may have taken it. Well, it is a very believable proposition."

"Believable," returned Mr. Barnes hotly. "Yes; that is the worst of it. They have believed it—the coroner's jury, I mean."

"Ah! Matters have proceeded as far as that, have they?"

"Yes. The full account of yesterday's proceedings is in the morning paper. You may read it."

"No," said Mr. Mitchel. "I would rather have you read it to me."

Mr. Barnes turned, so that the light from the window fell across his paper, and read the following:

"THE MORA MYSTERY—THE INQUEST BRINGS NO SOLUTION—THE SON ACQUITTED.

"The inquest in the Mora case ended yesterday, the jury bringing in the usual commonplace verdict, 'Died from wounds inflicted by parties unknown.' Thus, despite the many hints that the district attorney and the detectives had discovered damaging evidence against young Matthew Mora, nothing has been proved. The evidence offered was entirely speculative and theoretical, and the jury rightly declined to cast a stain upon the young man's character upon such flimsy testimony. The main points upon which the police relied were the discovery of blood upon the young man's sleeve and the positive assertion of the watchman that he had been seen dressed in a plaid suit, known to be his, entering and leaving the house at or near 1 o'clock. The first point Mr. Mora easily disposed of by openly admitting that the blood was that of his father and that he had been smeared with it while examining the corpse to ascertain whether the heart might not be beating. He denied the alleged visit to the house, as claimed by the watchman, and candidly confessed that he did not know what had become of the missing suit of clothing. He suggested, however, that the murderer may have worn it over his own blood stained garments when leaving the house, a theory that was evidently acceptable to the jury. This might not have been had not Mr. Mora satisfactorily accounted for his time during the night. It seems that he has been taking an interest lately in the east side slums and has been studying the labor problem. On the night of the murder he attended a ball at Apollo hall, hoping by associating with the inhabitants of the section to gain a closer insight into their needs, and thus perhaps later on to apply the money which he knew would be his and which has now come to him so unexpectedly toward alleviating the distress of the poor slum dwellers. In support of this story he produced two witnesses who testified that he was at Apollo hall throughout the ball, dancing with some of the fair Jewish maidens and making merry with the men. They declare that he did not leave for home until about 4 o'clock, which tallies nicely with the time of his actual arrival there."

"Too nicely!" growled the detective. "I need not read further. The reporter seems to be making an effort to whitewash young Mora, for the rest of the article is devoted to sounding his praises. You may look it over later if you like."

"Thank you. I will," said Mr. Mitchel, taking the paper. "Now, then, what can I do for you in this case? What course will you pursue?"

"Well, the police put forward the theory that Mora is the murderer. The coroner's jury has virtually knocked their theory into a cocked hat. I have noted that in cases of this sort the police make little further effort, and by degrees the details are forgotten by the public, who seize upon the next crime served up to satisfy their appetite for the sensational. Thus the murderer escapes. But in this instance he shall not escape. If it be young Mora, I will bring the crime home to him in return for his insolent language to me. If it be some other person, why, I shall be equally well serving the ends of justice by discovering the truth."

"Yes, but beware, Mr. Barnes! For the first time since I have had the honor of your acquaintance you allow personal feeling to enter into your investigation of a case. Young Mora has been insolent to you, but that would not justify you in weaving a web of circumstantial evidence around him which will blast his reputation forever, even if it do not bring him to the gallows."

"I hope I am above that sort of thing," said Mr. Barnes, flushing deeply. "I am sure"—

"So am I—sure that you are above it. You will do your best to discover the truth, only a personal spite is a dangerous element in such investigations. I merely call your attention to the existence of the viper that you may crush it with your heel. But you ask me to aid you in this affair. It may surprise you to hear me say that I cannot go into the case as you desire."

"I am more than surprised. I am sorely disappointed," said the detective.

"Oh, it is not so bad as that!" added Mr. Mitchel quickly. "I may be of some use to you. You see, the truth is, Mr. Barnes, I am not exactly a detective by trade. I mean no offense, but I cannot look at these cases from your standpoint. With you a crime committed indicates that there is a criminal at large. That criminal must be discovered, imprisoned, perhaps hanged. That is your work. It is a work with which I can have no sort of sympathy."

"But I have thought that these investigations interested you."

Mr. Barnes was much astonished at Mr. Mitchel's words.

"Ah! Indeed the investigation of a mystery is interesting to me, especially where the use of brains, and more particularly of brains against brains, enters into the work. But the study of a murder case, with the single object

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly—in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

After The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices.

Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen, for we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

Clover Sod.

Prof. C. A. Zavitz.

Clover is one of Ontario's most valuable farm crops. It is generally recognized by Ontario farmers to be a heavy yielder of hay, which furnishes a large amount of valuable food constituents. Its beneficial effects upon the soil, however, do not seem to be so clearly understood. Scientists, who have made a careful study of the influence of clover on the soil, tell us that after large crops have been removed from the land the soil is actually richer in nitrogen after growing clover than it was before, owing to the large amount of nitrogen which the clover roots have obtained from the air. As a rule, farmers grow clover and timothy together, and are therefore unable to ascertain the comparative influence of each of these crops on the soil.

We have conducted a series of experiments at the Agricultural College, Guelph, on three different occasions, in order to ascertain the comparative value of clover and grass sod for crop production. We first grew clovers and grasses upon separate crops and removed the crops, after which the land was plowed and other crops were sown. The results, therefore, show the influence of the roots remaining in the soil upon the productiveness of crops following the clovers and the grasses. In 1902, barley was sown after each of four varieties of clovers and three varieties of grasses in four different places in our experimental grounds. The average results of the four tests in pounds of barley per acre were as follows: Red clover, 1516; lucerne, 1450; Alsike clover, 1427; mammoth red clover, 1408; meadow fescue grass, 1068; orchard grass, 1015; timothy, 946. It will therefore be seen that the red clover sod gave an increase over the timothy sod of 570 pounds or nearly 12 bushels per acre.

In another experiment which was completed in 1900, in which winter wheat was shown on both clover and grass sods, it was found that an average of 3194 pounds of wheat per acre was obtained from the clover sod, and only 2300 pounds from the grass sod.

In 1899 a mixture of oats and barley was sown on clover sod and also on grass sod. The results were very marked, as an average of 2256 pounds of mixed grains per acre was obtained from the clover sod, and only 1078 pounds of mixed grains per acre from the grass sod. By averaging the result of these three grains, we find that the crop grown on the clover sod gave an increase over the crop grown on the grass sod by fully 56 per cent.

The results of these experiments help us to appreciate the beneficial influence on the soil from growing clover. It also indicates the suitability of a properly cultivated clover sod as a preparation for winter wheat or for spring grains.

ROSES Versus DAISIES

By MARAVENE KENNEDY

Copyright, 1904, by M. K. Wilson

The round faced daisies, not the boy's pleading eyes, held her gaze, yet she smiled winsomely into the eager little face as she gave him the coveted dime.

She smiled whimsically as she took her seat in a crowded car. She held the daisies a moment against the crimson roses on her breast, then reread Walter Antler's note:

> Margaret, Dear—It's hard lines that I can't see you off, but Harding's out on important business, and I can't desert the ship. Shall be with you in spirit as are my roses in reality. Write me at once on your arrival. I shall be up soon for my answer. Goodby, dearest. My own dearest, God grant, some day. Yours only,
> WALTER.

She leaned her fair face to the roses and breathed deeply. It was so sweet to know that she was all in all to the winning, successful man. Her eyes fell to the daisies, and with a sudden suffocation she opened the window.

"Is it too much air for you?" she asked courteously of the plain, middle aged woman beside her.

The woman laughed pleasantly. "There can't be too much air for me. I've been to the city for two weeks, an' I'm downright hungry for a whiff of fresh air. I had a good time, I guess. Leastways I did what folks there call havin' a good time. But I've had all I ever want. Mercerville's good enough for me after this."

The girl's face grew serious. It was the charm of the city that had taken her away from her father and mother—and Jack. For two years the city had held her, and till just the month before she had thought she loved it too well to leave for even a few weeks' vacation. Then had come a longing, a desperate heart sickness, for green fields, peaceful nights and the fragrant, cooling of the hills. She would grow tired of them in a few weeks, she thought wearily. She would long then just as earnestly for the brilliantly lighted restaurants, the Hungarian music, the sparkle and life of the gay crowds about her. She would want the theaters, the concerts, the streets pulsing with humanity.

THE TWO MEN EYED EACH OTHER FOR A MOMENT TENSELY.

Jack met her at the train. He was the same Jack she had left—tall, loosely built, unconscious of himself. His pleasant face reflected his clean, honest life, and his easy going gait and ready made clothes spoke the custom of the town. She looked at him tranquilly. No, it was not Jack that had drawn her here. It was her father or her mother. How sweet to have mother tuck her in bed and to feel the soft kiss on her cheek after the heart hungry mother thought her little ewe lamb fast asleep. How good, too, to hear father call her Daisy and Girlie once more.

And she was glad to see Jack. He came next evening and told her in his soft, slow voice all the news of the place and—once more—how dearly he loved her.

"Do you, Jack?" she asked wistfully. "Could I mean more to you than this?" She reached out her arms caressingly toward the stretch of green and dewy fragrant flowers lying so peacefully beneath the soft moonlight. "Could you be happy with me on a hot, paved street, with no trees nor fields of flowers and where the air was—sick?" She laughed tremulously. "You can't understand, of course, but—I came home just for the smell of the grass, the stillness, the pure, sweet air!"

"I do understand," he said gently. "I went to the city once, was there almost a year, but I had to come back. I was doing well too. I never told you about it. It seemed rather womanish for a big hulking man to hanker for green fields and flowers."

She moved nearer to him.

"There's a man there," she said softly, "that—that—I think I—love. He made it very pleasant for me, and he's clever and well to do. I thought a few weeks here would satisfy me, but I know now it won't. I must have the great big open—I can't be shut in. Shall I write him 'No?'" Almost to herself she breathed the question agitatedly under her breath.

"Not if you truly love him, Daisy," he said generously. "But I do want you, dear, and—I'd like my chance along with his. Give me two weeks, then send for him and talk things over and decide."

The two weeks were blissful ones for both, but Margaret could not determine how great a share of the joy giving was Jack's. They trudged contentedly along the dusty roads together, picked berries, stole apples and waded streams. They jogged gayly behind old Don, Jack's raw boned delivery horse, and were as satisfied as though he were a thoroughbred.

Then she sent for Walter Antler and waited in strange indecision for him to come. She wrote him frankly of her desire for the country, her uncertainty as to her feelings for him and told him about Jack.

"I don't think I understand," he said uncertainly, standing tall and immaculate beside Margaret the evening of his arrival. His handsome, keen eyes smiled good humoredly into the girl's perturbed face. "You say if I will live in the country you will consider my proposal. U-h-m! I would lose my mind, dearest. This place is very sweet and pretty, yes, but two days of it would drive me to drink." He turned to her earnestly. "The city will seem different with a home of your own and plenty of servants and theaters and concerts. Inside of a year you'll say the city's the only place on earth to live. Really, my darling, you can't mean this talk about the country. It's rank nonsense."

Just then Jack swung lightly out of his buggy and ran up the walk. He did not know Antler had come. The two men eyed each other for a moment tensely. Then Margaret introduced them.

She looked full into Jack's tanned, earnest face, then turned slowly to Antler's clean cut, virile features. The men breathed deeply. Each knew that the woman he loved was deciding for or against him. Margaret herself did not realize what she was doing. She broke the rasping silence with a low:

"I can't go driving this evening, Jack. Come tomorrow evening. I'll go then."

"You've decided against me," Antler said, a strange lump in his throat, as Jack drove away. "You—you love—him!"

"Yes," she answered gently. "He loves the life I do. You and I are so far apart on things. It's the outwardness of each other you and I love, I think, and with Jack it's—it's something that comes from within. I thought till you came if you would live in the country I would rather live my life with you than Jack, but"—

"You would not—even then?" he asked eagerly. She was very lovely, and he thought he loved her enough for the sacrifice. She smiled in wondrous sympathy, for had she not measured love that way herself?

"I love him better for all time," she said softly. "He and I can be friends and comrades as well as husband and wife, and that's the only way to be happy ever after."

Meissonier as a Portrait Painter.

Meissonier admitted that he would not have made a good portraitist by profession, for with few exceptions he had succeeded only with sitters whom he liked and knew well. He was not satisfied with painting things as he saw them; he had to understand how they came to have such or such an appearance. Though he claimed to remember every drawing that he had ever made, he also claimed that he did not reduce his knowledge to general formulae. "Before nature, I know nothing in advance"—not even, it appears, what size he was going to make his picture or how much he was going to include in it. This is the reason that many of his drawings and some of his paintings have been extended in one direction or another by bands of paper or canvas glued on. Meissonier had a strong dramatic imagination and an uncommon sense of harmony, yet they were both occasionally smothered by this devotion to literal fact.

Carried Samples.

During a meeting of the Louisville presbytery a delegate told this story of pioneer days and vouched for its accuracy: One of the circuit riders in my part of the state was extremely fond of pepper sauce, and as he could seldom find any strong enough at places where he stopped he always carried a bottle with him. He happened to be at a hotel one night, though he usually stopped at the home of a friend. A man sat across the table from him and, seeing the sauce, asked if the minister would share it with him. The request was granted, and the stranger poured out a liberal allowance of the sauce into his soup. At the first swallow he made a wry face and blurted out, "Minister, do you preach hades?" "Yes, brother," was the reply. "Why do you ask?" "Because you are the first preacher I ever saw who carried samples," was the answer.

The Legend of Killarney.

Like many other lakes, those of Killarney have legendary origin—an enchanted fountain, the spring head of which, if left unclosed at certain times, would inundate the district. One of these legends we give.

It throws the responsibility of the awful event on a fair young peasant girl, who was wont to meet her lover—a stranger ignorant of the mystic spell—by the fountain side. One night they were lulled to sleep by the music of its flow. At daybreak the girl awoke, screaming, "The well, the well!" It was then too late. The water was rushing forth and overtook them as they ran. They were drowned and involved in their fate the inhabitants of the district.

The people still believe that the submerged houses and their inhabitants live beneath and are at times visible to those who stray along the water side.

DOWN WHERE BIG CHIMNEYS SMOKE.

What an Intelligencer Man Saw and Heard at the Rolling Mills.

Business-like Air About the Place — Chat With the Superintendent.

Many Improvements Made—Some of the Men Who Are in Charge.

A trip to the rolling mills, these days, is a much more cheerful occupation than it was a short time ago. At least an Intelligencer man, who went there this morning, found it so. Men could be seen employed about the grounds, smoke was pouring out of the big chimneys, and it was evident that "Belleville's white elephant," as the mills have been called, will rapidly become black if dust and smoke have the same coloring properties that they always had.

"Ah!" he said, reading a letter just as the newspaper man entered, "Good morning; there's a good order."

"How are things looking?" he was asked.

"Quite satisfactory," was the reply. "Come and have a look around the mills."

On the road over, Mr. Wills was asked if it was the intention of the company to run the nail plant.

"Oh! yes," was the reply, "we will run it after we get material ready; providing, of course, the state of the market and business warrants it."

Entering the mills the visitor was shown what is certainly a fine lot of scrap iron, nearly as big as an ordinary hay stack. Men were engaged cutting it up and piling it on boards, ready for the furnace.

An energetic looking gentleman came along, and Mr. Wills introduced Mr. E. J. Renshaw, superintendent of the mills.

"You have had considerable experience in the iron business, Mr. Renshaw?" he was asked.

"Been an iron man since I was 15," was the reply. It came out in conversation that he came originally from Philadelphia, but for the past ten years has been employed in Montreal.

"How do you find this mill compare with other mills in Canada?" said the inquisitive newspaper man.

"Well, with the average mill in Canada," was the reply, "I should say it compares quite favorably. In some respects it is better than many. Those that are better than this have been improved in the last couple of years."

"You think, then," said the interviewer, "that the mills should pay, if properly run?"

"I see no reason why they should not," said Mr. Renshaw, emphatically. "Of course they need some little alterations, which we are making, and which are going on all the time in all mills everywhere."

Just here he turned to Mr. Wills with an air of impatience.

"We are short of labor," he said. "I can't understand it at all. Men came, before we started, and said they wanted work; now they don't come near us; I don't see why they don't turn up."

"You might mention that, Mr. Newspaper Man," he went on. "We need 15 or 20 good laborers, Belleville men preferred, of course. Yes, sir, everything being equal, we give the preference to Belleville men all the time."

"You might give us the names of your staff," said the scribe, and these were mentioned as those holding the principal positions:

J. F. Wills, managing director.

E. J. Renshaw, superintendent.

John Carrahan, in charge of 18-inch mill. (This gentleman held the same position with the Abbott-Mitchell company).

Geo. Carney in charge of the rolling at the "Merchant" mill.

G. H. Starling is the shipper, and has charge of the general labor.

John Littlewood is engineer.

B. Oldroyd, master mechanic.

The Arnott boys, and their helpers, look after the scrap.

The "roughers," "heaters" and "roll hands," we were told, came from various parts of Canada and the United States, only three, however, being from Uncle Sam's domain, the rest being from Montreal, Toronto and Hamilton.

"We have," said Mr. Renshaw, "the best staff I ever saw at the opening of a new mill."

Walking around, the visitor was shown a lot of new and improved machinery which had been installed since the present company took hold of it. The cost of the improvements in question was between $15,000 and $20,000, and, as might be guessed, the earning power of the mill will be much increased thereby.

The visitor crossed over to where the rolls were in operation, and watched the athletic-looking chaps juggle the redhot bars, which twisted around like fiery serpents. Everything was going with a steady swing which was very business-like, but the newspaper man, as he watched the perspiration drop from the chins and noses of the men who handled the redhot bars, did not envy them their jobs.

"What wages do they get?" he asked Mr. Wills.

"They work by the ton," was the reply, "and make from $2 up to $8 and $10 per day, according to the amount of skill required."

It was learned that the high water in the bay this year is causing some inconvenience in the way of flooding wheel pits, etc., but this is being looked after.

There are about 70 men at present employed.

The 12-inch mill, which Mr. Renshaw declared to be as good as, if not better than, any mill of its kind in Canada, will start next week.

Everywhere there is to be seen evidences of improvement in the way of new cooling beds, new floors, new cutting machines, etc., and certainly it would appear that no pains have been spared to put the mills in shape to make money as well as iron.

Good luck to them.

MASONS MEET IN GRAND LODGE.

JUDGE HARDING'S REPORT SHOWS A PROSPEROUS CONDITION.

Brockville, July 20.—The members of Grand Lodge A.F. & A.M. of Canada have possession of the town today. The hotels are crowded and many of the visitors are being entertained in private residences. This morning the 49th annual convention of the Grand Lodge met in the Armory, M.W. Bro. Judge Harding, of Lindsay, presiding. The roll-call showed that nearly every lodge in the jurisdiction is represented, while there are a large number of visitors besides.

After the opening, His Worship Mayor Gerst was introduced and read an address of welcome to the brethren, in which he gave a short history of historic Brockville, and extended its freedom to the visitors. This was followed by an address of welcome by Sussex and Salem lodges. The various reports were presented to the Grand Lodge, and were full of interest to the craft.

M.W. Bro. Harding, Grand Master, who has been a most ardent and zealous presiding officer, impressed on the brethren the importance of the work before the Grand Lodge. During the year he attended many important Masonic events. Four lodges were constituted and consecrated during the year, and five especial communications held for the purpose of dedicating new Masonic halls, namely, at Midland, Leamington, East Toronto, Sunbridge and Wiarton. During the year he laid two corner-stones and granted eight dispensations for new lodges. Altogether he granted 171 dispensations, and six lodges of instruction were held.

The Grand Treasurer's report shows total receipts for the year of $30,263.95; total disbursements $25,937.10, leaving a balance of $4,328.85, and, after the purchase of St. Thomas' School debentures for $12,148.50, leaving a balance on May 31st last of $6,128.01. Since May 31 the sum of $12,850.65 has been deposited in the bank; disbursements, $999.75; leaving a balance at date of $17,866.90.

Last year there were 375 lodges, now there are 381. In 1902-03 there were 2,500 initiations; the past year there have been 3,000, a net gain of 2,300 or 300 net gain over the previous year. Total benevolence for the year $25,656.

R.W. Bro. J. S. Dewar, of London, presented the report on printing and supplies. Among other things recommended was a grant of $200 to purchase undress regalia for Grand Lodge officers, in cases of emergency. Accounts to the amount of $2,433.92 were certified as correct.

R. W. Bro. D. F. Macwatt presented the report on warranty and recommended that the three lodges working on dispensations be renewed, and that Gore Bay Lodge receive a dispensation.

R.W. Bro. R. L. Gunn, of Hamilton, read the benevolence report. During the year 360 applications for relief have been received, and but few rejected. In the interim of the Grand Lodge, $700 has been expended in cases of distress of the beneficiaries.

Reports on grievances and appeals and other special subjects were also presented, and a touching tribute paid to the fraternal dead in a report read by R.W. Bro. Morgan.

W. Bro. Leopold de Carle has retired from the contest for the Senior Wardenship. D.W. Bro. W. H. Harrison, also of Brockville, will be elected. The keenest contest is developing for the Deputy Grand Mastership, and it looks now as if every vote in the jurisdiction would be polled.

Mrs. Legault's Funeral.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Joseph Legault took place at 9 o'clock this morning, and many were in attendance. Services were held at St. Michael's Church, conducted by Rev. Father Hanley. Many floral tributes were placed on the casket by relatives and friends. The bearers were the four sons and two sons-in-law, of the deceased.

Russian Ambassador Says His Government Has No Intention of Doing Wrong.

If Mistake Has Been Made in Case of Malacca Damages Will Be Paid.

London, July 21.—Count Benckendorff, the Russian ambassador, at a conference with Foreign Secretary Lansdowne yesterday afternoon, assured the latter that his Government had no intention of infringing on the rights of any neutral power, and that if a mistake had been made in the seizure of the Malacca unquestionably the steamer would immediately be restored and damages would be paid.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

(The Globe.)

Russia has scored her first win on land. On Monday there was a general engagement northeast of Tatchekiao, in which the Japanese were driven back with a loss of ten guns. They retreated as far as Saimatse, which is some fifteen miles east of the most advanced positions taken up by the Takushan army. The report is not official, but seems not an improbable one. The result of the engagement shows that Kuropatkin has a very large part of his available force around Tatchekiao.

The presence of the Vladivostok squadron in the Pacific opens an international guessing competition. Where are these three magnificent cruisers going? What is their programme? They were last seen yesterday headed southeast and going at full speed. Incidentally they sank a small Japanese merchant ship, but that was, by the way, just as a small boy will smash a window in passing a deserted house. That the Japanese permit the squadron to put to sea at will is almost incomprehensible. Admiral Kamimura has under his command a squadron decidedly stronger, and one would have supposed that a close blockade had been maintained. The most feasible explanation is that the Rossia, Rurik and Gromoboi have a rendezvous somewhere else at Vladivostok, where they coal and refit. The fox terrier has been watching the wrong hole.

On leaving the Sea of Japan and striking out into the Pacific the Vladivostok squadron becomes of supreme interest to Canadians and Americans. Our own C.P.R. Empress liners and the big boats sailing from San Francisco to Japanese ports may be stopped any day and ordered to produce their manifests and show that they carry no contra band of war. If the squadron is going to engage in raiding Japanese coast towns and seizing shipping it will be a very real thorn in the flesh to the Mikado's kingdom. It may have even more important work in hand. There has been much talk of the Russian Baltic fleet sailing to the east in such strength as to assure victory. The presence of the three powerful cruisers now out in the Pacific would greatly strengthen the Baltic fleet, and it would not be a great surprise were they to await the coming of these reinforcements in the Pacific or the Indian Ocean. In any event Admiral Skrydloff has given the Japanese naval tacticians a problem of the first importance to work out.

The Times correspondent, who seems to be in very close touch with Kuroki's army, says that an engagement began on Tuesday morning, and was still in progress when his message was sent. It is evident that the Japanese General is sticking to his foe at Motienling like sealing wax. He has the power to assume the offensive. That he does not do so proves that he awaits the development elsewhere of the plan of campaign.

The feeling in Great Britain regarding the operations of the Russian volunteer cruisers in the Red Sea is intense. The protest of the British Minister at St. Petersburg against the seizure of the Malacca is couched in respectful but strong language. It is believed the ship will be released. If she is not she will be retaken. That would mean war, and as the Russians have their hands pretty full at the moment they are not likely to court further trouble. The Czar seems disposed to disavow the action of his cruisers.

NEW DIRECTORS APPOINTED.

ODDFELLOWS' RELIEF ASSOCIATION AT MEETING ADOPTS NEW POLICY.

Kingston, Ont., July 20.— The annual meeting of the Oddfellows' Relief Association was held here today, with a large attendance from outside points. The chief question before the meeting was the proposal to make a change permitting a certain number of the directors to be elected outside of Kingston. Hitherto all the directors have been Kingston Oddfellows, the object of that being to save expense and to enable the directorate to be called together at a few hours' notice if required.

It was agreed to have five Kingston directors and four outside directors. The three directors elected were J. A. Minnes and W. Mundell, Kingston, and J. A. Robb, Valleyfield, Que.

After the night session a luncheon was served to the visiting representatives.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and when especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

Toronto Yachtsmen Here.

A yachting party consisting of Major Puchen, Messrs. O. Watson, J. MacLaren, W. D. Wilson, J. Rutherford, V. Hughes and E. Lewis arrived here last evening on the yacht Thelma. The party are from Toronto and proceeded down the bay to-day.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

Happy Cruisers.

Messrs. B. L. Hyman, F. B. Hudson, V. Doyle and Dr. L. Riggs have gone on a cruise to the Thousand Islands on the yacht Iola. Another party consisting of Messrs. C. Walker, H. Walker, D. Cameron and F. Burrows have gone to the same place on the yacht Yoda.

Messrs. F. Wallbridge and J. Rathbun have started to paddle a canoe to the Thousand Islands.

Child's Narrow Escape.

A little four-year-old daughter of Mr. B. Simpson, South Charles St., fell into a deep well yesterday afternoon. When she came to the top of the water she grasped the stones of the wall and pluckily held on while her mother ran some distance to get help. The little one is none the worse for the ducking.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

This remedy is certain to be needed in almost every home before the summer is over. It can always be depended upon even in the most severe and dangerous cases. It is especially valuable for summer disorders in children. It is pleasant to take and never fails to give prompt relief. Why not buy it now It may save a life. For sale by all druggists

McINTOSH BROS.

THE CZAR DISPLEASED

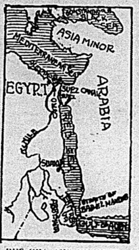
Immediate and Amicable Adjustment Within the Possibilities—Britain Lodges a Strong Protest With the Russian Government—Lord Lansdowne Rises to the Situation, Worthy of Britain's Strongest Days—Jap Steamer Sunk.

St. Petersburg, July 21.—The Associated Press has just been informed that Emperor Nicholas, in an interview with Count Lamsdorff, the Foreign Minister, expressed his displeasure at the turn events had taken, and at the posibility of complications with Great Britain, arising out of detention of British ships by the Russian volunteer fleet steamers in the Red Sea. This Pacific attitude, if the report be correct, will doubtless lead to an immediate and amicable adjustment.

Britain Protests.

St. Petersburg, July 21.—Sir Charles Hardinge, the British Ambassador to Russia, yesterday afternoon, in behalf of his Government, presented a strong protest to Russia against the seizure in the Red Sea and detention of the Peninsular and Oriental steamer Malacca, which was carrying 300 tons of British Government stores for the naval establishment at Hong Kong, each case of which was marked with the broad arrow, which is the Government stamp.



RED SEA AND VICINITY.

Detained at Port Said.

Port Said, July 21.—The crew and passengers of the Peninsular and Oriental steamer Malacca, seized by the Russian volunteer fleet steamer St. Petersburg, in the Red Sea, have been landed here. The ship is detained by the authorities, who are waiting instructions before taking further action.

Malacca's Crew Prisoners.

The captured Peninsular and Oriental steamer Malacca (bound for Libau on the Baltic) has arrived here manned by a Russian naval captain, four officers, forty-five sailors and firemen.

Members of the Malacca's crew were declared prisoners and no communication with the shore was permitted. An armed guard blocks the gangway of the vessel.

The British captain and passengers complain of the Russian treatment. The former carried his protests to such length that he was threatened with arrest unless he desisted.

The Malacca is declared to have no contraband articles for Japan. Her cargo of 3,000 tons contains 40 tons of explosives for Hong Kong.

Lansdowne Worthy Britain's Trust.

London, July 21.—"Lord Lansdowne," says The Daily Telegraph, voicing the views of the Government, "has faced the situation created by the abuse of the right of search in the only manner worthy of a British Minister compelled to defend the interests of British commerce and the honor of the flag, and acting with unhesitation, firmness and promptitude, will recall the strongest days of national policy, he has justified the trust of the country.

"While not one rash word should be said which could have the effect of increasing the tension of an anxious and dangerous interval, it would be futile to disguise the character or to minimize the risks of the situation which has arisen. We hope and believe that a solution of the difficulty may still be found in the withdrawal of Russia from its false position.

Certainly Obvious.

"It is obvious if the volunteers passed the Dardanelles as merchant vessels they cannot be allowed to scour the Red Sea as warships. The doors of the Black Sea must either be open or shut. If open to warships they must be so to all warships. If the Russian fleet is to be permitted to emerge in violation of treaty provisions, the British fleet must be allowed to enter upon these terms.

"It is no secret that we have not been unwilling to remove the existing veto of the Dardanelles and enable those straits to be traversed by the navies of all nations."

War With Russia Contemplated.

Every other London morning paper devotes its leading editorial to a similar view of the situation. War with Russia is openly contemplated by the most staid papers of the Empire, and a contingency much to be regretted, but nevertheless inevitable for the honor of the nation unless reparation be made for what is alleged to be a dire insult to the British flag.

More Volunteers For Red Sea.

London, July 21.—The correspondent at Odessa of The Standard, telegraphing under date of July 20, says another steamer of the volunteer fleet proceeded thence last night, to Svastopol for coal and armament, preparatory to leaving the Black Sea. Two of the remaining five volunteer fleet steamers there will follow very shortly.

JAP STEAMER SUNK.

Vladivostock Squadron Appears Twenty-Five Miles From Hakodate.

Washington, D. C., July 21.—The Japanese Legation has received the following cablegram from the Foreign Office at Tokio: "At 9.30 a.m., July 20, the Vladivostock squadron fired on and sunk a Japanese steamboat of 318 tons, off the coast of Isoya, about 25 miles from Hakodate. All the crew were landed safely at Zesan."

Raid Japan's Coast.

Tokio, July 21.—The Russian Vladivostock squadron, unaccompanied by torpedo boats, entered the Pacific Ocean yesterday at seven o'clock. Its destination is unknown, but it is suggested that it will ravish the east coast of Japan, and then either return to Vladivostock, escaping to the southward, or attempting to form a junction with the Port Arthur fleet.

Land Fight on July 18.

London, July 21.—The Standard's correspondent with the first Japanese army cabling under date of July 19, says: "Our right flank has been engaged since morning."

The correspondent of The Times with Gen. Kuroki's army, under date of July 19, confirms The Standard correspondent report that the right flank of the army had been fighting since dawn.

The China Mutual Steam Navigation Company's steamer Pakling is believed to have been seized in the Red Sea. The Pakling sailed from Middlesborough, England, June 18, and London, July 2, bound for Yokohama. She is a British-owned vessel.

Japs Lost Ten Guns.

Tatchekiao, July 19.—(Delayed in transmission.)—Sharp fighting was reported yesterday to the northwest, and it is stated that the Japanese lost 10 guns. Their forces were pushed back and their positions occupied as far as Saimatsze. If this report be true, it indicates a heavy engagement.

7 Sutherland Sisters Hair Grower

GREW THIS HAIR

Testimonial No. 422.

MISS NORA GASTAGER
2108 Centre Ave., Pittsburg, Pa.

When the scalp throws off either dandruff or a gummy substance, it is an evidence of scalp disease, and no time should be lost in correcting it. You certainly would not hesitate to take treatment were you to look at this matter through a magnifying glass. When highly magnified it resembles a working mass of insects. These creatures absorb the nutriment or life-sap of the scalp causing the scalp to become dry and feverish, resulting in the loss of hair and finally baldness. Seven Sutherland Sisters' Hair Grower and Scalp Cleaner works wonders in all such cases. It thoroughly eradicates all trace of scalp bacteria and makes the hair grow unusually long, strong and beautiful. One 50 cent bottle is enough to show you that it will do all this and even more. NOW at all druggists, two sizes, 50c. and $1.00 per bottle.

BUTCHERS STRIKE OFF.

Packers and Men Get Together and Agree to Arbitrate.

Chicago, Ill., July 21.—The strike of packing house employes, begun nine days ago, and which has demoralized the packing industry throughout the country, was settled here last night at a conference between representatives of the packers, the officials of Meat Cutters' Union and representatives of all the allied trades employed at the stock yards. The whole controversy will be submitted to a board of arbitration, both sides agreeing to abide by whatever decision this board may reach.

Pending the decision of the arbitration board, the men will be taken back to work as rapidly as possible by the packers, and it is agreed by the packers that all the old employes are to be reinstated within forty-five days from the date work is resumed. If any of the former employes are still unemployed at the expiration of that time, such persons are to have the privilege of submitting their cases to the arbitration board for settlement.

Indian Sentenced For Life.

Ottawa, July 21.—An Order-in-Council has been passed commuting the death sentence passed upon Johnnie Peters, an Indian, who killed another red man at Nanaimo, British Columbia. There was no premeditation, and Peters was drunk at the time. Peters gets imprisonment for life.

James Bay Railway Contracts.

Toronto, July 21.—The construction of the James Bay Railway from Toronto to Parry Sound has been contracted for. Those to whom they have been awarded are Angus Sinclair, C.E., and the firm of A. A. Mann and Archie Mackenzie. By the terms of the contract the work must be done by September, 1905.

Prisoners Pleaded Guilty.

St. Thomas, July 21.—Yesterday John Brown, Richard Murphy, Henry and Homer Godder, arrested on the charge of burglarizing M. B. Jackson's hardware store, were arraigned and pleaded guilty. They were remanded till Saturday for sentence.

Canadians Win.

London, July 21.—(C.A.P.)—The Canadians defeated the Dunfermline bowlers Tuesday by 115 to 62. In their game with Edinburgh yesterday, the Canadians stood 16 to 34 for Edinburgh, when rain stopped the game.

Devlin's Position.

London, July 21.—(C.A.P.)—Charles Devlin, M.P., refused to introduce the Dundonald incident in the House of Commons, on the ground that the Imperial Parliament had no right to interfere with Canadian matters.

RUMORS OF GREAT MOVE IN THE THEATRE OF WAR.

Japs Break Russian Flank and Are Marching on Mukden.

Telegram from Russian Sources Says Japanese Have Penetrated Enemy's Left Flank—Greatly Important, if News be True—Russia Will Back Down, Czar Being Willing to Accept Britain's Assurences re Malacca Without Question.

Liaoyang, July 22.—News was received from Tatchekiao Wednesday that the Japanese had broken through the Russian left flank between Lieut.-Gen. Count Keller's position and that of Gen. Rennenkampff and that they were marching on Mukden. The rumors to this effect are persistent, but there is no official confirmation of them.

Sensational News.

St. Petersburg, July 22.—The most sensational piece of news from the front is the Associated Press despatch from Liaoyang, dated July 21, reporting a persistent rumor that the Japanese have broken through the Russian left wing between the respective positions of Lieut.-General Keller and Gen. Rennenkampff and are marching upon Mukden. The report received from Gen. Kuropatkin bearing the same date, says that there has been no change of importance in the situation, and a close study of the dates shows that the rumor probably refers to the Japanese advance against Gen. Rennenkampff on the northern Samaitza-Liaoyang road, when they drove the Russians back as far as Houtsiatze, twenty-six miles east of Liaoyang. A later despatch to the Associated Press shows that Gen. Hershelmann commanded this detachment of Gen. Rennenkampff's cavalry, and that he turned and took the offensive, subsequently compelling the Japanese to retire in the direction of Sikyan.

Fight Near Mukden.

London, July 22.—A Russian correspondent of The Daily Telegraph at Mukden, under date of July 19, says: "A fierce fight has been raging during the past two days and it still continues. The Japanese, who are in superior strength, attacked with great coolness. The Russians are contesting the ground splendidly. The Japanese flanking movements to the east are the real cause of our retirement. Heavy loses have been sustained. The Japanese artillery has again shown its superiority."

According to a special despatch from Moscow the Russky Listok of that city confirms the Associated Press report from Liaoyang that the Japanese have broken through the Russian left flank and are marching on to Mukden.

Must Explode Mines.

Tientsin, July 22.—Lloyd's agent at Newchwang telegraphs that nearly every steamer arriving reports seeing mines, and that navigation will practically cease unless steps are taken to explode the mines.

Flying Squadron.

Tokio, July 22.—A fisherman reports that the Vladivostock squadron was off Miyako yesterday, going in a southeasterly direction at a speed of 10 knots. If this course and speed is maintained the squadron will be off Yokohama late today. The eastern coast of Japan is shrouded in fog. Shipping has been suspended, awaiting the location of the Russian fleet.

RUSSIA WILL BACK DOWN.

Scare Has Passed—Willing to Accept Without Question Britain's Assurances re. the Malacca.

St. Petersburg, July 22.—The scare Wednesday over the Malacca incident has given way to a calmer and more rational view. The feeling in high official circles is that the case will be speedily and satisfactorily adjusted. The main difficulty is the excited state of public feeling in the two countries, but the Russian Government, under the direct inspiration of the Emperor, who is personally anxious to avoid grounds for a quarrel, is apparently ready to meet Great Britain in the most friendly spirit.

While not admitting the Russian captain seized the Malacca without some warrant, Russia will accept without question Great Britain's assurance that the war munitions on board the vessel were Government stores, bound for the naval station at Hong Kong and order the immediate release of the ship. At the same time she will maintain her right to stop vessels believed to have contraband of war on board and detain them if the manifests are not plain, as required by international law.

Whether Russia will agree to discuss the war status of the Red Sea cruisers is not plain, but if Great Britain insists seriously she may offer to refer this and other collateral questions to The Hague Tribunal.

Has the Habit.

Tientsin, July 22.—A letter was received here yesterday from Newchwang, saying that the commander of a Russian torpedo boat had reported that while in the Gulf of Pe-chili he had accidentally torpedoed a British steamer. It is surmised here that the vessel referred to is the Hipsiang, now five days overdue from Newchwang. The Hipsiang belongs to the Indo-China Navigation Company. It is reported here that a heavy bombardment off Port Arthur occurred Wednesday, and heavy gun firing was heard at Newchwang the same day.

Still Act As Patrols.

Aden, Arabia, July 22.—The Russian fleet vessels continue to patrol this vicinity. They did not attempt to interfere with the Peninsular and Oriental steamer Palawan, which passed here yesterday morning. Steamers of the French (Messageries) Line are allowed to pass unchallenged.

British Cruisers Move.

The Crisis Is Acute.

London, July 22.—The authoritative assurances that the Malacca will be released, cabled by the Associated Press from St. Petersburg, do not appear in the British morning papers. Special despatches to a somewhat similar effect from St. Petersburg do not ally the alarmist views of the leading organs, which construe Premier Balfour's post-midnight announcement that the Government had received no confirmation of the reported release of the Malacca to mean that the incident remains unsettled.

Against Another War.

London, July 22.—Twenty guineas per cent. was quoted at Lloyd's yesterday for insurance against the outbreak of an Anglo-Russian war within three weeks. This is the rate which prevailed at Lloyd's on the Russo-Japanese war three weeks prior to the outbreak of hostilities.

LEAVES OTTAWA TUESDAY.

Todd's Parliamentary Government Quoted in Favor of Dundonald.

Ottawa, July 22.—Lord Dundonald has decided to leave Ottawa next Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. He will proceed by a special train to Montreal. The following evening he will be the guest of the St. James Club. The general, it is understood, will respect the spirit of the instructions cabled by the British War Office. That he has done nothing to violate the laws, however, is generally admitted.

The following extract from Todd's "Parliamentary Government in England" shows that in addressing public meetings Lord Dundonald is clearly within his rights:

"Furthermore, in the case of military or naval officers, no impediment is placed in the way of their becoming candidates for a seat in the House of Commons, and, if elected, no intemperate or even factious language made use of by them in their place in Parliament, unless taken up by the House itself and made the subject of an address to the Crown, would be accounted a good reason for dismissal from the service. And similar freedom of speech is also allowed at ordinary political meetings, provided that nothing be said that is treasonable or a direct infringement of the Mutiny Act or the Articles of War."

Arrested For Perjury.

North Bay, July 22.—John Bidgood is under arrest for perjury in connection with the enquiry now under way into the charges of license irregularities in the district. At the opening of the trial last week, Bidgood swore that all the letters received by him from Dr. Henderson had been burned. Subsequently, it is alleged, that he showed some of these letters. His arrest for perjury then followed, under instructions issued by Crown Attorney Browning.

THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC—ALIENS EMPLOYED.

It is to be feared that when Mr. Hays and other Grand Trunk officials declared that no foreigners were, to any extent, employed in the work of locating the Grand Trunk Pacific line he and his officials were either ignorant of the facts as they existed or were trying to deliberately mislead the public.

Mr. Clarke, M.P., of Toronto, however, was not to be misled by any such statements and pressed the Government to action. Investigation proves that he was right and that the statement of the Grand Trunk officials was misleading. The results of the investigations made by Judge Winchester show that Canadian engineers were almost entirely ignored and Yankees employed. The result has been that the following employees of the Grand Trunk Pacific are liable to deportation under the Alien Labor Act, namely:—

Cassius C. Van Arsdol, division engineer.
Edward R. McNeil, district engineer.
Thomas C. Taylor, assistant engineer.
Chas. F. Gailor, assistant engineer.
James H. Bacon, harbor engineer.
Edward McD. Mellen, chief clerk.
W. M. Anderson, topographer.
Peter Talbot, topographer.
H. M. Goodman, draftsman.
S. H. Mason, draftsman.
Amos A. Meador, draftsman.
John C. Baxter, transitman.
Fred W. Fink, transitman.
L. C. Gunn, transitman.
John A. Grenn, leveller.
Fred O. Parsons, leveller.
Stanley J. Mayo, rodman.

The Minister of Justice told the House of Commons that one warrant had been issued and twelve prepared in connection with the above; five have been signed and handed over to the Commissioner of Police. The first warrant was issued on June 14th and the others later. None of the offenders have been deported by the police, as they have left the country. Warrants will be issued against all those reported by Judge Winchester with instructions to report in each case how the offender has been disposed of.

This conduct on the part of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company is outrageous. Here under a "Liberal" Government, we are about spending nearly two hundred millions of money in railway building, and Canadian engineers and other well qualified men are totally ignored, and all the lucrative positions given to foreigners, in direct violation of law!

Is it not about time Canadians looked to their own interests?

TIMELY TOPICS.

At the band concert last night people had a chance to examine the place where the new drill shed is to be built—some day.

• • •

Some people, by the way, are averse to the band concert being held on the Hospital lot, while others, who live on the east hill and west side fail to see why they should be compelled to walk about three miles, there and back, to hear the band.

• • •

A gentleman interested in the band says he thought, long ago, that the Council had picked out rather an out-of-the-way place for the concerts, when they built the stand on the park. To his mind the best place would be some central location.

• • •

However, at present one thing is sure—the park just now is hardly an ideal place for the concerts, but if the Hospital lot is to be used for the purpose the Council should see that some seats and lights for the band are provided. A temporary band stand would cost little.

• • •

"A Parent" writes: "I have no hesitation in commending the remarks of your correspondent who condemned the practise of crowding on the wharf when people are embarking for excursions. It is time that some notice was called to the matter. Another thing I might mention: I have heard it stated that boats have, on different occasions, carried more than their legal complement of passengers. Have we any official whose duty it is to see that the law is obeyed? I have no personal knowledge of overloading, but write about what I have heard. You know the old proverb: "Prevention is better than cure.'"

• • •

Most assuredly. Our correspondent is to be commended for calling attention to the matter. The Intelligencer has no thought that any of our local mariners would wilfully disobey the law, but assuredly we want no risks of a disaster in this locality. Whose place is it to look after the matter in question?

• • •

THEY FELT RELIEVED.
(Boston Globe.)

The ball players in Chicago were overwhelmed with grief when they heard that Kruger was dead, thinking it was Kruger of the Pittsburgs, who was hit on the head with a pitched ball when he was playing here in Boston, and were doubtless quite relieved when they learned it was only the ex-President of the Boer republic.

• • •

Half the summer already gone
Goodness! How the time does go!
Three months more and the lawn mower man
May be gracefully shovelling snow.

• • •

The meat strike is settled, and now, perhaps, the bosses will put the prices down and allow the consumers to do the same with the meat. At all events it's meet that they should.

• • •

Toronto Star: The dog days being near, the War Office has very considerably cabled over a muzzle for Lord Dundonald.

The above, from Hon. Mr. Mulock's Toronto organ, is nice, is it not? Notice the refined and delicate way in which, by inference, the gallant Scotch soldier is called a dog, and all because he dared to speak his mind and protest against what he thought was not in the best interests of Canada. It's a pity that Lord Dundonald, armed with a horsewhip, could not obtain a five minutes interview with the writer of the scurrilous paragraph quoted above. It's a safe bet that one Grit falsifier and traducer would lose no time in starting for the tall timber.

• • •

As our country correspondents would say, "the rain yesterday caused the farmers to wear broad smiles."

• • •

• • •

Complaints still come of automobiles which run at immoderate speed. When are the authorities going to attend to this matter?

• • •

The protest recently made by Great Britain to Russia must not be classed with the disgusting protests which are made every winter against Belleville's hockey team. It's altogether different.

• • •

How long do you suppose it will be before the people of Vladivostok will be singing that old but beautiful song, "The Ships that Never Returned?"

• • •

THE FACT OF THE MATTER.
(Toronto News.)

It is not what Lord Dundonald said, but what Mr. Fisher did, that constitutes the militia issue.

• • •

"An Enquirer" wants to know if there is any legal penalty for people who neglect to cut down weeds on property owned by them. We understand that there is, and if the law were enforced in this city, and all who break it were fined, the authorities would soon have so much money that they would be able to get along without levying any taxes next year.

• • •

Lord Dundonald is honorary colonel of the 91st Highlanders, of Hamilton, and mainly through his good offices that regiment was organized. Some time ago it was arranged that he should take part in the presentation of colors to the regiment, and everybody, from the colonel commanding to the cook's orderly, was glad of it. Since then the distinguished "foreigner" has made the Grit Government look like 17 cents in counterfeit money, and now the leading officers of the 91st, who are Grits, have found a way to crawl out of the engagement, and Dundonald will not be allowed to present the colors. Wouldn't that give you a worse pain than green apples? There are Grits and Grits, but those Hamilton Grits are surely the limit!

• • •

The best-looking young lady in Canada is wanted at the St. Louis fair. That fair young person who was at the band concert last night, without a hat, might as well begin packing her trunk at once.

• • •

Latest reports from the Far East make it appear that Port Arthur will fall before the water in the bay does.

• • •

The Hamilton Herald boasts that an ad. in its columns supplied the advertiser with six boys. The Czar of Russia is said to need one badly. Why doesn't he try the Hamilton Herald?

• • •

Eighty Toronto men saw a 15-year-old girl and 11-year-old boy go to the rescue of three people who were in danger of drowning. Chicken-heartedness must be epidemic in some quarters of the Queen City.

BIG FORTUNE FOR SOME LUCKY DOG.

GREAT ROYAL HUNGARIAN LOTTERY WOULD LIKE SOME OF CANADA'S EASY MONEY.

Canada's reputation as a place where money is "easy" is evidently spreading as may be judged by the fact that, recently, many places have been flooded with enticing circulars issued from Budapest, Hungary, to the effect that the 14th Great Royal Hungarian Money Lottery is doing business and the circular contains an invitation to its recipient to try his luck. There is a chance (!) to make 1,000,000 crowns. The proprietors of the lottery kindly put this amount in Canadian currency so that the ignorant may know just what fortune lies within their grasp. The first prize is worth just $200,000.

The drawing takes place at Budapest on August 9, 10 and 11, next, and the would-be ticket holder is gravely informed that "We are aware that your former participation was not crowned with the success usually expected but we feel almost sure that if you repeat the play it will turn out to your satisfaction."

After an urgent appeal to the sucker public to get busy, the circular goes on to say that one whole ticket costs 104 crowns, or $22.10; a half ticket $11.05, and a quarter ticket, $5.55. There are in all 42,000 prizes of an aggregate value of 12,751,500 crowns. Surely the sucker should land something out of all that wealth.

Afternoon Tea.

Afternoon tea is becoming more and more a regular custom in this country now that we are learning the gentle art of idleness. A few suggestions of things that I have found decidedly appreciated at this function may not be amiss. Homemade bread cut in very thin slices, buttered and laid in square piles on a bread and butter place is always relished with a good cup of tea. Currant loaf, served daintily in the same way, is very popular. In making it, take two small cups of the sponge out of the general baking and place in a different pan. Take one-half cup of butter—a small cup—a half cup of sugar, a whole cupful of currants (or raisins if preferred), one egg, and stir all together. Then mix enough flour to make a dough and set it in two bread tins to rise. When risen sufficiently, put into the oven and bake a half hour.—Brown Book.

Tooth Powder.

An excellent tooth powder that is inexpensive, pure and efficient may be easily made by any one. Mix two ounces of pulverized borax with four ounces of precipitated chalk; add one ounce each of powdered myrrh and pulverized orris. Sift through fine bolting cloth, and it is ready for use. Tooth powder bottles with adjustable covers, such as shop powder is put up in, may be saved and filled with this homemade product.

"JUST AS GOOD"

Has no glimmer of truth in it when it means a substitute for Dr. Agnew's Ointment.

There are cases on record where men and women too have suffered unspeakable torture from piles; where all kinds of remedies have been applied; where the surgeon's knife has been resorted to as the only hope; where electricity has tried its good offices, but without any permanent cure; and Dr. Agnew's Ointment, as the last resort, has proved its magic—one application has given relief. There is no other "just as good." Don't take chances. 55

The Countess of Warwick.

The Countess of Warwick, who recently gave birth to a daughter at Warwick House, London, is one of the best-known figures in society. Her ladyship is distinguished for her practical philanthropy, which has taken forms that, though novel, have been abundantly justified by results. Her hotel at Reading for the training of the daughters of professional men in horticulture, dairy, bee and poultry keeping, has been a conspicuous success. At the Earl's Essex estate the Countess established a science and technical school for boys and girls, whilst she presides over the needlework school and institutions of various educational kinds. At Warwick she established a home for 18 crippled children, admitted free for an unlimited length of time, whilst both at Warwick Castle and at Easton Lodge she has a complete organization for the welfare of the poor and the nursing of the sick. She is an expert horsewoman; she hunts with both the Warwickshire and the Essex hounds; she is an omnivorous reader; and she makes an effort, notwithstanding the time she devotes to outdoor pursuits, to read every new book of importance. Lady Warwick has contributed largely to periodical literature, but as a writer her name will go down to posterity as the author of "Warwick Castle and its Earls," a book well conceived, admirably written and of some historical value. At the beginning of the year her daughter, Lady Marjorie Greville, married Viscount Helmsley, grandson and heir of the Earl of Faversham.

English Ignorance of Indians.

An Indian who has just returned from England expresses surprise at the ignorance he found there. He went to London to take part in a wild western melodrama. He ran across a newspaper man in Philadelphia, and the latter says it was amusing to hear him describe the ignorance regarding his race that exists abroad. "An Englishman," he said, "thinks that a red man can run from 200 to 225 miles a day without effort. He thinks an Apache can overtake a deer. In fact, I read in London a short story describing how in a fifteen mile run an Apache caught a deer, choked it to death and ate its heart raw. The English believe that an Indian is so generous he would give away the clothes on his back. I was accosted by hosts of beggars in London, and they couldn't understand why I didn't hand out a half crown to each of them. They also think an Indian will endure the severest pain without flinching, out of pride. A young English girl stuck a pin in my leg at a restaurant one night and was surprised when I said 'Ouch' and swore."

Mrs. Parnell in Destitution.

Mrs. Charles Stowart Parnell has appeared in the London Bankruptcy Court with evidence that she is not only penniless, but in practical destitution. The family to which she belongs are well-to-do, and Field Marshal Sir Evelyn Wood, who is her brother, is more than that. If she had not deserted her husband, been divorced, and then married Mr. Parnell, she might have retained a good place, but it is rather absurd to blame the Irish Nationalists, as is done, since it was "Kitty's" charms that through his infatuation brought about the ruin of Parnell when he was in the heights of his power as the Irish leader.

The Mississippi.

Generally speaking, the slope of rivers flowing into the Mississippi from the east is, on the average, about three inches per mile. Those entering it from the west have an average descent of about six inches per mile. The average descent per mile of the Missouri after it leaves the mountains is reckoned about a foot; the Des Moines, from its source to its conjunction with the Mississippi about 7.3 inches. The entire length of the Ohio shows a fall of even five inches. The Mississippi, from the mouth of the Ohio to the gulf, has a fall of about two and one-half inches.

Lincoln's Passes.

Lincoln's humor armed him effectually against the importunate persons with whom, as the head of the nation, he was beset at all times.

During the civil war a gentleman asked him for a pass through the Federal lines to Richmond.

"I should be happy to oblige you," said Lincoln, "if my passes were respected. But the fact is, within the last two years I have given passes to Richmond to a quarter of a million men, and not one has got there yet."

WHEN CLEANING HOUSE.

The Kind of Clothes to Wear to Work In Comfort.

The house cleaning suit should consist of a divided skirt, with a short skirt if desired, but it will be a great deal better without the added weight of the short skirt. However, if skirt there must be it should clear the floor at least ten inches.

There should be a blouse attached to the belt which holds the gathers of the skirt in place or to the belt of the divided skirt. With this suit should be worn a pair of thick stockings and a pair of shoes with cork soles. The material of the suit should be light, washable flannel.

The blouse should not be too full, though full enough to permit reaching and bending with absolute freedom. The loose sleeves should be elbow length, gathered into a loose band just below the elbow. The forearm should be protected with the leg of an old stocking, the top of which can be cut off to a convenient length. The object of this is to protect the arms from water and from exposure. The collar of the blouse should be cut away in the neck and a collar of some soft goods set under and sewed in.

This comfortable suit should be worn over a union suit and without corsets. The body is thus given perfect freedom. The house cleaner should protect her hair by wearing a dust proof but light and cool dusting cap. The hands should be protected by rubber gloves, according to the nature of the work.

Fried Nuts.

Fried nuts are dainty little additions to the luncheon or supper table. Good Housekeeping furnishes the recipe. Cold cooked farina, oatmeal or other cereal is reheated and seasoned with butter, salt and pepper. When cool enough to shape with the hands into small balls, dip in crushed walnuts, then in beaten egg, again in walnuts, and fry in deep fat.

FOR YOUNG FOLKS

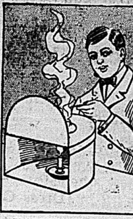
LIGHTING SMOKE.

An Effective Trick That Has a Very Simple Solution.

This very effective trick may be accomplished by means of a round or square pasteboard box, preferably a hatbox. Shape the box into the form shown in the drawing, turning up the overlapping half of the top cover and cutting a large round hole in the other half which fits over the half box.

Now set a candle in the half box directly under the hole, light it and let it burn until it has a long snuff. Blow out the light and you are ready to perform the trick.

Suddenly a flame is seen to creep down the wreath of smoke which is ascending from the long candle snuff up through the hole in the box lid. The flare quickly reaches the candle snuff and as it touches it lights the candle, much to the wonderment of the onlookers.



FLAME DESCENDING THE SMOKE.

The secret of the trick is very simple. After you have stepped around to the rear of the box you manage to light a match, holding it below the table so that it will not be seen. At the proper time you bring the match in contact with the wreath of smoke ascending through the hole in the box lid. As the other half of the lid is turned up it affords a screen, behind which you may apply the match unseen by those in front of the box.

The distance from the point in the smoke wreath when you touch the match to the tip of the candle snuff should not be more than four inches, as the smoke loses its density and thins out the higher it ascends.—New York Mail.

Is the Ostrich Stupid?

It has been stated that the ostrich is so silly that it hides its head in the sand, thinking that, because it cannot see, no one will see it. One who has studied ostriches for several years says that, though this statement is not true, they are just as stupid as if it were true. Their tiny heads are so flat as to leave scarcely any room for brain, and they have therefore less intelligence than even a barnyard fowl has. Let the man who has fed an ostrich daily for years come to it in a strange dress and it will not be able to recognize him.

A farmer was once assaulted and knocked down by an old bird which he had constantly fed, simply because on this occasion he had come to it wearing a tall hat.

It had never seen him in such headgear before, took him for a stranger and was proceeding to maul him to death but for timely rescue.

A Bird's Wire Mattress.

A gentleman in England had a pet magpie which, although very tame, would still leave the house every spring and go to the woods to build and raise a family, returning home again afterward. Wanting a young magpie for a friend, the bird's owner followed his pet and found its nest in a lofty gum tree. A boy was sent up the tree. He came down with a bird and reported that the nest was all made of wire. His assertion being laughed at, he went up again, cut the branch off and brought the nest down to prove his words. What he had said was perfectly true. The nest was almost entirely constructed of fine wire ingeniously twisted together. A small piece of fine wire netting served for a mattress at the bottom of the nest, and over this was laid straw.

The Advice She Wanted.

My little sister Myrtle called our papa to her bedside the other evening and said, "Papa, I want to ask your advice."

"Well, my dear, what is it about?"

"What do you think it would be best to give me on my birthday?"

The Moon Train.

A train comes nightly from the east
  Across the curving sky;
Its headlight is the big round moon,
  Its smoke the clouds close by.

Those clouds of smoke conceal the train
  I long to have appear;
I watch the brilliant, brilliant light
  That makes the path so clear.

The little sparks of stars fly out
  Along the moon train's way;
I'd like to hear the engine puff,
  And some bright night I may.

I'd like to see the passengers,
  Perhaps a boy like me
Rides on the train to China now;
  But, oh, I cannot see!

The splendid headlight blinds my eyes,
  The train seems but to creep,
And long before it reaches here
  In bed I'm fast asleep.

Considering that certain Grit papers are still repeating the falsehood that young Scholes got a cool reception after his victory at Henley, it may be as well to quote what the young fellow himself says. Here it is: "I was delighted with my reception from the regatta crowd after my successes over Kelly and Cloutte. It could not have been more enthusiastic if the home representative had won."

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

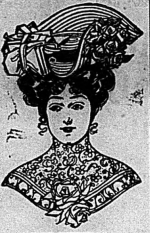
The famous "International Limited" leaves Belleville at 1.40 p.m. for Detroit, Chicago and St. Louis. It carries cafe parlor car serving meals at popular prices, and through Pullman to Chicago and the great World's Fair, St. Louis It is necessary to reserve accomodation in advance at Grand Trunk city or depot ticket offices.

MILLINERY AND DRESS.

Popular Fancies in Straw—Velvet and Embroidered Applications.

For morning wear quite a few hats are made of taffeta silk in two shades of one color, softened in many cases with a cream lace veil. Most of the new millinery shapes seem to be wide on the sides and short back and front. The straws used in making them are light and pliable, and several are used on one hat. Soft shades of green are pretty trimmed with foliage. Some hats for morning wear are of the Breton shade trimmed with little straw roses or big Alsatian straw bows. Bright cerise shading into ox blood is a favorite combination in hat trimmings. Orange and brown and brilliant light blue shading into navy are also popular tints.



THREE CORNERED HAT.

Black chantilly lace is much employed in this season's millinery. It is particularly effective when it is used on white hats and combined with black ostrich tips.

Shirrings are now being used more than ever. They appear both on waists and skirts of all materials thin enough to be treated in this manner.

Touches of velvet cut out and applied on cloth are very smart. So also are bits of embroidered lace done in gold, silver or colors.

The cut shows a tricorne shaped hat of green straw trimmed with pink roses and a shaded pink bow.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

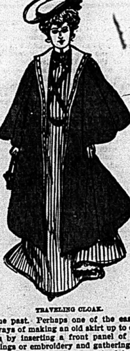
ACCESSORIES OF DRESS.

Sashes Are Again In Favor—Deep Kid and Silk Belts.

The deep belt has become an almost indispensable part of the costume. This belt is made of kid or silk, but kid is by far the smartest. It is shaped or else crushed. Some of the new belts are trimmed with buttons both front and back, and these are sewed on little crosswise strap effects.

White kid belts, white kid gloves, white linen shirt waists and bolero suits—these are combined with large white French sailor hats draped with lace or chiffon veils. The whole forms one of the smartest of summer costumes and one which, better still, can be laundered.

Overskirt and pannier effects are here to stay. The plain skirt is a thing of the past. Perhaps one of the easiest ways of making an old skirt up to date is by inserting a front panel of ruffiings or embroidery and gathering the additional fullness thus gained into a hip yoke if there is no hem to let down.



TRAVELING CLOAK.

Sashes are returning to favor, and quite a number of Parisian dressmakers are introducing them on the summer gowns they are making. But the new sash is anything but a simple affair. It is elaborately boned and knotted, and the ends are frequently trimmed with chiffon lace.

Every kind of linen, from the very coarsest to the finest, is in vogue, and never has Dame Fashion had so many varieties to place before her votaries. Loosely woven crashes flecked with color and coarse linens spangled with small rings of raised embroidery of the same color or of a darker shade are among the very newest designs.

The picture shows a traveling coat of blue cloth trimmed with white cloth revers and oriental embroidery. The hat is of soft straw, trimmed with a ribbon bow. JUDIC CHOLLET.

The Story of "Self-Help."

From a statement made to a representative of The Young Man it is evident that the book "Self Help" was offered to a publisher between March, 1854, and July, 1856, and the following is the story of one of the most successful books of the century:

A Leeds firm was willing to publish it and divide the profits, but I wanted it to come out in London. So I offered it to Routledge, but the Crimean War was then raging, and the book trade was consequently at a very low ebb.

I remember old Routledge saying, "Nobody will read books nowadays; newspaper accounts of battles and fights are much more to the public taste. If you will call any day, you will find the manuscript on the counter of my publishing house."

So I went one day and saw my "Self Help" lying amongst a lot of other documents; I picked it up and took it away with me and put it on one side, thinking "This won't do." But as soon as "Stephenson" was published, I thought, I will bring out the old manuscript, "Self Help," and see if I can't make something of it.

So I took it to Mr. Murray and said, "Will you publish this?"

"Yes—what is it?"

"It is a book I have had beside me for some time; will you publish it on the same terms as 'Stephenson'?"

The arrangement was, I had two-thirds and he one-third of the profits.

"I will be very glad to publish 'Self Help,'" said Mr. Murray, "but you must let me have half the profits."

It was not quite finished, so I told him I would consider the matter. I eventually got him to publish the book at my own risk. "Self Help" ran through a large number of editions; twenty thousand copies, I think, were sold the first year. It has been translated into all the languages of Europe without exception, and in some cases twice over—Italian, French, Spanish, German, Danish, Norwegian, Swedish, Russian; and also, curiously enough into Japanese. The books went off, as a partner of Murray's used to say, like hot cakes.

A Chance for Investors

The Cherry Creek Copper King Mines, Ltd., owns and operates the O.K. group of six mineral claims situated about four and a half miles south-west of Kamloops, B.C.

The property has exceptional advantages and is exceedingly valuable, and as the surface indications on this vein are identical with those at the workings on the Iron Mask, a property owned by the B.C. Exploring Syndicate, and adjoining it on the west. The following extracts from the Chairman's address to the shareholders at their general meeting held in London, Eng., on the 18th Sept. last, will give an idea as to the prospective value of the O.K. group:

"On the Iron Mask at Kamloops we have expended £26,000 and I think we may allow that this item is splendidly represented by the mine we have in process of development at Kamloops, and I believe you will credit us with having given you twenty shillings for every pound expended on that mine. • • • •

"If it is true that we have as we believe we have, a practically unlimited body of 5 per cent. ore in our mine at the Iron Mask, then in the words of one of the most eminent smelting millionaires in America, whom I had the pleasure of meeting at Salt Lake City, 'You have got millions.' • • • • "Kamloops is an absolutely ideal position for the erection of a smelter and the working of a mine. The railway, the water, the fuel and the grade of the earth surface, and the self fluxing nature of the ore all seem about as desirable as they could be. • • •

These extracts are from an address by a hard-headed London financier to equally hard-headed business men, who are developing their property with a view to large profits under the direction of an expert mining engineer.

Owing to the proximity of the mine to the railway, a short line of aerial tramway would be easy of construction and would enable the company to transport their ore to the railway at a cost not exceeding ten cents per ton. Freight and treatment charges for the class of ore obtained are exceedingly favorable and are quoted by the Trail and Granby smelters at $6.25 per ton, so that the entire cost of mining, freighting and smelting would not exceed $5.00 per ton. The ore is a high grade copper gold assaying from 10 per cent. to 24 per cent. copper and from $6 to $22 gold per ton, and is in great demand at the smelter owing to its fluxing qualities.

The near future will see the erection of a large copper smelting plant to treat the ores of this district, both the B.C. Exploring Syndicate and the Inland Smelter Company having already selected and purchased sites. The completion of these enterprises will insure the lowest possible rates for reduction of local ores. The company has secured a clear title to the property on the most favorable terms, the former owners showing their confidence in the mine by accepting the entire purchase price in fully paid up shares of the company.

After paying all the expenses in connection with the incorporation, the amounts due on options secured by the company and the purchase price of the O.K. group, there remains in the treasury two hundred thousand shares, the proceeds from the sale of which are to be applied to the development of the properties, now owned or to be hereafter acquired by the company. There is absolutely no promoters stock, and the issue advertised in another column is the first opportunity offered the public to invest in the shares of the Company.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieves the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

of hanging the murderer, is not attractive to me."

"Surely you do not mean that murderers should go unpunished?"

"No; perhaps that would not be a wise course. But to me it seems that the arrest, conviction and hanging of a specified murderer are matters of absolutely no importance and of no effect in abating the tendency toward crime, which is such a conspicuous characteristic of mankind. As I hinted awhile ago, when you said that I went too deep for you, I can almost believe that it is of more utility to study the causes which have made a given crime possible than to capture and kill the criminal. We think that we have thus got rid of him. We have put him away, out of the world. We have ended his career. Ah! But have we? Can we be sure that his crime will not breed another crime as a direct sequence to the one for which he is punished? And do we know whether his punishment will advance or check the tendency toward crime which he has left as a heritage to his offspring? These are questions of more interest to me, Mr. Barnes, than the killing of the man who killed Mr. Mora."

"But surely, I must repeat," said Mr. Barnes, "you would not advise that crimes should go unpunished?"

"Perhaps I might when I am wiser, you know." Mr. Mitchel laughed and once again abruptly changed the subject. "However, Mr. Barnes, since you frown so upon me I will lend you my assistance."

"You will?" exclaimed Mr. Barnes eagerly.

"I will, 'and there's my hand on't,' as the song says. No! No! No thanks are necessary. Who knows? As I said before, perhaps your affair may be connected with mine, after all, in which case I would but be advancing my own interests in aiding you."

"Do you mean that you have found some connection between the killing of Mr. Mora and"—

"Perhaps! I only say perhaps! Do not press me to commit myself further. And now give me 24 hours in which to study the case, will you?"

Mr. Barnes accepted the hint to go, and after cordially thanking Mr. Mitchel for his promised assistance he went away lighter hearted. With Mr. Mitchel co-operating he thought that only a few days would be needed to bring him to the truth.

After his departure Mr. Mitchel took up the newspaper, intending to read over the report of the inquest, when his eye rested upon a headline in the next column, which caused him to read the following:

"BRUTAL TREATMENT OF A CHILD.

"The Metropolitan Foundling society have just had their attention drawn to a case which is peculiarly monstrous in its cruelty. It appears that one of their agents on his regular tour through the east side was notified by the policeman on duty that a baby had been abandoned near by. Upon investigation the agent found that a row of tenements backed upon a small burial ground which, of course, had not been used for interments for many years and is therefore rarely opened. Into this graveyard some fiend had thrown a girl baby, about a year old, and there left it, in a fitting place to starve to death. The infant when discovered was entirely naked, so that there was nothing about it which could serve as a means of identification. Inquiry among the inhabitants of the tenements elicited the fact that for four days the child had been seen crawling about in the grass, playing among the headstones, yet no one had found time to investigate the affair, though some one had thrown bits of bread and crackers to the poor little baby, which it ravenously seized upon and devoured. To those living in up town streets, dwelling in comfortable if not luxurious homes, it may seem incredible that this infant could be thus left for so many days with no one to go to its rescue. But these poor folks are themselves nigh starvation, working long, dreary hours under the killing influences of the dread sweatshop, with masters correcting them for a moment's idleness. Such as these have their better feelings dulled; such as these have no time to wonder whose baby this waif might be or whether, after all, it may not have belonged to some one near by who would claim it before nightfall. Indeed the wonder is that such as these even had the thought to throw food to the little one creeping about in the grass. But the horror is that any human being could abandon a child to such a fate as only chance saved this tot from suffering. The fiend should be found and punished."

"Ah, yes," said Mr. Mitchel, laying aside his paper—"found and punished! That is the final, the only, way that society has of disposing of such cases. Mr. Barnes would approve. And what of the next case? Why, the same treatment, of course—arrest and punish. But the reporter here has lifted a corner of the veil and given us a glimpse of the sweatshop. There they are manufacturing coats. Are they making anything else?" He took up the paper and read the article through once more, and as he put it down he exclaimed:

"Horrible, monstrous! And yet Mr. Barnes thinks that the killing of Mr. Mora is the crime of the century. Ah, well, we shall widen the scope of your views some day, Mr. Barnes!"

CHAPTER II.

"UNTO THE THIRD AND FOURTH"—FINGERS.

A half hour later Mr. Mitchel entered the office of the Metropolitan Foundling society and from one of the clerks obtained further information relative to the foundling. The address of a woman who had first reported the case, as well as her name, Gertrude Griffin, was given to him, and upon his request he was permitted to see the little waif, who was snugly tucked away in a cot on the floor above.

As Mr. Mitchel was entering the upper room he met an acquaintance in the hallway. This was Colonel Payton, one of the directors of the society.

The colonel was a large man, with a fine head and commanding mien. His hair was whitening, and his long side whiskers, already white, made him look older than he really was. During the late civil war he had served his country faithfully and had earned his epaulets by bravery on the field, having risen from the ranks to the position which he held when his command had been mustered out. Returning to New York after the war, he settled down to the peaceful occupation of making money, and by fortunate speculations in Wall street and investments in real estate he had placed himself far above the need of further effort.

Therefore he had retired from active business and for several years had devoted his time to church and charity. In this manner he had earned the reputation of being a useful member of society, a philanthropist who gave freely, yet who deprecated indiscriminate almsgiving, believing that the best good was to be attained by helping others to help themselves. He had therefore allied himself with several associations having the betterment of the poor as their aim.

Personally he was an exceedingly genial and pleasant companion until you differed with him on one of his principles of life, when he would show his New England ancestry, being very "set." He was a bachelor, and some said that he was a woman hater, which was denied by others, who declared that he eschewed the society of the opposite sex because he had unsuccessfully wooed one whom he had wished to make his bride. However this may have been, whenever the colonel did choose to honor a social gathering with his presence he was sure of a warm reception. His evenings were usually spent at his club, where he was a conspicuous figure at the whist table, and, whether or not he was a favorite with the ladies, certain it was that he was honored and even courted by his own sex as a bon vivant and a raconteur of rare ability.

"Delighted to meet you, Mr. Mitchel!" exclaimed the colonel, recognizing that gentleman. "I thought you were on the other side."

"I have just returned by the Paris," said Mr. Mitchel. "I see you are on your rounds. Inspecting one of your favorite charities?"

"Well, hardly that," said the colonel, with a laugh. "I don't allow my charities, as you call them, to take up all of my time. But there is a case in hand at present to which I shall give my personal attention. Perhaps you have read of the horror in the morning papers?"

"Do you mean that little naked baby found in the graveyard?"

Mr. Mitchel was pleased to find that his companion was interested in this case, as he counted upon his garrulousness to obtain more of the facts than had escaped from the official mouth, sealed with red tape, which he had met below stairs.

"Yes," replied the colonel. "That is a monstrous affair. Think of a mother throwing a baby less than a year old into a graveyard and leaving it there to starve. I intend to find that woman and"—

"How do you know it was the mother?" asked Mr. Mitchel quietly. "It may have been the father who thus wished to rid himself of a burdensome offspring."

"Of course, of course!" said the colonel, irritated by the interruption, as well as by the suggestion that he might be in error. "But what difference does that make? Mother or father, it is all the same to me. I will hunt down the culprit and see that full punishment is meted out."

"I will hunt down the culprit and see that full punishment is meted out."

"Punishment, always punishment!" thought Mr. Mitchel. "How eagerly society punishes! How little it does to prevent!" Then he added aloud:

"What would be your idea of a fitting punishment, colonel?"

"I am sorry to say that my ideas and the law do not agree on that point. The law allots seven years in the penitentiary for abandonment of a child. But in this case there was an evident intent to kill. Otherwise the infant would have been placed on a doorstep or rather conspicuous spot where it could be found. If I had my way, I would give the guilty party 20 years at least."

"What good would that do?" asked Mr. Mitchel. He said it so quickly and the words were such a surprise to the colonel that the latter was nonplused for a moment, and then he blurted out excitably:

"What good would it do? It would teach him a lesson and others as well, wouldn't it? It would show people of this class that if they have children they must care for them or go to prison, wouldn't it?"

"I think it would be better," said Mr. Mitchel, "to teach people that when they have children they must care for them without going to prison."

"A fine theory," sneered the colonel. "And how would you accomplish that, pray?"

"Oh, I do not say that it is a simple problem. But, colonel, at present it seems to me that the law has a wrong aim in view. If a man abandons a child—I say a man, for it is the father who should support mother and child, and it is only through penury that the ordinary mother yields up her progeny; if the father, then, fails in his duty, the law locks him up, at present. How does this work? First, the man is placed where it becomes impossible for him to do that, failing in which he is held culpable; secondly, the mother is left more helpless than before, for the hope of reclaiming the man to her side is taken from her, and, lastly, the child is thrown into a public institution, which, however well maintained, is a poor substitute for a home with parental influence."

"And how would you have it work?" asked the colonel, still sneering, but interested in spite of himself.

"I have observed," continued Mr. Mitchel, "that foundlings belong to two classes only. First, they are the children of the very poor, to whom the added burden of another mouth to feed is too great. The youngest born is abandoned in order that those who have preceded it and who have earned a place in the parents' hearts may not suffer. In these cases I see a good field for charity. If we would care for these extra burdens of the poor until such time as the parents might reclaim them, they would not be abandoned. If we also extended a helping hand to the parents, finding more remunerative work for them, by putting hope into their hearts, they would have increased energy and would soon learn to support what now they cast adrift. The little ones would spend but their earlier years in charitable asylums and would be taken home when old enough to appreciate what home means."

"And the other class?" asked the colonel, this time without any sarcasm in his tones.

"Ah! That is the class which would be the more difficult to control and therefore would need the most stringent measures. These are the children of shame. The punishment should be compulsory marriage and support of wife and child. In these cases the mothers may be and often are as blamable as the fathers, though the men are the tempters. But surely the children are innocent and should receive the full protection of the state. First, their birth should be legitimatized by the marriage of their parents, and, second, the father should contribute to the support of his child."

"Ah, very pretty in theory!" cried the colonel. He was pleased to find a weak spot in Mr. Mitchel's argument. "But suppose that the man has no means of supporting his child, or, worse yet, suppose that he be already a married man?"

"In the latter event, of course, a marriage between him and his victim would be impossible, but in any case he could be made to support his child, which would be more just to the infant than the imprisonment of the man."

"But how, in the name of conscience, can you make a man support a child if there is no alternative punishment?"

"Oh! I did not say that there should be no punishment. I only argued against imprisonment. This is a fitting use for the whipping post. Corporal punishment is sometimes more effectual than any other. For example, if all married men guilty of this crime should be publicly flogged once a month for a year after conviction I think much would be accomplished toward a regeneracy of the moral status of the community. But let me answer you as to the compulsory support of the child. If the man has means, it would be easy enough for the court to allot a specified monthly payment to the mother and child. To insure such payment a part of the culprit's property could be placed under the guardianship of the public administrator, not actually confiscated, but so arranged that no disposition could be made of it against the interests of the child."

"But suppose the man has no visible means of support?"

"A man who can work and won't work must be made to work. If he can be made to work for the state in prison, surely he can be compelled to work for his child out of prison. I think if a man were flogged every week until he would make an honest effort to obtain employment he would soon look eagerly for work. Of course he might do this and not succeed. In which case, when he had proved his willingness to do his duty, he would have reached the same plane as the father in the first class and would be a worthy object of assistance."

"I guess we'll have to send you to the legislature," said the colonel, who found that he was getting the worst of the argument, and so preferred to let the topic drop. "Would you like to see the latest applicant for assistance under your scheme?"

"I would indeed," said Mr. Mitchel, and together they entered.

The colonel led the way across the room, the matron rising from her chair and following them.

"I want to show this gentleman our newest boarder," said the colonel.

"She's a little angel," said the matron, turning down the coverlet.

"You mean she might have been," said the colonel grimly. "That is what her parents hoped, Mrs. Martin."

"The inhuman brutes!" exclaimed the matron. "I wish I could see them both behind the bars. They ought to get 20 years at least."

Mr. Mitchel smiled. The present system apparently is so universally acceptable that it would be a herculean task to remodel the laws to meet a more scientific and philanthropic scope. Philanthropy toward criminals—how strange the words would sound in the public ear! The advocate of such a system would be considered a lunatic or at least a crank.

Mr. Mitchel stooped over the crib and gazed into the great blue eyes, which seemed unduly large because of the pinched and starved little face. Yet the hands and feet were still fat and chubby, the four days of exposure not having been enough to reduce them in any apparent degree.

"She would be a pretty child if her face was not so thin," ventured Mr. Mitchel, feeling that he was at best but a poor judge of such young specimens of humanity.

"She would be pretty!" cried the matron indignantly. "She is pretty—the prettiest little girlie that has been in this room in many a day!"

Mrs. Martin had once had a baby of her own, a tiny, sickly little thing, which had soon withered and died. But the yearnings of motherhood aroused by that little cherub had never quite died out, and when her husband was killed shortly afterward, leaving her alone in the world and hopeless in her dearest desire, she had gladly accepted this position, where she could do unto others as she would have done for her own. Each baby placed in her care for a few days reminded her of her own lost darling, and her heart went out to it so completely that the final separation always left her gloomy and despondent, a condition which would continue until the next outcast was brought in.

This baby in some manner had attracted her more than ordinarily, perhaps because of its unusually sad history, and she resented even praise which was not given in full measure; so she lifted the little one up in her arms and held her out for inspection.

"Did you ever see such pretty feet? Look at her toes—just as perfect as the Lord ever made! And see the dimples! Ain't they just lovely?" She kissed each dimple rapturously and then continued: "Just look at her hands! They are pretty enough to belong to the quality. Now, I hold that the hands tell the breeding better than anything, and one or the other of the parents of this young lady is high bred, or I'm no judge."

She looked about as though defying contradiction, but neither man cared to dispute the point with her, so Mrs. Martin's testimony stood, as the testimony of all experts should.

"She certainly has beautiful hands," said Mr. Mitchel, by way of recovering the good graces of the matron. "Just look at them, colonel!"

"Oh, I have already admired all the young lady's points!" said the colonel. "Haven't I, Mrs. Martin?"

He reached forward and playfully tickled the youngster in the ribs, whereupon she grasped his thumb in her hand and gripped it tightly.

"Indeed you have, colonel," said the matron. "I must say you seem to have taken quite a fancy to the baby, and see there, now, how she takes to you! I wonder, colonel, you don't adopt the dear little cherub."

"Adopt! I adopt a baby!" The colonel laughed heartily. "Imagine an old soldier like me, and a bachelor besides, adopting a baby, and a girl baby in the bargain!"

Again he laughed, while the baby, as though advocating her cause, stretched out her other arm and danced as though desiring to be taken, whereupon the matron delightedly handed over her charge, which snuggled up against the old soldier, still clinging to his great thumb.

"There, now," said Mrs. Martin, "ain't that a pretty picture? And, as to your being a bachelor, the more shame to you! I hold that bachelors should do their share toward supporting the children in the world as well as others. There's many a poor father with more brats than he can feed, while there's others with plenty of money that just shirks. They just leaves the babies for other people to raise. No offense to you, of course, colonel!"

Mrs. Martin added her last words hastily, as the colonel had suddenly, and seemingly without reason, stopped laughing and was handing back the child. Perhaps she had been too familiar with one of her superiors, but she was so anxious to see this little tot secure a good berth in the world that she had forgotten herself for the time.

"You are talking stuff and nonsense, Mrs. Martin," said the colonel stiffly as he yielded up the child. "You are old enough to have better sense. I am astonished. Come, Mitchel! If you have seen enough, we'll go. Or perhaps you are looking for a child for adoption?"

"No; not that," said Mr. Mitchel earnestly and looking squarely at the colonel. "But I would like you to arrange it so that no disposition will be made of this child without my knowledge."

"Certainly, if you wish it. But why?"

"Because I mean to put my theory into practice. I mean to discover the father of that child and compel him to support it."

"The devil you do!"

The colonel was astounded. Mr. Mitchel was evidently crazier that he had thought. Theories were well enough, but if one tried to put them into practice his mind must be weakening.

"Such is my intention," persisted Mr. Mitchel.

"I wish you joy in your venture," said the colonel, with his most satirical sneer.

Before following the colonel from the room Mr. Mitchel stooped over and kissed the baby and held her hand in his for a moment. He had imagined something and wished to confirm or dismiss the idea. While the baby had been clasping the colonel's thumb he had noted a peculiarity about the colonel's hand. The knuckle of the third finger was abnormally large, and consequently the little finger seemed quite curved at the end from lying against the protruding joint next to it. It had also seemed to him that the baby's fingers were similarly fashioned. He therefore looked at the hand more attentively now that he held it within his own, and, sure enough, he found the large joint of the third finger and the curved end of the fourth.

"I do," said the matron positively.

"Then we will make her blueblooded father provide for her," replied Mr. Mitchel.

"That's the talk, sir, and luck go with you!" said Mrs. Martin, her first opinion of Mr. Mitchel much altered in that gentleman's favor.

"Take care of the little lady till her father calls for her," added Mr. Mitchel.

"That I will, sir, and heaven bless you for a good man!"

Leaving the building, Mr. Mitchel crossed over to Third avenue and boarded an elevated train, going down town as far as the Chatham square station, where he descended to the street. One minute's walk brought him to the quaint old burial ground rising ten feet above the street level and guarded by a brick wall, surmounted by an iron fence with spear topped pickets. As Mr. Mitchel stood peering into the place an elevated train went by with a rumbling noise, reminding him that he was in one of the city's most public thoroughfares. Yet this little graveyard, passed by thousands daily speeding down to their place of business and surrounded by tenements crowded to suffocation, had been chosen as a fitting spot in which to abandon a child, and only one of the many human beings thereabout had found time to interfere in behalf of the stray waif. What an astonishing commentary upon civilization that such things could be!

Mr. Mitchel passed on to the next corner and, turning, soon found himself in front of the number given to him as the address of Gertrude Griffin. He paused a moment, considering what would be the best way to find the woman, and then accosted a young hoodlum of 10 who came out of the house.

"Do you know whether Gertrude Griffin is at home?" he asked.

"Naw! How sh'd I know? I ain't her keeper."

"But she lives here, does she not?"

"Maybe she do, and maybe she don't. I ain't runnin this lodgin house, so I ain't 'quainted with the hull gang what sleeps here."

"Do you suppose I could go up stairs?"

"Sure! There ain't nobody holdin you, is there?"

With a laugh the incorrigible youngster ran off down the street, leaving his questioner as wise as before they had met. A number of small children, with pinched faces and inquiring eyes, had gathered about the well dressed man, who was something of a curiosity in the neighborhood, and stood gazing at him expectantly. Believing that he might succeed better with one of the girls, Mr. Mitchel accosted a bright looking child about 8 and asked her if she knew where Gertrude Griffin lived, but the little one shook her head negatively and shyly retreated behind her companions. Patting her caressingly on the head, he went into the house.

The hallway was so narrow that, leaving the sunlight without, he found at first that he could see nothing at all, the darkness by contrast being so great. In a few moments his eyes became accustomed to the gloom, and he made out that there was a narrow passageway, on either side of which he could see three doors, but at the opposite end nothing but inky blackness. Was it possible that human beings lived in such structures as this? A loud scuffle, a scream and the angry voices of a man and woman in drunken brawl, coming from the mysterious realms somewhere over his head, answered his mental query.

He knocked at the door nearest to him, and after a long wait it was opened a few inches, and a black bearded head with two shining eyes looked out at him.

"Vat do you vant?" was the greeting in foreign accent.

"Does Gertrude Griffin live in this building?" asked Mr. Mitchel.

"How in de vorld should I know?" was the answer, accompanied by a noisy bang of the door as the head disappeared, shutting out the whirring sound of sewing machines which had given evidence of life within.

The man evidently thought it a preposterous proposition that he should

After The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices. Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen, for we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

The Barmaids of Babylon.

(New York World.)

A recent translation of King Hamourabi's code, written about 2,250 years before Christ, gives us an insight into the life of the great city of Babylon at that remote time, and of the way in which the excise question was handled by its legislators.

Nearly all the dealers of wines and liquors at that time were women, as many of the laws translated from the code speak only of women as sellers of drinks. Severe measures were taken against those who adulterated the wines or mixed them with water, so as to safeguard the purity of the article for the use of the public. The barmaid was held responsible for all disorderly scenes or drunkenness in her premises, and death was the penalty for those who did not denounce all cases of drunkenness to the police. Those women who were employed in the temples were forbidden to enter public hostelries under penalty of death, and even drinking in private was forbidden to them.

Special police officers were detailed for the enforcement of the excise laws in the city of Babylon, but then as well as now the officers charged with this duty were, if we are to believe the code in question, either negligent in the performance of their duties or too willing to accept bribes from the barmaids in the shape of drinks, or even money. Severe punishment is dealt out in the document to the police officers who shall accept bribes in connection with the enforcement of the excise laws of Baybion, but it is probable that then as well as now many of the fair saloonkeepers found a way to bribe the officers and evade the laws.

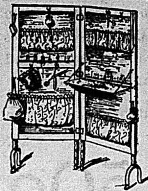
HOME FURNISHING.

TWO DEVICES OF GREATEST CONVENIENCE IN THE HOUSEHOLD.

A Screen That Accommodates the Sewing Equipment, Patterns and Odds and Ends—A Light Serving Table For the Dining Room.

By the use of this screen one can sit at the machine or sewing table and sew without having to take any extra steps in getting together the tools and materials used for the work.

These screens can be bought ready for use or can be made at home. Being intended to bear considerable weight, the frame must be strong. Any carpenter or handy man can make one, using material which is one and a half inches wide and thick. There may be either two or three panels, but two are usually enough. Each panel should be 36 by 18 inches and have two turned legs about eight inches high for a support. These can be obtained at small cost at a woodworking shop or can be cut from some old piece of furniture. The frame is made exactly like the frame of a plain screen door, but the crosspieces, which are used as braces to strengthen the frame, are placed a little above the middle of one panel and as much below the middle of the other one.

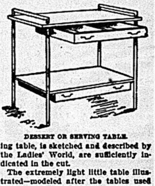


A SEWING SCREEN.

The frame is painted or stained; then a cover is made for the right side, using art denim of a pretty shade on which have been appliqued sprays of flowers and foliage cut from cretonne. It can be put on in either one or two pieces for each panel, being fastened closely with fancy tacks. Before this cover is tacked in place the pockets for the back of the screen are stitched to it, as it is almost impossible to do the work after the cover is in place.

All the pockets are made with a casing at the top, in which elastic is run, so they are kept tight and snug. The deep pocket can be used to hold unfinished work or mending. Some distance above it a pocket of six inches in depth can be placed, to be used for holding patterns. All the pockets are made to extend clear across the panel. On the other panel there are two pockets, both shallow, one near the top and the other at the bottom.

Further details of fitting up this screen, which, together with the serving table, is sketched and described by the Ladies' World, are sufficiently indicated in the cut.



DESSERT OR SERVING TABLE.

The extremely light little table illustrated—modeled after the tables used in the wards of hospitals, where lightness is essential—will be found most convenient as an auxiliary to the regular dining table.

The lower shelf doubles the capacity of the table, while in the drawers can be placed silver knives, forks and spoons needed in serving the dessert and extra napkins.

The lightness of the table and the convenience of the handles upon the top make it easy to use the table for a tray, with the advantage that it need not be set down upon the dinner table itself to be unloaded, but can rest upon its own legs.

Fashion's Echoes.

Lingerie ruffles are still to be much worn in the sleeves of coats and gowns.

Striped effects are especially in favor in the new silks for shirt waists and shirt waist dresses.

Parasols for morning use are of linen and pongee to match the suits and also of the new shaded taffeta.

A noted change in the coiffure for dress occasions is the introduction of a pompadour floral wreath when the hair is worn low.

Short skirted, unlined gowns of satin in tan, London smoke, beige brown and dark violet shades serve for short journeys.

The draped waist has become a strong rival of the blouse. Many of these waists are worn in early Victorian effect over the skirt and with a deep, unbelted point in front.

Foulard petticoats will wear well. They come in pretty middle colors—good browns, tans, blues, reds and greens, as well as drabs and grays.

The decrease in size of toque and turban has met with unqualified favor, and far less difficulty is experienced in finding not only just the kind of hat for every occasion, but the most becoming, than last season.

CHARGED WITH TILL TAPPING

YOUNG SANDY GEE, IT IS ALLEGED, HAS A LIKING FOR OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY.

A lad named Sandy Gee was yesterday afternoon apprehended by the police, being charged with till tapping. It is alleged that the boy went into a grocery kept by Mrs. Horton, on Evans street, gained access to the till and extracted therefrom $1.25. Owing to Gee being of tender years he was not placed behind the bars, but allowed to go home upon an assurance that he would appear before the Magistrate this morning.

The boy did not appear this morning and the Magistrate directed that he be brought before him this afternoon, if found.

MR. C. M. REID WRITES INTERESTINGLY OF THINGS HE SAW IN THE OLD LAND.

To the Editor of The Intelligencer:

Dear Sir,—I thought it might be of some interest to your readers to have brought before them a few of the marked differences of life and manners noticed in foreign countries. So much has been written about ocean voyages that I will not occupy your valuable space with a detailed account of our trip across the Atlantic.

We had on board our boat a large number of the most prominent ministers of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, who were en route to the Presbyterian conference in Liverpool, and a jollier and finer lot of fellow passengers one could not wish for.

We will not, at this time, stop to mention the beauties of England, but will at once leave for the continent. In going from London to Berlin you have the choice of several routes; this year all chose the one via Harwich and the Hook of Holland.

Leaving London from Liverpool street station (one of the busiest stations in the world) at 8 p.m. you have a run of about two hours through a most beautiful part of England. Here you will see entire fields covered with scarlet poppies, which, although very beautiful to look at, are to the gardener a veritable nuisance, as they are a weed quite as difficult to deal with as the herrick or mustard plant at home.

Arriving at Harwich, on the southeast coast, about ten o'clock, you embark on a Dutch express steamer which carries you at the rate of 25 miles an hour across the German Ocean. The channel for large vessels out of the harbor at Harwich is a very tortuous one, and as the vessel winds in and out you pass many of the large war vessels belonging to the Channel Squadron. Should the weather be fine you will be amazed when standing on the upper deck and looking in the wake of the vessel to see great billows of gold rising up and washing the shore. The water here is heavily charged with phosphorus, and the propeller of the vessel stirring it up gives quite the effect of passing through a sea of gold.

A Canadian fellow passenger had a very uncomfortable experience the night we crossed. On arising from his berth in the early morning and going to the place where he had hung his trousers on retiring the night before he found both trousers and the money they contained gone. As he had not another pair with him he was in quite an awkward predicament, but after calling the steward and making considerable of a row the trousers were found in another part of the ship, but not the money. Someone had reached his arm in and taken them off their hook, and, after rifling the pockets, had thrown them down.

Arriving at the hook of Holland at 5 o'clock in the morning you are at once ushered into the Dutch Customs House, where your luggage is examined. You immediately notice the peculiar footgear of the people, as almost every man, woman and child you see is wearing wooden clogs instead of shoes. They make a great noise on the cobblestone pavements and would, no doubt, be very uncomfortable for anyone to wear who is not accustomed to them. You have now left England and the English far behind, and unless in company with other Anglo-Saxons you will hear little more of your native tongue for a while. The gutteral sounds of the Dutch tongue are now all about you, and from the earnestness of their speech and gesticulations you can hardly think they are not quarreling. Your train is awaiting the arrival of the steamer and you notice they are somewhat larger than those used in England, but much smaller and of a different pattern to the American ones. You do not see, in all your travels abroad, such large and powerful engines as those passing through Belleville every day on the Grand Trunk. The cars, or carriages, as they are called, are also much lighter than ours and their interior of quite a different plan. There is a narrow corridor running the full length along one side and from this are doors leading into compartments, each of which seats six persons, three facing the engine and three with their backs to it. You can close the glass doors and draw the blinds and be as separate from the passengers as though they were in another train. You soon find that, though the engines are lighter and smaller than ours they pull the train along at an average speed of nearly 50 miles per hour.

You are rapidly gliding across Holland, a small but very wealthy country, containing a nation of thrifty, industrious people, as evidenced by the well-kept appearance of the houses, barns and fields, which pass before you like a kaleidoscopic view. The fields are small and all divided by ditches 5 or 6 feet wide, full of water, and there is a total absence of fences of any kind. The land is given up largely to pasture and you see thousands of cattle grazing, nearly all of which are black and white Holsteins. The cattle and stables are washed thoroughly clean every day, which is, perhaps, one reason why the Dutch butter and cheese finds such a ready market in London. The country is very low and flat and well suited to dairy purposes. Much of the land has been reclaimed from the sea, the water being kept out by great dykes. Every farmhouse has a large Dutch windmill, such as you see frequently illustrated in pictures on calendars.

You quickly notice that the large proportion of the workers in the fields both here and in Germany, are women. They do all sorts of heavy manual labor, such as in our country is relegated to men, including reaping, raking and loading the hay in the fields, and in the cities drawing heavy carts containing milk, vegetables, etc. On a former occasion I once saw a woman and a young heifer hitched to a plow which a man was driving. It is quite a common sight in both Holland and Germany to see a woman and a large dog hitched to a heavy milk cart. The woman has a strap which fits over her shoulders and this she throws off when she takes the milk into the houses. May it be a long time before we see woman doing this sort of work in Canada.

It is but a short run before your train pulls into the station at Amsterdam, the centre of the diamond cutting industry for the world, and should you desire to pay a visit to Holland's capital, the Hague, you will branch off here, as the writer did a few years ago, and another short run lands you in this historic city, where you could find enough of interest to occupy your time and attention for weeks. I have not the space here to attempt anything of a detailed description, but cannot pass without a mention of the beautiful paintings to be seen by such noted Flemish artists as Rubens, Paul Patter, Rembrandt and VanDyck, pictures that fairly hold one spellbound and make you feel how bare is our own country of such treasures. These are mostly owned by the state and could not be purchased for any amount of money.

Here also is a famous old prison, dating back to the time of the Spanish Inquisition, preserved in exactly the same condition as when used as a place of imprisonment and torture by the Tribunal, and containing all those terrible instruments of torture so cruel that you would think them beyond the mind of man or devil to invent. Here you see the rack, wheel and thumb screw used to crush to pulp the bones of unbelievers or dissenters. Here is the great metal slab that, when heated red hot, the prisoners were made to walk upon with bare feet and if they came off without their feet being burned their innocence was proven. Needless to say, none escaped. Here again is where prisoners stood with their heads fastened as in a vice while water fell upon them drop by drop until from sheer agony they became insane and finally expired. Here again are the cells where, without food, poor unfortunates were confined close to the kitchen until they suffered all the agonies of starvation with the fumes of cooking in their nostrils and were finally bereft of their reason and life. All this, and much more, done in the cause of religion and in the name of One who came to ameliorate our sufferings and make us happy.

You would be sure to drive out to the "Palace of the Wood," the former state residence of Holland's rulers, situated in a beautiful forest a short distance from the city. The central hall of this palace is beautifully decorated, the work having been done by Rubens and two of his pupils, and so perfect are the colorings that they look as though they had only been painted yesterday instead of two and a half centuries ago.

But my letter has assumed such proportions that I must pause, and perhaps in another take you into Germany and France, giving a short sketch of their capitals, Berlin and Paris.

Yours truly,
C. M. REID.

The Band Concert.

A large number of citizens last evening were in the vicinity of the Hospital lot, listening to the concert given by the I.O.O.F. band, which rendered an enjoyable programme. Owing to there being no seats, the neighbors kindly furnished the musicians with chairs, which act was much appreciated. If concerts are to be given there the providing of lights and seats, at least for the band, should be arranged for.

LATEST WAR NEWS

Russian Coon Has Climbed Down.

Malacca Will Not be Brought Before a Prize Court, and the Czar's

Government Undertakes That No Similar Incident Shall Occur Again.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

St. Petersburg, July 22.—The Russian reply to the British protests was handed to Ambassador Harding this afternoon. Therein Russia agrees that the Malacca shall not be brought before a prize court and undertakes that no similar incident shall occur in the future.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

(The Globe.)

The important news this morning is that the Japanese plans for getting in behind Kuropatkin's army and cutting off his line of retreat are now being executed. General Kuroki, after a long period of inaction, is on the march directly toward Liaoyang by the northern road. Following upon the battle of Sunday he set his columns in motion, and by Tuesday night had arrived within twenty-five miles of Liaoyang. Despatches yesterday indicate that he has driven his army in between the force commanded by Count Keller and that of General Rennenkampf on the north. He can at will turn upon Liaoyang or march north toward Mukden through a country that offers little opportunity for a protracted defence.

While Kuroki is pressing forward Oku seems to be keeping closely in touch with the Russians around Tatchekiao, in the hope that the bulk of Kuropatkin's army will remain there until the nimble Jap in the north throws the net around it. The operations must reach a crisis soon after Kuroki cuts the railway, which he will probably be able to do by the end of the week. That will leave the Russians in the air and force Kuropatkin to give battle. There is no official confirmation of the story that the Japanese were badly beaten in a fight near Haicheng on Tuesday and lost ten guns. Had the tale been a true one Kuropatkin would have sent it to St. Petersburg as quickly as the wires could take it.

The Vladivostok squadron has disappeared from view and will probably not be heard of again until it makes a big capture. There are vague rumors of heavy cannonading at Port Arthur, but the Japanese are absolutely silent as to the progress they are making in the siege.

The one sure cure is fragrant, healing Catarrhozone, which is sent by the air you breathe direct to the root of the trouble. Mr. T. Y. MacVicar, of Yarmouth, suffered for years from catarrh and says: "In my long experience with this loathsome disease I never used any remedy that relieved and cured so promptly as Catarrhozone. When my nostrils were so stuffed up that I couldn't breathe I found a few inhalations of Catarrhozone was sufficient to clear away the mucous. I am perfectly cured by Catarrhozone and free from the disease entirely." Use only Catarrhozone Complete outfit $1.00; trial size 25c.

ELECTED OFFICERS FOR DIFFERENT DISTRICTS.

PROCEEDINGS OF MASONIC GRAND LODGE, IN SESSION AT BROCKVILLE.

Brockville, July 21.—The various districts met this morning before the session of the Grand Lodge, and elected the District Deputies as follows: Erie, D. F. Webster, West Lorne; Niagara, W. Bald, Thorold; Georgian, E. A. Wakefield, Orillia; Prince Edward, Lieut.-Col. J. E. Halliwell, Stirling; Wellington, John Porteous, Galt; Wilson, J. R. Waddell, Port Dover; Ontario, E. M. Punshon, Oshawa; St. Clair, S. W. Trusier, Camlachie; Algoma, W. A. Weir, Rat Portage; Muskoka, W. W. McPhee, Gravenhurst; Ottawa, W. S. Luke, Ottawa; Toronto, A. R. W. Thompson, St. George's Lodge, and J. B. Duncan, Occident Lodge; Nipissing, M. McFadden, Sault Ste. Marie; Frontenac, Jas. A. Minnes, Kingston; Hamilton, Fred Walter; North Huron, N. J. McPherson, Kincardine; South Huron, Geo. Malcolm, Stratford; London, Henry Roe, St. Thomas; St. Lawrence, H. B. McGee, Merrickville.

The Grand Lodge of Masons got down to business yesterday and, although one report elicited a lengthy discussion, good progress was made in the work. The weather was not so warm as previously, and the local brethren had a free lemonade booth that did a thriving trade. Politicians are often accused of overmuch talking, but there are most worshipful brethren who can show them the way from the drop of the flag to the wire.

The first business after dinner was receiving in proper form the representatives of foreign jurisdictions. These are usually members of the Grand Lodge of Canada. In addition to those holding the positions heretofore, the following were appointed during the year, and were received with the rest: Geo. W. O. Anderson, Florida; A. H. Clark, Michigan; Jas. McLauchlan, Tennessee; B. Allen, Vermont; A. E. Cooper, Porto Rico; A. G. McWhinney, Oklahoma; M. W. Bro. Senator Ross, of Nova Scotia, and M. W. Bro. Sutherland, of Rochester, N.Y.

The Jurisprudence Committee reported against the right of a subordinate lodge to confer the past-master's degree on a brother who had been master only in a lodge working under dispensation.

A lengthy and spirited discussion took place on the report of the Committee on the Semi-Continental Fund. This is a pet project of Grand Master Harding, launched last year, to celebrate the fiftieth year of Canadian Masonry by raising $100,000 in three years, the interest to be applied to cases of distress among the craft. The report was presented by W. Bro. Wickham, of Kingston. It expressed the opinion that the fund could not be raised in three years. It also provided for machinery to carry out the scheme by appointing a central as well as district committees to take charge of it and prosecute the work. A great many opinions were expressed and re-expressed on this report, the general opinion being that the fund could be raised promptly if the brethren fully understood it.

Bro. Wright, of Picton, suggested that the Grand Secretary make a tour through the jurisdiction on behalf of the fund. After hours of discussion, in which Grand Master Harding, Hon. Grand Master Sutherland, Past G. M. Stevenson, Past G. M. Gibson, Aubrey White and others took part, the committee decided on the suggestion of the last named to amend their report by reducing the time of raising the fund to three years, and thus amended, it carried unanimously.

Brockville, July 22.—Grand Lodge officers of the Masons were elected yesterday. The next session of the Grand Lodge will be held in Hamilton. The following officers were elected by the Grand Lodge of Canada, A., F. & A. M.:

Grand master, Benjamin Allen of Toronto.

Grand senior warden, William H. Harrison, Brockville.

Grand treasurer, E. T. Malone, K. C., Toronto.

Grand secretary, H. Murray of Hamilton.

Board of general purpose, W. D. McPherson, Lieut.-Col. Hegler, J. S. Dewar, F. Guest, F. J. Skinner.

Grand chaplain, Rev. Baynes-Reed.

The committee on credentials of representatives of the Grand Lodge reports 381 warranted lodges on the rolls; of these 190 are represented by their duly qualified officers, 131 represented by proxy, 14 are not represented by proxy but have past masters present, and 46 are not represented at all. The total vote was 1,431, and about 900 brethren represent the vote cast.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and when especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

THIBETANS RETIRED FIGHTING.

Sniped Advancing British Soldiers From Neighboring Cliffs.

Gyangtse, Thibet, July 22.—The British mission to Thibet, under command of Col. Younghusband, on July 18, forced a passage of the ice-clad Karola, the highest pass on the road to Lhassa.

A stubborn defence was expected, but the Thibetans retired early in the engagement, sniping the advancing British soldiers from the neighboring cliffs. The British are now ninety-two miles from Lhassa.

Pensions For Railway Men.

Ottawa, July 22.—(Globe Special.)—After careful consideration and enquiry, Hon. Mr. Emmerson, Minister of Railways, has completed a scheme for establishing a pension system in connection with the Government railways. He intends to introduce a measure, and, if possible, press it through the House at this session for that purpose. The proposal is to make the pension fund available for all the operating staff of the Government railways, who will be required to contribute to the fund, the Government also contributing a certain proportion.

Italians Brought to Canada.

Montreal, July 22.—Judge Winchester began his investigation yesterday into the charges against parties for enticing Italians to Canada. The evidence showed that Italian labor agents had a great deal to do with the influx of their compatriots into Canada. There are 4,000 of them in the city, half of whom came here from the United States and half from Northern Italy.

"The Member" for Australia.

An English paper says Mr. Henniker Heaton is sometimes called the member for Australia, and seldom anything so parochial as the mere member for Canterbury. His M. P. has before now been interpreted member for the Post Office by the intelligent foreigner, wholly incredulous of the existence of the nominal Postmaster-General. Mr. Henniker Heaton has achieved so much that he may be excused for talking about being weary when he is the halest of men who boast the accumulated wisdom of fifty-six years. When he talked about retirement some little time ago he had to take back the word. Bexhill-on-Sea knows the week-ends of Mr. Henniker Heaton, and among his varied diversions is counted a love of pictures. Indeed, he is often to be seen, perhaps partly allured by the name, in what is called "the postage stamp room" at the Royal Academy.

An English Turf Custom.

A curious usage of the English turf is one which ordains that, when once worn, the cap and jacket representing a patron's "colors" become the property of the jockey. If, as frequently happens, the owner wishes to retain them as a memento of a successful race, he must buy them from the employee to whom perhaps he gave them but an hour or two before.

Not Overexacting.

"If you want anything to eat here," she said, "you will have to work for it."

"Madam," replied the weary one who had seen better days, "I couldn't think of taking advantage of you that way. A light lunch will do me now, but work would increase my appetite so much that you would surely lose more than you can afford."

Mind is the beginning of civilization, but the ends and fruitage thereof are of the heart.

McINTOSH BROS.

WEIGHING NOT HONEST

Rufus Pope, Member For Compton, Makes Strong Accusations.

The House, Notwithstanding, Defeated His Motion By a Vote of 75 to 46—His Resolution Was in Behalf of the Farmers, But Was Voted Down—Uriah Wilson on Undesirable Immigrants—Position of Hon. Mr. Sifton.

Ottawa, July 22.—On behalf of the farmers and dairymen of Eastern Ontario and the eastern townships of Quebec, Rufus Pope yesterday in the House exposed what he declares to be a dishonest system of weighing dairy products in the city of Montreal. He wound up with a motion affirming that the farmers of Canada had wrongly suffered for many years through the system of weighing butter and cheese at the port of Montreal, and that for this evil the Government was responsible. The motion also called for condemnation of the Government for its failure to act on the report of W. S. Parmalee's Royal Commission, bearing date of Oct. 22 last, which showed the necessity for a new system of weighing. This motion was defeated on a vote of 75 to 46, but not before some very strong accusations had been made by Mr. Pope.

Wilson and Sifton.

When the estimates of the Department of the Interior were under discussion yesterday, Uriah Wilson protested against the policy of admitting undesirable immigrants into Canada. The laws had been improved, he said, but there was still room for improvement, both in the stringency and the medical examination and in the exclusion of paupers.

Referring to the 54 delegates despatched to England by the immigration department to bring settlers to Canada. Mr. Wilson said these delegates cost the country $25,000, and the net result of their joint efforts, as shown in the report, was to bring ten or twelve people from England to this country.

Mr. Sifton took the position that the medical examination was as stringent as it was practicable to make it. He also argued that the country was well protected against the inroads of paupers.

We Take U.S. Leavings.

E. B. Osler pointed out that between June 19 and May 19, 2,441 European immigrants destined for the United States landed in Canadian ports and were turned back at the border by the United States inspector. Of these 91 were rejected as paupers, 305 as contract laborers, 653 as diseased and 8 as idiots, all of whom remained in Canada.

E. F. Clarke said the answer to that was the care which the United States Immigrant Department exercised in medical examination of immigrants.

Dr. Sproule criticized the inadequacy of the medical examination at Canadian ports.

Mr. Puttee complained of the large amount of public money spent in bringing into Canada non-settlers, men and women sent here largely for strike-breaking purposes.

Read a Third Time.

Ottawa, July 22.—In the Senate, Senator J. K. Kerr moved the third reading of the bill to amend the Insurance Act. After numerous amendments, the bill was then read a third time and the title changed to "An Act respecting the Canadian assessment policy-holders in the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company."

PROVINCES LOST THEIR APPEAL.

Redistribution of Last Year Upheld By the Privy Council.

London, July 22.—The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has practically decided that the Provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have no case in their appeal against the reduction of their representation in the House of Commons.

When the case was resumed yesterday morning, Mr. A. B. Aylesworth, K.C., on behalf of Prince Edward Island, spoke for two hours and a half, and was followed by Hon. William Pugsley, Attorney-General of New Brunswick, who spoke for an hour and a half.

After luncheon the court decided that it was not necessary to call on the counsel for the Dominion, but reserved judgment.

Mr. Blake said: "No comment is needed. The Dominion has won. That is all."

What It Means.

Briefly stated, the proceedings in the Privy Council mean that the provinces must submit to the reduction of their representation in the Dominion Parliament, and that the redistribution act is valid.

The outcome of the appeal also means that the Dominion Parliament will be prorogued next week or early the following week. For some days the Government has been conducting the business of the House in a leisurely manner. It was strongly of opinion that the provinces would lose their appeal, but it did not dare take even the remote risk of proroguing Parliament in advance of a decision favorable to the appellants. Such a decision would have necessitated a reconstruction of the redistribution act, in which event it would be necessary to delay the general elections till next year. The outcome of the litigation leaves the Government free to hasten prorogation and make ready for autumn elections.

Two Americans Shot Down.

Washington, July 22.—The following telegram has been received by Acting Secretary of State Loomis from Louis Kaiser, the American Consul at Mazatlan, Mexico, dated Wednesday:

"Two Americans were shot down in their office at Aguas Caljeate, in this State, by officials."

SAD DROWNING AT MINDEN.

Percy Smith, Lay Reader at Mission There, the Victim.

Toronto, July 22.—Percy Smith, formerly of Toronto, but for the last two years lay reader at the Minden Mission, Haliburton County, was drowned while bathing there on Wednesday. In a letter received by T. P. Wood, 91 Olive avenue, yesterday, it is said that in company with Rev. Mr. Fenning, the rector in charge, Mr. Smith went in bathing about noon in the river close by the clergy house, there being only a lawn and roadway separating. They had been in the water only a few minutes when he was seized with cramps. Mr. Fenning made desperate attempts at rescue, but neither were expert swimmers. Mr. Smith sank in 17 feet of water, but although the body was recovered in 7 minutes, all efforts to restore life were in vain. Mr. Fenning stated in the letter that there was a very strong under current.

Mr. Smith came from England about ten years ago, his parents residing in London. For some time he was lay helper at St. Cyprian's Church here, and some two years ago was appointed lay reader at Minden, where two clergymen and two lay readers administer to the spiritual welfare of a parish of 1,000 square miles.

It was his intention to enter the ministry, and but for his untimely death he would have been a candidate at the next year's examinations for deaconate. He was well-known in Bracondale, and in the northwestern part of the city, and in cricketing circles, having been for several years captain of St. Cyprian's Club. He was 35 years of age.

Took Paris Green.

Barrie, July 22.—James Keenan, superintendent of the Barrie Waterworks Department, committed suicide Wednesday afternoon by taking Paris Green. Some months ago he lost his left hand through blood poisoning, and the commissioners had recently advertised for a new superintendent.

Wolf Kills Shepherdess.

Madrid, July 22.—A young shepherdess was killed by a wolf at Cabrera, in the Province of Leon, yesterday. The animal then attacked another shepherdess, when a youth, who was armed with a razor, came to her rescue. He attacked the wolf and killed it, but was dangerously injured. A public subscription has been opened in recognition of his heroism.

Victim of Elevator.

Ottawa, July 22.—Dr. William McPhee, dentist, is dead, as the result of an elevator accident yesterday afternoon. He was in the elevator at the Bank street chambers and attempted to get out at the wrong door with disastrous results.

How to Keep Dominant.

London, July 22.—In the Commons yesterday, Joseph Chamberlain, defending, as member of Parliament for West Birmingham, the introduction of Chinese labor into the Transvaal, which policy was inaugurated while he was colonial secretary, contended that white laborers would not work side by side with black laborers on equal terms, and he thought the white men were right. He added: "As the dominant race, if we admitted equality with inferior races, we would lose the power which gave us our dominance."

To Inspect Life-Saving Apparatus.

Ottawa, July 22.—Capt. McCuaig of the Marine Department has been appointed a special steamboat inspector to examine life preservers, life boats tackling, fire fighting apparatus, etc. Unless the requirements are fully met he has power to detain the vessel. The precautions probably arise from the terrible disaster to the General Slocum in New York.

BEAUTY OF SKIN PURITY OF BLOOD

Ancient and Modern Ideas on These Interesting Subjects.

UP-TO-DATE METHODS

For Purifying and Beautifying the Skin, Scalp, Hair and Hands.

Socrates called beauty a short-lived tyranny, Plato a privilege of nature, Theocritus, a delightful prejudice, Theophrastus a silent cheat, Carneades a solitary kingdom, Homer a glorious gift of nature, Ovid a favor of the gods. Aristotle affirmed that beauty was better than all the letters of recommendation in the world, and yet none of these distinguished authorities has left us even a hint of how beauty is to be perpetuated, or the ravages of age and disease defied. Time soon blends the lily and the rose into the pallor of age, disease dots the fair face with cutaneous disfigurations and crimsons the Roman nose with unsightly flushes, moth, if not rust, corrupts the glory of eyes, teeth, and lips yet beautiful by defacing the complexion, and fills the sensitive soul with agony.

If such be the unhappy condition of one afflicted with slight skin blemishes, what must be the feelings of those in whom torturing humours have for years run riot, covering the skin with scales and sores and charging the blood with poisonous elements to become a part of the system until death?

It is in the treatment of torturing, disfiguring humours and affections of the skin, scalp and blood, with loss of hair, that the Cuticura remedies have achieved their greatest success. Original in composition, scientifically compounded, absolutely pure, unchangeable in any climate, always ready, and agreeable to the most delicate and sensitive, they present to young and old the most successful curatives of modern times.

Tufted Furniture.

A pointed brush is the only one with which tufted furniture can be properly cared for. To attempt to do without it is the most extravagant economy since moths delight in taking up their abode in the little nests of dust which cannot be dislodged by a round end brush or whisk broom.

Wooden spoons should be used always when making sauces and beating cakes. If metal spoons are used they get ground down at the point and also wear out the saucepan.

Use a feather brush to remove dust from picture frames. Do not use linen cloths, as they wear off the gilt and deaden the brightness of the frame.

Under Agreement Between Great Britain and Russia.

Will be Perfunctorily Inspected by the Consuls of the Two Countries and Released—The Incident is Ended, Though the Dardanelles is Open Questton Yet—No Similar Incident Likely, as British Cruisers Have Orders.

St. Petersburg, July 23.—The steamer Malacca is at Suda Bay, Island of Crete, where under the agreement reached between Great Britain and Russia, she will be perfunctorily inspected jointly by the Consuls of the two countries and released, together with her cargo, unless palpable contraband of war intended for the Japanese shall be found, in which case only the contraband will be held. British Government stores on board the vessel will not be examined.

British at Alexandria.

Alexandria, July 23.—The British Mediterranean fleet has arrived here.

It Won't Occur Again.

St. Petersburg, July 23.—The Russian reply to the British protest was handed to Ambassador Hardinge yesterday afternoon. Therein Russia agrees that the Malacca shall not be brought before a prize court and undertakes that no similar incident shall occur in the future. As a matter of formality the Malacca's cargo will be examined at some port in the Mediterranean, probably Suda Bay, Island of Crete, in the presence of the British Consul.

Malacca Incident Ended.

London, July 23.—The morning papers generally express satisfaction that the Malacca incident has been settled in accordance with the demands of Great Britain, though there is an inclination to await the settlement of the broader question of the passage through the Dardanelles of the volunteer fleet steamers before believing that all danger has been averted.' This feeling is heightened by Premier Balfour's announcement on the adjournment of the House of Commons that he still had no official news to communicate either in connection with the Malacca incident or with volunteer fleet steamers in general.

The Apparent Contradiction.

Some papers are even inclined to doubt the authenticity of the news that the Malacca incident has been settled, but The Daily Telegraph semi-officially explains the apparent contradiction existing between Mr. Balfour's statements and the telegrams from St. Petersburg.

"Two despatches left the Foreign Office, July 21," says The Daily Telegraph. "One has elicited a favorable reply, but the other has not yet been answered. The promise that "No similar incident shall occur again' is very vague and elastic. It may mean that no British vessel shall in the future be seized, the papers of which are regular and the cargo carried by which belongs to his British Majesty's Government. That is not much of a concession, seeing that our fleet has instructions to prevent another such outrage."

No More Warships.

The Daily News says it believes that the Government is resolved that no more Russian warships, however carefully disguised, shall pass the Bosphorus, the outlet of which a portion of the Mediterranean fleet will carefully guard.

The Times says: "Although there is good reason to hope that we have advanced a stage towards a satisfactory solution of the grave situation brought about by the seizure of the Malacca, we cannot consent to any arrangement which would cut the ground from under our feet. It is the status of the St. Petersburg that we contest, and we take our stand, not on some impalpable point of international law, but on the plain text of the treaties and conventions which govern the passage of the Dardanelles."

TORONTO'S BURNT DISTRICT.

Commission Gives That Bounded By York, Front, Yonge and Esplanade Street to the Railways.

Ottawa, July 23.—The burnt district in Toronto, bounded by York and Yonge and Front streets and the Esplanade, will within the next few days be formally handed over to the railways. Ownership of the property will be vested in the Grand Trunk Railway, subject to arrangements which the company will be required to make with the C.P.R. and the Canadian Northern as to a Union Station and terminal facilities.

This solution of the applications of rival railway companies for power to expropriate the burnt district was reached at a meeting of the Railway Commission held yesterday. It was facilitated by the withdrawal of the application of the Canadian Northern at a moment when the union seemed hopelessly complicated. The result is that the G.T.R. is satisfied, the C. P. R. is satisfied, the Canadian Northern is satisfied and the city of Toronto will have to be satisfied.

Guilty of Wife Murder.

Halifax, N. S., July 23.—Thomas Robinson was yesterday found guilty of the murder of his wife, Theresa Atland, on North Mountain, Nova Scotia. The crime was committed on the night of May 25. The evidence showed that the woman had been strangled to death and her body hacked to pieces and the house then fired, in order to hide the crime. Robinson is 50 years old.

Strike Declared Off.

Sydney, N.S., July 23.—The strike was declared off at a meeting of the sub-council of the P.W.A. yesterday morning, men returning to work at wages received previous to June 1.

Montreal, July 23.—"The proposed Canadian Pacific Railway line from Toronto to Sudbury will cost $8,000,000, and of this amount $2,000,000 will be required for the construction of fifty-eight miles from Romford to Byng Inlet," said F. S. Darling, the Canadian Pacific railway engineer in charge of all construction work east of Winnipeg, yesterday. "Before the end of the month 2,500 men will be at work in the portion of the line between Romford and Byng Inlet."

THE DAVIS LIGHTING CONTRACT.

It was amply proved, during the debate in Parliament, that the Davis contract for lighting the Cornwall canal, was, as stated by the Auditor-General, a scandal.

The Grit ministers, during the debate, endeavored to defend their actions in two ways, first, by making ducks and drakes of the facts as to the original contract, and (2) by attacking the Auditor-General for his published exposure of Government crookedness. But under Mr. Borden's vigilant criticism the ministers were not very successful in getting clear of the essential facts, and, the ministers' attacks on the Auditor-General cannot fail to do them much more harm than good in the estimation of all honest men who demand an honest and intelligent administration of public business. The Toronto News (Independent Liberal) concludes its comment on the debate on this subject with the following paragraphs:

"The contract made by the Conservatives provided for the payment of a rate of 80 cents per light per night, and only the lights used were to count. Under that agreement, while the canal is closed, which is nearly half the year, only those required to light the bridges would be charged. The payment for power was to be made in accordance with the quantity used, at $63 a horse-power, and provision was to be made for determining the quantity used.

"Under the second agreement, the lighting was to be paid for on the basis of all the lights available, and for every night in the year. It provided also for the payment for 400 horse-power every day in the year, whether used or not. These conditions were afterwards changed so that the gross amount of the contract was reduced to $39,500, but the term left at 84 years. Even this sum Mr. McDougall holds is improvident to the extent of half a million dollars during the life of the contract.

"It is worse than idle to quibble about dates, or complain of the way the Auditor-General has seen fit to publish the facts. As the case stands, it has the appearance of a gross fraud perpetrated upon the country. That much is plain on the face of it. The course that Mr. McDougall has taken has angered the Government. That was inevitable. But he had a duty to perform to the country, and he did not flinch from it. A debate that introduces a lot of side issues is not an effectual method of getting at the motives that inspired the making of the contract, and its extension. A Parliamentary committee might produce results. It is not a matter for loose talk, but for searching cross-examination."

It is apparent from the published facts that Grit Ministers made the contract at least twice as bad for the country as it was previously. To contract for power and light for every day and every night in the year on a public work that is closed for half of every year, to throw away half a million dollars of the people's money, and to fasten such a job on the taxpayers of Canada for eighty-four years to come, is the sort of work for which the Laurierite Ministers are responsible, and which they are bitterly angry at the Auditor-General for exposing.

Five of the West India Islands Now Represented at Ontario Business College.

There are now in attendance at Ontario Business College eleven students from five of the West India Islands, two young ladies and nine young men; six from Barbadoes; one from Grenada; one from Jamaica and one from St. Kitts. A photograph of this interesting West Indian group is now in the window of Clark's photographic establishment. These students travelled over sea and land more than two thousand miles to reach O.B.C. There are three young men now on the ocean coming from British Guiana, South America, to the college. The famous text book of the college, "The Canadian Accountant," (the 14th edition of which is now in press) is sold throughout the English-speaking world.

Ontario Business College is doing international and inter-imperial work, and, in its line, spreading the fame of Canada.

TIMELY TOPICS.

We note by a despatch from Kingston that the City Council of that place is dickering with the Bell Telephone Company in regard to its franchise. It seems, so the despatch says, that the agreement with the Bell Company expired some time ago, and its renewal has hung fire pending an understanding. The company offers the city in recognition of its exclusive franchise an annual sum of $700, exclusive of the value of its free 'phones and the use of its poles for the fire alarm wires. This is desired for a period of five years. Under a new agreement it promises to erect a new building and to equip with the latest and best appliances. That is likely to be accepted.

• • •

It may fairly be asked, why is the Bell Company so liberal with Kingston, as compared with the terms it gives this city. In Belleville, at least for municipal purposes, there are no free 'phones, and the company pays, for its exclusive franchise, only $300 per year. It may be well for the Council, when the Bell Company applies for a renewal of its franchise, to remember the foregoing facts.

Many people express themselves as delighted with the Hospital lot as a place for band concerts. It is a central location, and many people, whose taxes help to pay the band, go there who would not walk to the park. But some kind of seating and lighting accommodation should be provided for the musicians.

It is fair to assume that, being young men, some of the new officers in the Fifteenth may live to see the new drill shed completed.

MR. DOOLEY ON AUTOMOBILES.

"Upon me word," said Mr. Hennessy, "if it isn't me ould friend Dooley! Save us, man, where have ye bin this long time, and what brought ye down town to-day?"

"As to where I've bin," said Mr. Dooley, "I've been laid up wid lumbago, from so much snow shovelling last winter. What brought me down was an automobile, Hinnissy, one of thim bumpin' divil waggons ye've heard so much of lately. Young Martin Grogan raycintly siparated himself from some of the hard-earned money the non-temperance people helped to make for his father and bought a runabout that's guaranteed to frighten the quietest horse in town, break all records and its owner's neck some day."

"What does it feel like to ride in an auto?" said Mr. Hennessy.

"Do ye remimber," said Mr. Dooley, "the first time ye wint to the fair in dear ould Ireland? And how, after the first noggin ye had ye were pokin' out yer chist, shoutin yer war cry and lookin for thrubble?"

"Indade I do," said Mr. Hennessy; "I have an illegant scar on top of me head now to remind me of that same fair."

"Thin if you remember that," said Mr. Dooley, "you know how it feels to ride in an auto. Hoop-la! Away we go. Throw off the cable, there; turn the agitator, fill up the gasolene fumigator, notify the undertaker and kape out of the road, iviry-body. Who says we're goin' too fast? G'wan! Mr. O'Flynn's yacht would look like a flash of lightnin' compared to us now! An' all the time, Hinnissy, ye're flyin' over the pike like a runaway rabbit. Out in the country ye go, and suddenly a farmer's horse sees ye. Does he view ye with equanimity, Hinnissy? He does not. Hardly. He shtands on his hind legs, like a lineal descindant of the animal that carried King William over the Boyne on the Orangemin's flags, and he says to his driver, says he, 'Play fair,' says he, 'I don't mind bicycles, and thrains and shtame rollers and yachtsmin,' says he, 'but thim things that come up like a thafe in the night and shmell like cannon crackers, bedad! they're barred. Let me crack me heels and go home.' And thin, Hinnissy, if ye have any luck at all there's barrels of excitemint, especially if there's women in the rig ye meet. The ladies scream and the min swear, and the jolly old horse goes up in the air, as me frind Clancy the poet would say. However, ye go on about yer business, and if the affair turns out seriously ye hear about it in the papers. Anyhow, ye have as many rights on the King's Highway as anybody else. While drivin' wid young Grogan to-day he shtopped and hailed another auto: 'Any luck to-day?' he says. 'Not much,' says the other feller, 'only two runaways and a farmer's family thrown in the ditch. How was it wid you?' 'Hardly any shport at all worth mintioning,' says young Grogan, 'one milk waggon run away, that's all. Bedad, I think I'll sell me auto and buy a flyin' machine. There's hardly anny excitement now.' And so it goes. 'Tis great shport, Hinnissy."

"It may be," said Mr. Hennessy, "but it must be discouragin' to the people who own the horses."

"Thin, let thim sell their horses and dhrive cows," said Mr. Dooley. "This is a free country, and a horse that's kept at home, atin' hay in his shtable, will niver climb a tree at the sight of an automobile."

YOU MAY HAVE KIDNEY TROUBLE.

If your back aches and you suffer from dragging pains it is an evidence of diseased kidneys. Get Ferrozone at once and take it regularly. Ferrozone makes kidney sufferers feel better at once. "I was bothered a great deal with my kidneys last year," writes S. G. Denton, of Everett, "but got quick relief from Ferrozone. My trouble manifested itself by pain in the back, dull, heavy feeling and constant headache. I quite recovered after using a few boxes of Ferrozone, which has given me more strength and better health than I ever had before. I can recommend Ferrozone as a positive cure." Price 50c at all druggists.

Skirt Management.

"Inherent grace is no greater in French girls than in English girls," says an authority. "But in the dainty art of carrying their skirts in their hands while taking the air of the boulevards French girls are incomparably superior to their English cousins. The secret is that the French maid's petticoat is made to clear the ground, while the English girl's drop skirt is as long as the outer garment. The English girl must lift both skirts to prevent their trailing in the dirt of the streets. She grasps a great bundle of unwieldy cloth so heavy and clumsy that almost invariably she pulls it around in a way that plays havoc with the effectiveness of her gown. The French demoiselle has only the outer skirt to care for."

To Waterproof Shoes.

The following is a useful recipe for preventing rain penetrating through the soles of boots, which with the modern expeditious modes of tanning are often very spongy: Melt together in an old pan two parts by weight of tallow and one of common rosin. Warm the soles of the boots, and apply the liquid warm, but not hot, and so long as it will sink in. A pair of badly hammered, porous soles will take up as much as four ounces of the mixture, which will prevent the absorption of as much water. Repeat the application as the soles wear, and it will greatly increase their durability. The upper leathers may be treated in the same way, but the rosin diminishes their pliability.

ACHING FEET ARE QUICKLY RELIEVED BY FOOT ELM.

Your feet will not blister and sweat excessively if you use Foot Elm. Many people who have had to bathe their feet 3 or 4 times a day and change stockings each time have been cured by using Foot Elm. 18 powders 25 cts. at drug stores.

THE CRIME OF THE CENTURY

BY RODRIGUES OTTOLENGUI,

know the names of the other occupants of the building in which he had his habitation, and indeed this is true in much more fashionable quarters of the great metropolis, for up town, where the enormous tenement houses have the higher sounding title of "hotel" or "apartment house," the inmates know as little of each other as they do in the slums.

Thus it began to be apparent to Mr. Mitchel that the street and number were an inadequate address in this neighborhood, but he was determined to find the woman, so he went to the next door, where he received no response to continual knockings, and then to the next, where he found a woman who could speak only some foreign jargon quite unfamiliar to his ears, and then across the hall, where a drunken brute of a man reviled him with curses, and so from door to door and up one flight after another, for he found an unlighted stairway at the back of the hall, until at last he stood before a door upon the sixth landing, and upon asking the woman who opened to him, "Does Gertrude Griffin live here?" received for answer: "Yes. Are you the coroner?"

"Why, no!" replied Mr. Mitchel, astonished at the question. "Why do you ask? Did you expect the coroner?"

"Oh, yes! That is, I suppose so."

"But why? Did you send for him?"

"No."

"Then why did you think he would come?"

"I thought they always did in times like this. My baby's dead, you know. She died without a doctor." She gulped down the sobs that choked her utterance and assumed that stolid face so common among those hardened to misery.

"Let me come in," said Mr. Mitchel gently, and the woman made way for him to enter.

He stood in a room about nine feet square, ventilated by a small window opening upon an airshaft and lighted by a skylight let in the roof, which was grimy and darkened by the accumulated dirt of years. Opening from this the living room, in which were a table and a cook stove, there was a yet smaller sleeping room, into which not enough light entered to make its contents visible from where he stood. As he recalled the fact that, as stifling and dark as was this "flat," being at the top of the house, it must of necessity be better in both respects than the floors below he wondered how one human being could plan such a building for others to live in. In a recess next to the chimney place was a wooden structure which he supposed was the washtub, and upon the closed cover of this he saw a tiny form covered with a bit of worn but clean cloth which might once have been a sheet.

"This is your baby?" said he, reverently lifting the cloth.

"Yes, sir," said the woman, with a sob.

Mr. Mitchel heaved a sigh as he gazed upon the thin little corpse, too evidently dead from want of nourishment.

"Your first baby?" he asked.

"Are you the coroner?"

"No, sir; my fourth."

"Your fourth? Then you have three children alive?"

Mr. Mitchel looked around the place and wondered where they all slept, but her reply explained matters.

"No, sir," said the stricken mother; "they are all dead. They always live about a year, and then they waste away. I think teethin does it and the hot weather, sir. It's awful hot here, even on the top floor. I moved up, though the stairs is hard, hopin it would be better for the little one. But, you see, it's no use. God is against me, I guess, though what I've done I don't know."

To such as these it is hard to bring the lesson of the eternal justice and love of the Almighty Father. Left alone in their wickedness by their fellow man, what wonder that they lose faith in God?

"You have done nothing," said Mr. Mitchel. "What has been done is the fault of others. Your condition is a result of their greed and selfishness. You are not to blame, but neither must you think that the Almighty has forgotten you."

"I'm sure I try not to, sir, but sometimes it's hard, mighty hard, to know what to think." She bent her head and wept softly.

"Tell me," said Mr. Mitchel soothingly, "how has all this come about? You have a husband, have you not? Cannot he support you?"

"Yes, sir; I'm a proper married woman, and my husband's a sober, good intendin man, and he does his best. But times has been hard with us. What with the strikes, and the Italians comin over, and one thing and another, we've been goin down these last three years. Patrick—my husband's an Irishman, sir—gets odd jobs now and then, but steady work don't seem to come his way. Yet he's a good man at his trade too. He's a bricklayer."

"Where is he now?"

"Baby died this mornin about 5 o'clock. We was both up with her all night. Pat went on like mad and went out early. He ain't come back. I thought maybe he'd gone to notify the police. He'd have to do that, wouldn't he?"

"I suppose so. But, Mrs. Griffin, do not be despondent. Of course death at any time is a dreadful thing, but remember it comes to the rich as well as to the poor."

"Yes; I know other people has their sorrows, but the rich has some comforts, too, I guess. That makes the sorrow easier to bear, I fancy." She spoke bitterly.

"Come, my good woman, you must not speak so. It is wrong of the rich to neglect the poor, but it is also wrong of the poor to look upon the rich as their enemies. Many of the wealthiest would be only too glad to do away with all the poverty in the land if only they knew how. Fortunately I am a rich man, and I can at least help one deserving family. So cheer up. I will see that your baby is properly buried, and I will find work for your good man since you tell me he is a sober, hard working fellow."

"Oh, may heaven bless you, and may God forgive me for sayin that he had forgotten us!"

She fell upon her knees and would have kissed his hand had he permitted. He raised her from the floor and made her take a seat on the one chair in the room, and now that there had come to her something to arouse her from the stolidity of despair she began to weep copiously.

At this moment the door was rudely opened by a vicious kick of a man's boot, and a drunken, rough looking man tottered into the room. At sight of him the woman emitted a scream and sprang to his side.

"My God, Patrick, Patrick!" she cried. "You've been drinkin! You've come home drunk!"

"You're a liar!" cried the fellow, rudely pushing her away from him. "I'm not drunk! I'm crazy; that's all. Crazy! I'm crazy from losin my child! So keep away from me, or I'll do you a hurt. And who's this bird with the fine feathers?" He noticed Mr. Mitchel and turned upon him threateningly. "Who's this man you've brought in here?"

"Oh, Patrick! Pat, dear, don't carry on so! This gentleman's come to help us. Be civil to him; there's a good man." Then, turning to Mr. Mitchel, she added entreatingly: "Don't mind him, sir. He's been drinkin, but it's all because of the baby. He's a sober man, sir—indeed, indeed he is. Don't hold this up against him." Then to her husband again: "Oh, Pat, Pat! What made you? And I've just been tellin what a good man you are, and you come home like this!"

"Like what? I'll come home as I like. It's my home, such as it is, and them as don't like it can leave it. And as for you, with your pretty clothes and pretty face, I've half a mind to do you up, comin up here and gloatin over the misery of a poor man."

He faced Mr. Mitchel and raised an arm threateningly. Mr. Mitchel, grasping his wrist, held it firmly, and, speaking in a tone of command, he said:

"Patrick Griffin, you've been drinking."

"I've not!" snarled the man, trying to free his wrist.

"You are drunk now," said Mr. Mitchel, "and you ought to be ashamed of yourself."

"He will be! He will be when he gets sober," wailed the wife.

"I believe so," said Mr. Mitchel, "and for your sake and for his, too, since you speak for him, I will forget this affair. I will do all that I promised for you. And now, Patrick, lie down and regain your senses as soon as possible."

The man had found himself mastered and was standing surlily looking down. He now made little resistance as Mr. Mitchel drew him toward the bed in the next room and threw him upon it.

Mr. Mitchel returned to the wife, who again and again protested that her husband must have been crazed by the loss of their child to have taken a drink, which was not hard to believe, all things considered.

Mr. Mitchel again assured her that proper arrangements would be made for the funeral of the child, as well as for the future of herself and husband, and then approached the subject which had prompted his visit.

"Now, Mrs. Griffin," he began, "I must tell you why I came here. I want to know all about the baby that was taken from the graveyard back of here."

"It's not much I know, sir. I was up on the roof one day last week tryin to get a bit more air for my own baby, and, chancin to look down, I thought I saw a young one in the grass in the graveyard. I didn't think much of that, but the next day I saw it again, and the next day plainer still, 'cause it had crawled out to an open spot where the grass wasn't so high, and there it lay, as naked as the day it was born, lookin up to the heaven from which it came. I thought that strange, and I would have gone down to see about it, though before that I supposed it belonged to some of the people down stairs and had been put through the window to play in the grass. But my own baby was so poorly that day that I couldn't spare the time to look after anybody else's. But the next mornin my baby was a bit brighter, so I went on the roof and looked down. Sure enough, there was the little one in the same spot where it was the day before. I suppose it was gettin too weak to crawl about. So I went through the house, but I couldn't find no one to claim it, though two or three windows on the graveyard had seen the baby. But they all thought it belonged to some one in the house, same's I did. Down in the Jew's place on the first floor there was a young girl who had

BABY'S OWN TABLETS.

FOR WEAK SICKLY CHILDREN DURING THE HOT WEATHER MONTHS.

Thousands of infants and children die through the hot weather months, because summer complaints and stomach troubles come suddenly, and mothers do not have the means at hand to promptly check and cure them. In homes where Baby's Own Tablets are used these little lives can be saved and no home in the land where there are children should be without the tablets. They promptly cure all stomach and bowel troubles and give relief to teething children and the mother has a guarantee that they contain no opiate or harmful drug. You can crush the tablets to a powder and give them with perfect safety to a new born babe. Mrs. S. M. Black, St. Peters, N.S., says: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for most of the troubles from which little ones suffer, and I find them the best medicine I have ever tried. All medicine dealers sell these tablets or you can get them by mail at 25c a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co, Brockville, Ont.

Try Gin Pills at our expense

We want every man and woman in Canada who suffers from Kidney and Bladder Troubles, to write us for a free sample of Gin Pills.

We want everyone who has sick friends to send us their names and addresses, that we may mail them, free of charge, a sample box of Gin Pills.

100,000 Sample Boxes Given Away.

There are hundreds who are martyrs to Kidney Trouble, having tried everything else without relief. There are dozens in every town who may have Kidney Trouble without knowing it. If you are pale—losing flesh—can't sleep—no appetite—if you constantly desire to urinate—if the urine is scanty, burning or highly colored—if the feet and hands are swollen—if the eyesight is dimmed—if there are frequent pains in the back, through the hips and legs—then you have the most positive symptoms of Kidney Trouble.

These are the people, we hope, who will send in their names that Gin Pills may cure them.

What They Are

Each Gin Pill contains the medicinal properties of one and one-half ounces of best Holland Gin. The harmful substances—and the alcohol—are left out. These medicinal principles are combined with several other remedies of exceptional value—and the whole made up in the form of a small, pleasant pill. These are the famous Gin Pills that have the largest sale—and the greatest number of cures to their credit—of any Kidney and Bladder remedy, ever introduced in Canada.

What They Do

Gin Pills cure "Cold on the Kidneys," Inflammation of the Kidneys, Uric Acid, causing Gout and Rheumatism, Ulceration and Inflammation of the Bladder, Painful and Suppressed Urine, constant desire to urinate, Gravel or Stone in the Bladder, and all other troubles, caused by sick Kidneys and Bladder. They never fail to relieve the sharp, shooting pain, make urination easy, natural and regular, strengthen the organs, and effect a speedy and permanent cure.

Won't you try Gin Pills at our expense? It costs nothing. Simply a post card. Ask us to send a sample box free—say in what paper you saw this advertisement—and sign your name and address. Do it to-day—NOW. BOLE DRUG CO., Dept. B. Winnipeg, Man.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The weather is as changeable as a Laurier promise, as the Sage of Thurlow might say.

• • •

With the mercury hovering between 60 and 80, who would want a nicer summer resort than Belleville?

• • •

All the fresh air you can breathe; all the fish stories you can catch; beautiful scenery on every side; a grand bay to boat and sail on, who wouldn't sell his farm and come to live in beautiful Belleville?

• • •

They have found a bottomless pit on the line of the C.P.R., near Ardendale. We always thought the bottomless pit was somewhere near Toronto.

• • •

NOT A QUESTION OF LOYALTY.

(Toronto News.)

The loyalty of Canadians is not called in question by the Dundonald incident. The issue is whether the militia is to be regarded as an agency for rewarding political friends or humiliating political opponents of the Ministers.

• • •

THEY'RE PRETTY SMOOTH.

(Ottawa Citizen.)

And so Great Britain, by the merest coincidence, had her reserve fleet all ready to go out on manouvers just when the Russians were seized with an "irresistible impulse" to start a collection of John Bull's tramp steamers. Say, those navy fellows don't need any sandpapering!

• • •

A Russian general, criticizing the Japs, says they are slow and overcautious, and can't shoot straight. It might be interesting to hear that fellow's opinion of his own soldiers.

• • •

That was a raw deal the weather map gave us this morning.

• • •

The fact that young Scholes is to get a big reception next Monday makes us wonder what kind of a reception the Canadian bowling team will get when they return.

Now if the Toronto Globe and Star will kindly say that Dundonald fought on the side of the Boers they will have about capped the climax of their abuse of that brave man and brilliant soldier. They've said about everything else but that.

• • •

A gentleman who has had considerable experience, but no personal interest, in excursions, writes us that he does not think the rumors re overcrowding of steamers, as expressed by a recent correspondent of this paper, are correct. Our present correspondent says he has never been on any boat which leaves this harbor but either the captain or purser are, either by their "tickers" or by checks given to passengers, aware of how many have come on board, and when near the limit allowed by law they inform the committee managing the excursion of the fact, and, when the legal number has boarded the boat the officials absolutely refuse to let any more on. The trouble is, our correspondent says, that some people view the boats only from a distance, and the people who make the most complaint are those who are crowded out of the best places, and then the cry goes up, "The boat is overloaded." Our correspondent quotes three cases in point during the present month, when he received complaints of overcrowding, and in no case was the boat loaded to within 50 of the number allowed by law.

The Intelligencer is glad to see that the mariners in this vicinity are alive to their duty, which, of course, it was to be expected they would be.

SIR WILFRID'S SUNNY WAYS.

Like Oil on Sir Fred. Borden's Choler Get Permission For Bands to Attend Dundonald Demonstration at Ottawa.

Ottawa, July 23.—The send-off to Lord Dundonald next Tuesday evening is likely to be one of the biggest demonstrations in the history of Ottawa. So promising are the prospects of a tremendous turnout that political influences are being exerted to keep Liberals at home. A double column editorial on the front page of yesterday's Free Press, the Government organ, is the subject of considerable comment. It refers to the effrontery of the man who flings "fool's paradise" and "lack of etiquette" at us just before he boards the boat for England, "there to meet the reprimand which he richly deserves."

Liberals Dragooned.

The article continues, "That some usually well balanced citizens have been cajoled into taking part in an affair which can only be a partisan demonstration, is evidenced by the public meetings of the ringleaders and the names which they have given out as their abettors. No man who takes part in the demonstration to Lord Dundonald is either a true Canadian or a Liberal. Let Lord Dundonald go home; let him go quietly. When he calmly considers his insult to Canadians he will be ashamed of himself. He ought to be. That the Tory leaders are small-witted and hard pressed for a policy cannot be better emphasized than by their lauding a disgraced official, and in their cowardly efforts to arouse racial and religious strife within the hearts of our broad-minded Canadian people. Let the better men in the Conservative party disown these men who would bring their party to ruin. Surely there are some large men still left in a party which once commanded the respect of Canada."

Sir Wilfrid's Sunny Ways.

The committee in charge of the preparations for the send-off had some difficulty in securing the service of a military band in the city. The regimental band were afraid to turn out. Finally the committee went to Sir Frederick Borden. The Minister, it is said, promptly turned them down and said things concerning Dundonald and the demonstration which would hardly bear repetition. He promised, however, to talk the matter over with Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The committee called again after the matter had been "talked over" and found Sir Frederick in a gracious mood. He spoke kindly of Lord Dundonald and hoped the demonstration would be a success. He gave the necessary permission to the bands.

Dundonald's Position.

London, May 23.—Lord Dundonald's position as a half-pay officer has been examined. On July 18, the Secretary of State decided, in view of all the facts, it was expedient that Lord Dundonald be recalled, and asked for an explanation, his attention being called to the paragraph in the King's regulations forbidding officers speaking publicly or attending public meetings. The telegram was despatched on July 19. Under section 175 (1) of the Army Act, officers of the regular force on the active list, without any royal warrant for regulating the pay or promotion of regular forces, are subject to military law, and under royal warrant for pay. The 1900 Active List includes officers who are on temporary half pay. Lord Dundonald, therefore, is subject to military law, and must obey any lawful order.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation—Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 68 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

THE BOARD OF HEALTH.

TAKES STEPS TO ABATE THE STAGNANT WATER NUISANCE ON CHURCH ST.

A meeting of the Board of Health was held yesterday afternoon, in the clerk's office, for general purposes. The matter of the nuisance on Church street, just north of St. Thomas' Church, where stagnant water lies, was brought up. If the parties residing on John street, who, it is alleged, cause the trouble by draining into the ravine, do not desist, the Board is inclined to take legal action against them, as it is considered a menace to health.

Mr. John S. Marsh left for New Ontario this morning to enjoy a much needed and well deserved two weeks holiday, as also to see what the Wabigoon district looks like. It is in the townships of Rugby, Sanford, Eton, Wainwright, Auberg and Vanhorne in this district that about forty members of the local Veterans' Association have secured their military land grants. It was through the gratuitous services of Mr. Marsh that these locations were made, and naturally the Veterans feel grateful to Mr. Marsh. We may expect him to come back laden with samples of grain for those who propose in their old age to turn farmers; with specimens of ores for the would-be miners; and fish for those who have the Wabigoon river running through their 160 acres of reward for their services to the Empire.

Work Will Begin at Once.

A special meeting of the Gas Committee was held last evening, presided over by the Chairman, Ald. Sinclair. The object of the meeting was to consider and ratify the contract between the city and Messrs. Baxter & Young of Detroit, in reference to making the changes at the Gas Works. This was done and the work will be commenced immediately.

A Fish Story.

Kingston Freeman: There was quite a little excitement on the ferry wharf at 5 o'clock on Friday morning when Fish Inspector Godwin collared two boxes of fine black bass and pike, which were being shipped by some American fishermen to friends in Cape Vincent, the two American fishermen becoming very much excited and indignant at what they thought a mean outrage. The law in this regard states that Americans wishing to send fish across the border must obtain a special license, costing $5; also that the fish shipped must only be taken from a two-days' catch. The owners of the two boxes seized had failed to comply with this regulation, hence the seizure. Inspector Godwin divided the fish between the House of Industry and the House of Providence.

THE JOY.

The joy is in the doing,
Not the deed that's done;
The swift and glad pursuing
Not the goal that's won.

The joy is in the seeing,
Not in what we see;
The ecstasy of vision,
Far and clear and free!

The joy is in the singing,
Whether heard or no;
The poet's wild, sweet rapture,
And song's divinest flow!

The joy is in the being—
Joy of life and breath;
Joy of a soul triumphant,
Conqueror of death!

Is there a flaw in the marble?
Sculptor, do your best;
The joy is in the endeavor—
Leave to God the rest!

GIFTS TO UNITED STATES.

Some Bad British-Canadian Bargains o the Past Hundred Years.

British treaty gifts of Canadian territory commenced with the Treaty of Independence, 1782-3, when the Ohio and Mississippi valley of the Canada ceded by France in 1763—now comprising the States of Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois (with its Chicago), Wisconsin and Minnesota—which had formed no part of the revolted colonies, was gratuitously ceded to the United States. "An instance," says an American author, "of the sacrifice of territory, of authority, of sovereignty, and of political prestige unparalleled in the history of diplomacy."

In 1814 the British and Canadian conquests of Maine and Massachusetts to Penobscot, on the Atlantic coast, and of Michigan and the western territory to Prairie du Chien, on the Mississippi, during the war of 1812, were restored to the United States—without insisting upon the territorial boundaries obtained by the war, and rightly claimable under the international doctrine of uti possidetis.

In 1818 another large territory of the French Canada of 1763, extending from Lake Superior west, and including the district about the upper waters of the Mississippi, which the American Plenipotentiaries of 1782 reported to Congress "was then possessed by Great Britain," and also including the Red River Valley, which the Hudson's Bay Company had granted to Lord Selkirk in 1814, and further west to the head waters of the Missouri River (now Dakota and adjoining territory), "went," as a Canadian writer once said, "to satisfy the thrifty appetite of the Republic."

In 1842 Lord Ashburton, in ignorance of the boundary lines on the Franklin "Red Line Map of 1782," ceded over 4,600,00 acres of Canadian land, and by extending Maine 86 miles north into Canada, placed a barrier between Montreal and the Atlantic. The map had been discovered by Dr. Sparks, of Harvard University, in 1842, and forwarded by him to Mr. Webster. In his report to the Senate he stated that the red boundary line throughout the United States "is exactly the line now contended for by Great Britain." And Greville's Memoirs record—"Our successive Governments are much to blame in not having ransacked the archives at Paris, for they could certainly have done for a public object what Jared Sparks did for a private one, and a little trouble would have put them in possession of whatever that repository contained."

In 1846 Oregon, with its splendid harbors on the Pacific coast—owing to the British yielding to the threat, "54 deg. 40 min. or fight," and apparently agreeing with Lord Ashburton that Britain's right to the territory was "a mere question of honor"—was also ceded.

In 1871 Britain agreed that the Fenian Raid claims of Canada, amounting to over $1,600,000, should be made against the United States, but owing to the ambiguous wording of the despatch proposing a treaty to settle the Alabama and other claims, the United States rejected them, alleging that "they did not commend themselves to their favor," a denial of justice which the then Colonial Secretary acquiesced in, by saying that "Canada could not reasonably expect this country should, for an indefinite period, incur the constant risk of serious misunderstanding with the United States."

Sketch of Judge Magee.

Of Mr. James Magee, K.C., of London, County Crown Attorney, who has been appointed a Judge of the Chancery Division in succession to the late Mr. Justice Ferguson, The London Free Press says in part: "The citizens of London will extend their most cordial congratulations to Mr. Magee. It is an honor well won, the crowning of a career of hard work as a member of the Middlesex Bar, and conscientious service as an officer of the Crown.

Mr. Magee was born in Liverpool, England, and was doubtless inspired by his proximity to the starting point of the great ocean steamers to try his fortunes on the far side of the Atlantic. He came to Canada about the year 1855, and settled in London, thus having spent nearly half a century in this city. He studied at the old Union School, then in charge of Principal Boyle, and Mr. Nicholas Wilson was his teacher nearly all the time he attended there. Mr. Magee became a law student in the office of Harris Brothers, in 1862, and was admitted a solicitor and called to the Bar in 1867. He began to practice the same years, being admitted into partnership with Messrs. Harris. He was afterwards senior partner, successively, in the firms of Magee & Thomas, Magee, Greenless & Thomas, and Magee, McKillop & Murphy, the present firm, which was formed in 1893. He was made a Queen's Counsel and appointed County Crown Attorney in February, 1893, in succession to the late Mr. Charles Hutchinson.

Summer Clearing Sale of Odds & Ends In China.

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly—in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

Atfer The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices.

Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen for, we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

Calvert's Conversion

By EPES W. SARGENT

Copyright, 1904, by E. W. Sargent

"I think," remarked Calvert very slowly, "that I should like to go to California."

Miriam agreed that California would be a very pleasant place in winter. She even declared that she would like to go there herself. With Calvert it was necessary to give more than was received. He was no conversationalist. Now he pondered over Miriam's admission as though this opened a new field for thought.

"It would be pleasant," he said presently, "to go there on one's wedding trip."

"Yes," assented Miriam. "It would be a very pleasant trip."

"Suppose then," he said, getting very red, "that we go there—together. You want to go. I want to go. We want to get married. Very simple, isn't it?"

Miriam sprang to her feet. "Charlie Calvert," she said excitedly, "I could just shake you!" He started back as though he feared she would carry her threat into execution. "Is that any way to ask a girl to marry you? One would think you had been brought up in an atmosphere of personally conducted tours."

"Really," he stammered, "I didn't mean to offend you, don't you know? I really thought we were going to be married some day."

"We never will until you learn how to talk," she snapped back. "No woman with any self respect would accept a proposal like that." There was infinite scorn in the voice.

Calvert blinked. He had known Miriam ever since they had played dolls together. Even then they had played at keeping house and had announced to their parents that they were going to be married shortly. They had persisted long after the usual course of boy and girl love affairs.

Miriam knew that he was not much of a talker. Why should she expect him to discover new ability simply because he wanted to suggest that it was time they were married?

HE SLIPPED OVER THE GUARD RAIL AND DROPPED TO THE TRACK.

He rose to his feet and regarded her uncertainly. "I think," he drawled, "I had better be going. I don't seem to be any good here."

"Go," she said evenly, "and don't you come back until you learn to tell a woman that you love her as though you meant it." She waited until she heard the door close and then burst into tears.

She was used to Calvert and his ways, but all their lives he had accepted placidly and unemotionally the fact of her love. Womanlike, she hungered for the tender words that are as manna to the heart.

Calvert apparently took her at her word. The next morning there was a bunch of violets at her place at the breakfast table, with his card marked P. P. C. in one corner. That was all. There was some comment that Calvert should leave town in the middle of the season, but no one supposed that there had been any trouble between Miriam and him, and she was at least spared the infliction of curious questions.

For a few days she pretended to herself that she did not care. She flirted desperately with Jack Holworth, who made love deliciously, but his tender speeches lacked the inflection of sincerity, and by the end of a week he bored her. No word came from Calvert, and soon she began to worry. To ask questions would be to admit that she did not know where he was, and this would subject her to comment. She could only wait and hope.

Finally the family began to notice her appearance. They declared that a change of scene was what was needed. Then her mother decided that California was the place for her, not knowing what reflections that country would bring up.

Out on the Arizona plains the train was drawn up on a siding to permit the eastbound Overland to pass. The passengers of the westbound grumbled at the delay, but Miriam slipped off the train to see if she could find any subjects for her camera.

There was a large group of cacti beyond the switch, and she trudged down to get a good viewpoint just as the belated train came speeding along. She thought it would be a good chance to try the speed of her camera by getting a snapshot of the moving train and, stepping to one side of the track, held the little box in readiness.

But the anticipated snapshot was never taken. There on the observation platform of the rear car was Calvert, as much surprised as she at the rencontre. With quicker thought than she had ever given him credit for he slipped over the guard rail and, hanging to the rail for a second, dropped to the track. He fell sprawling, but was up in an instant and was coming toward her with outstretched hands.

"Miriam!" he exclaimed joyfully. "It's awfully good to see you! You see I have learned my lesson and was chafing at the three days it would take me to reach home, and here you are out in Arizona to meet me." He folded her in his arms and kissed her. She made no resistance.

"Well, you needn't have risked your life just to say you're glad to see me," she said saucily as soon as speech was possible. He laughed.

"The train wasn't going fast enough to make it a dangerous accomplishment, and I didn't want to have to follow you. Absence has made me more intelligent. It couldn't make me more appreciative. I promise you that from now on you will have no cause for complaint."

There was a new tenderness in his eyes, a new deference in his attitude that proclaimed him the lover, not merely the old companion who took everything for granted. She held out her hands with a happy smile.

"I believe you, dear," she said softly, "but I shan't put you to the test. I'll accept the old proposal and take a bridal trip to California."

He caught her in his arms again, and for a moment they were oblivious of everything around them. Then he looked up whimsically. "I hope the walking's good," he said reflectively. She gave a cry. There in the distance the westbound train was fast receding. No one had noticed her leave the train or had observed Calvert. They had simply gone on.

"Well," said Miriam, "let's walk." And they started for the Golden Gate.

A Curious Phenomenon.

A singular phenomenon occurs on the borders of the Red sea at a place called Nakous, where intermittent underground sounds have been heard for an unknown number of centuries. It is situated at about half a mile's distance from the shore, whence a long reach of sands ascends rapidly to a height of 300 feet. This reach is about eighty feet wide and resembles an amphitheater, being walled in by low rocks. The sounds coming up from the ground at this place recur at intervals of about an hour. They at first resemble a low murmur, but ere long there is heard a loud knocking somewhat like the strokes of a bell and which at the end of about five minutes becomes so strong as to agitate the sand.

The explanation of this curious phenomenon given by the Arabs is that there is a convent under the ground here, and that these sounds are those of the bell which the monks ring for prayers. So they call it Nakous, which means a bell. The Arabs affirm that the noise so frightens their camels when they hear it as to render them furious. Philosophers attribute the sound to suppressed volcanic action—probably to the bubbling of gas or vapors underground. — Newcastle (England) Chronicle.

A Costly Retort.

"When Chief Justice Chase, a man of great abilities and marked characteristics, was presiding in one of the county courts of Vermont," said a lawyer of the state, "an appeal case from a justice's court came up before him, so small and contemptible in its origin that he ordered it stricken from the docket. The case was where a turkey had trespassed upon the garden of a neighbor and got shot for his depredations. The owner brought suit to recover damages and, failing before the justice, had appealed the case. Judge Chase was angry and when he ordered the case from the docket said:

"'The lawyer who consented to appeal this case ought to be thrown from the window of the courtroom. Why didn't he have the case referred to some of the honest neighbors for settlement?'

"'Because, your honor,' retorted the attorney, getting hot under the collar, 'it was our intention not to let honest people have anything to do with it.'

"True, this was a neat retort, but it cost the lawyer just an even $50 for contempt of court."

Reminding Her.

At home stations the British private soldiers' washing is usually done by the married soldiers' wives, who are expected to sew on missing buttons and do repairs, for which a small sum is deducted from the privates' pay.

Pat McGinnis had a good deal of trouble with his laundress. Sunday after Sunday had his shirt come back with the neck button off or else hanging by a thread. He had spoken to her on the subject, and she had promised to see to it, but still the button was not on properly.

He got out of patience one Sunday when the missing button had made him late for parade and exclaimed:

"Bother the woman! I'll see if I can't give her a hint this time anyhow."

He then took the lid of a tin blacking box about three inches in diameter, drilled two holes in it with a fork and sewed it on to the neck of the shirt that was next to be washed. When his washing came back, he found that she had taken the hint. She had made a buttonhole to fit it.—London Telegraph.

The Small Boy

He indulged much too freely in pie and plum cake,
And during the night how his "tummy" did ache,
They ran for the doctor, who knowing the fault,
Without hesitation prescribed "Abbey's Salt."

Mothers, who want their children to grow into sturdy men and women instead of pale, sallow dyspeptics, should see that the youngsters take a morning glass of ABBEY'S SALT. Children eat irregularly—indiscreetly. ABBEY'S SALT strengthens the stomach—regulates the bowels—so that "pain-killer" and "oil" are never needed. So pleasant to take, that mothers have no trouble in teaching the children to use it.

LIEUT.-COL. PONTON'S CASE.

THE FAMILY RECORD OF A GOOD OFFICER—LORD DUNDONALD FAIR.

(Ottawa Citizen.)

The reference made by Lord Dundonald in his Toronto address to the treatment received by Lieut.-Col. Ponton, of Belleville, at the hands of the minister of militia is of interest for several reasons. Lieut.-Col. William Nesbitt Ponton, M.A., is the same gentleman, who, a few weeks ago, contributed a very able address on the subject of Newfoundland, before the Canadian club of this city. He represents one of the oldest families of Belleville, and is a worthy type of a very worthy strain of the Scottish soldier, his grandfather, Surgeon Mungo Ponton, M.D., having come to Canada in medical charge of a Highland regiment in the early part of the last century. Major William Hamilton Ponton, the late registrar of the County of Hastings, and known as one of the most courteous of courtly men, is an uncle. Lieut.-Col. Archibald Ponton, an officer in the "incorporated militia" in the early forties, and who, in 1863, raised and commanded the 15th Regiment, or Argyll Light Infantry, of Belleville, being another uncle. Lieut.-Col. W. N. Ponton, the officer referred to by Lord Dundonald, after a service in the university company of the Queen's Own Rifles, joined the regiment previously raised by his uncle, and after a long service therein commanded the same for a period of years, during which he exhibited a degree of zeal, energy and enthusiasm in military matters much beyond that of the average officer. The honorary colonelcy of the Fifteenth Regiment is held by the present Duke of Argyll better known to Canadinas as the Marquis of Lorne, and who, it is known takes a deep interest in the Canadian Corps with which his name is identified. It will thus be seen that Lieut-Col. Ponton has some Scottish surroundings, besides which he possesses a personal force of character that it might not be wise to assail. Hence the calling off of their dogs by the Dominion war office can be understood. A knowledge of the incident of Col. Ponton's treatment was heretofore confined to the locality of Belleville. Now, however, that Lord Dundonald has thrown on the searchlight of truth and proclaimed the facts of the case as they occurred, he has added one more instance of his nobility of character, and for which, not only the militia, but all loyal and patriotic citizens of the Dominion will devoutly thank him.

SPORTING NOTES.

Peterboro will have a three days race meet, commencing August 1st.

The 16-inning ball game, recently played in Montreal, started at 5 minutes to four and lasted until twenty-five minutes to 8. Then it ended in a tie, 6-8.

The greatest event of the season so far as the game itself is concerned, is the invention of new delivery, or "ball," as the players call it, by Jack Chesbro, says Umpire Carpenter, now a member of the National League staff. "I have stood back of the plate for a good many years, but I never saw anything like this ball. Jack delivers it from the upper part of the palm of his pitching hand, but how he ever gets it up to the plate I don't see. It comes floating up so slowly that you can see the seams. It doesn't appear to be revolving at all and it seems as if it would never get to the plate. It generally goes over the outside corner for a strike, but it's the hardest ball for an umpire to judge that I have ever seen pitched. If it bothers the umpire it is easy to see how troublesome it must be to a batter. I have spoken with Jim McGuire about it, and he agrees with me that it is the most wonderful slow ball ever pitched."

Writing home to his father, Lou Scholes says:—"Well, thank goodness, the excitement is all over, otherwise I should be down and out if it lasted any longer. Everybody was tickled to death to see me win, and they showed it by extending invitations to dinner after dinner, till I am heartily sick of them, and the sooner we get on our ship the better. Kelly and I have been quite chummy since the race. I tell you, he is a fine fellow." Another denial of the C.A.P. "foreigner" falsehood.

Gipsy Girl got third money in a 2.16 race at Windsor yesterday.

MRS. WILLS' SUDDEN DEATH.

ESTIMABLE LADY A VICTIM OF HEART DISEASE YESTERDAY AFTERNOON.

Death came suddenly yesterday afternoon to Mrs. Thomas Wills, an elderly lady who resided on Hillside street. She had been somewhat poorly in health for some time, but was able to be about. At noon yesterday she partook of dinner with other members of the family and afterwards was about the house and yard for some time. Between 3 and 4 o'clock she was found lying dead near a sofa where she had evidently intended to lay down. Heart disease was the cause of the sudden taking off. Mrs. Wills, who was in her 77th year, was well known in this city and vicinity, where she had resided for over 30 years. Deceased was born in Queen's County, Ireland, and came out to this country nearly 40 years ago. Her home had been in this vicinity since that time. Mr. Wills died some years ago, being at the time of his death gardener at the Deaf and Dumb Institution. Mrs. Wills was for years a consistent member of Holloway Street Methodist Church, and a lady esteemed by all who knew her. A large family, consisting of four sons and seven daughters, survive, who have lost a loving and devoted mother.—The sons are R. C., of Montreal; Thos. F., of this city; Casper J., of Whitby, and Charles, of Toronto. The daughters are Mrs. F. Smith, of Wheeling, W.V.; Mrs. (Dr.) Barrington, of Buffalo, N.Y.; Mrs. W. J. Clokey, of Whitby; Mrs. R. H. Bullen, Mrs. Wm. Shorts, Mrs. Ed. Teagle, of Toronto, and Mrs. T. Blanchard, front of Sidney.

HIS INJURIES NOT FATAL.

WM. WELSH, VICTIM OF THE BRUTAL ASSAULT, IS NOT DEAD AFTER ALL.

Bancroft Times: The report which reached here on Thursday last to the effect that Wm. Welsh, the victim of the brutal assault at Craigmont mines on the previous Sunday, had succumbed to his injuries, was happily untrue, and Mr. Welsh is at present in the Pembroke hospital, where he is receiving every attention, and is likely walking about by this time. His assailants were given a preliminary hearing before Magistrate James, of Combermere, and three of them — Jas. Morrison, Frank Pitt and "Teddy" Hogett were committed to the county jail at Pembroke to await their trial, which will take place at the assizes. The others were allowed to go on suspended sentence.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a [illegible] Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

is catarrh, which first attacks the nose and throat and finally spreads all through the system. The one sure cure is fragrant, healing Catarrhozone, which is sent by the air you breathe direct to the root of the trouble. Mr. T. Y. MacVicar, of Yarmouth, suffered for years from catarrh and says: "In my long experience with this loathsome disease I never used any remedy that relieved and cured so promptly as Catarrhozone. When my nostrils were so stuffed up that I couldn't breathe I found a few inhalations of Catarrhozone was sufficient to clear away the mucous. I am perfectly cured by Catarrhozone and free from the disease entirely." Use only Catarrhozone Complete outfit $1.00; trial size 25c.

HOUSEWIVES' MISTAKES.

Two Things Which Women Really Should Not Do.

"Housekeepers do two things which they should not do," said a wise old woman recently in Fashions. "To begin with, they soon cease to be original. They serve up the same old things every day in the week. You always know what is coming. Potatoes, meat and vegetables and pie all appear in the same old guise. They are cooked the same every day in the year and three times a day.

"Secondly, they worry too much. They take the kitchen too much to heart. If they are going to have roast lamb for dinner, with peas or cabbage and browned potatoes, they begin early in the day to worry about it, and they worry until the end of the chapter, which is until they lay their heads down to rest for the last time.

"Now, why not start in to cater to the family without worrying? Lamb with worry sauce is no better than lamb with mint sauce, and neither can compare to lamb with a nice dressing of chopped vegetables. Nor are the pies any better for the fact that they are worried into the pan and worried out and worried even to the table. Instead of fretting invent a new dish and study the cookery pictures and try to get up something like them. That is the best and most original way to set a good table."

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and while especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

MARRY NOT A MAN—

Who never dresses up or cares how he looks except when he goes to see some lady.

Who thinks that a comfortable home and plenty to eat and wear should satisfy any woman.

Who thinks that the woman who gets him for a husband will be lucky beyond the rest of her sex.

Who bosses his sisters and does not think it necessary to show them the same consideration as other girls.

Who boasts to his men friends of his conquests among the fair sex and thinks that no woman can resist him.

Who does not regard marriage as a partnership in which there must be mutual concessions, but would be likely to think he owned his wife.

Who would like to humiliate his wife by making her beg for every dollar she desires for herself and tell what she is going to do with it.—Success.

THE UGLINESS OF IT.

A Bad Temper Not Only Mars Beauty, but Spoils Life.

Of all the recipes which are suggested for the process of beautifying the simple one of a good temper is left out, and yet there is nothing more personally ugly and unattractive in woman than a bad temper, though she often does not realize this till her beauty is marred and her life spoiled thereby. Other women may forgive bad temper, but men never do. It is in their eyes the unpardonable sin, and rightly so, seeing that nothing so quickly creates and insures a thoroughly unhappy home.

Let the girls who are being trained for life remember that a bad temper will as effectually ruin their chance of a happy future as any other hideous deformity, and when they would be ready to sacrifice so much for the attainment of such power as beauty, brilliance or fascination it is surely worth while to swallow something for the acquirement of so great and lasting a charm as good temper.

If a girl were to announce that she was subject to sudden fits of madness, likely that she would be wanted as an inmate of her own or any one else's home? Yet what else is an uncontrolled temper?—Edith H. Fowler in London Mail.

Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

This remedy is certain to be needed in almost every home before the summer is over. It can always be depended upon even in the most severe and dangerous cases. It is especially valuable for summer disorders in children. It is pleasant to take and never fails to give prompt relief. Why not buy it now It may save a life. For sale by all druggists

WALL PAPERS.

How to Choose Them So That They Will Prove Attractive.

Wall papers are attractive when they are chosen, first, of a color suitable to the temperament of those whose walls they must adorn; second, in a shade or a tone of that color which produces a pleasant sensation.

A plain or an inconspicuous paper is needed for a room where pictures are to hang.

A low ceiling should not be decorated, as a general thing, as it then seems to rest on one's head.

The woodwork of a room should suggest a frame for its walls and ought never to be radically different in tone unless the architectural lines are good.

Figures, flowers and complicated designs in wall papers are distracting if certain laws are disobeyed.

As, for instance, a paper with gilt in it can play strange tricks. It is promising and cheerful enough under certain lights, while when turned the other way for an instant it becomes formless and shiny and out of harmony with its surroundings.

Figures that do not match perfectly have destroyed the comfort of many invalids, and aggressive flower papers grow to seem like "noisy visitors, against whom one can never close the door."

The walls of our houses make the setting for our everyday lives and for our possessions.

FASHION HINTS.

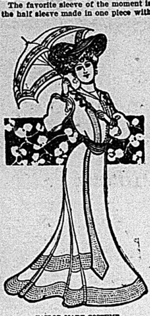
Much Purple and Lavender Are Worn—Voiles Checked and Plain.

A great deal of purple and of lavender are being used for street wear.

The fashions of the moment are not a little trying to the woman of generous proportions, but still she may have this consolation—the fullness beginning below instead of at the waist line rather takes away from the width of her hips and that also the plain front panel gives her a flat, straight front effect.

Plaid effects in voile are among the latest. Small pin checks are being imported in voile as well as in taffeta, and these are trimmed with rows of trimming in plain silk to match. A black and white checked voile seen recently was trimmed with chantilly lace and made up over apple green silk.

The favorite sleeve of the moment is the half sleeve made in one piece with the shoulder. This is worn with or without a tight fitting undersleeve, and the inside is filled in with a lace ruffle.



TAILOR MADE COSTUME.

The little loose gathered bolero of ample width, which has loose sleeves, is the smartest model for all thin silk or mohair costumes. It is short enough to allow a wide belt to be seen. This is usually of a darker shade than the costume.

The cut shows a tailor made dress of lavender mohair trimmed with tiny black buttons and a white chemisette.

McINTOSH BROS.

OUR MEN AT BISLEY.

Bisley Camp, July 23.—The Canadian team yesterday did fairly well. The garden party given by the Canadian team was largely attended by a large number of visitors. Lord Strathcona presented the gold watch to Corp. McGregor as first Canadian in the Grand Aggregate, and also made the presentation of a silver tea service to Sergt. Crowe as winner of the Canada Company Prize. In the Grand Aggregate, Corp. R. McGregor scored 319 out of a possible 350. Other Candians in the prize list are: Staff-Sergt. Crowe 317, Pte. A. Baynton 310, Pte. Neil Smith 310, Capt. Crowe 310.

The King's Prize.

Major W. P. Moore, Pte. J. W. Smith and 21 others shot for two places in the third stage of the King's Prize at 800 yards.

Baynton 82, Sergt. Crowe 83, McGregor 85, Moore 83, Perry 92, N. Smith 82, Bayles 85, J. W. Smith 84.

The Rev. Mr. Ferguson, chaplain of the Punjab Light Infantry, won the silver medal in the King's Prize competition with a score of 192 points. The following are the Canadian aggregates: Pte. Perry 186, Corp. McGregor 181, Sergt. Crowe, Major Moore and Pte. J. W. Smith 179. Perry and McGregor are entitled to compete in the final stage.

In the range prizes in the King's Prize match at 200 yarde, Canadians came in as follows. 5, Staff-Sergt. Bayles, £1; 18, Pte. Neil Smith, £1.

Corp. R. McGregor of Ottawa won the tie for second place in the King's Prize range prizes competition, at 600 yards. He wins a rifle and £3.

The Wingrove Match.

In the Wingrove match, 10 shots at 800 yards, the first prize for which is a £25 silver cup, Staff-Sergt. Bayles of the 10th Royal Grenadiers scored nine bulls and a magpie, making 48 out of a possible 50.

St. George's Vase.

In the St. George's Vase, at 500 yards, Capt. Crowe was 139th, winning £2; Sgt. W. Gould was 140th; Lance-Corp. Fowler of Toronto, 147th; Color-Sergt. Will, 174th, and Corp. R. McGregor, 202nd, each of them winning £2.

Pte. Perry is the only Canadian who has qualified for the second stage of the St. George's Challenge Vase at 900 yards.

In the Doubles.

In the Doubles match, Capt. Blair and Pte. Perry made a score of 61 out of a possible 70 at 600 yards. These matches are shot off every day. The first prize is £5.

In the Gregory match, at 200 yards, Canadians scored as follows: R. Dillon, £1 7s; 17, Lance-Sergt. Fowler, £1 7s; 36, Major W. P. Moore, £1; 38, Pte. Neil Smith, £1.

The Canadian team won the Tilton competition, open to one team of eight. The prize is £25 and silver medals.

A DIFFERENCE.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier Sees One on Being Asked Question.

Ottawa, July 23.—In the Commons yesterday morning E. F. Clarke asked if there was anything to communicate about the movements and utterances in England of Chief Justice Taschereau. Why had he suddenly left London, and had he been recalled? The Premier said he had no information.

Mr. Barker of Hamilton wanted to know if the Government had enquired into the utterances of the Chief Justice, as he did in the case of Lord Dundonald.

In his reply the Premier said there was a difference between the two. Lord Dundonald, when speaking, was an official of the Government.

Members Tired Out.

Extremely dull and uninteresting were the proceedings of the House yesterday. The items for the Department of Agriculture were under discussion. Those passed were $100,000 for experimental farms, $22,000 for the branch of the commission of agriculture and dairying, and $40,000 to promote dairying interests by advance for milk and cream. When these matters had been disposed of it was 9.30 p.m., and the members felt so tired that they decided to go home.

Bill Is Passed.

Ottawa, July 23.—In the Senate yesterday the bill to amend the railway act of 1902, to prevent railway companies contracting themselves out of liability for accidents, was read a second and third time, and passed.

Rev. Dr. Philp Dead.

Grimsby Park, July 23.—Rev. Dr. John Philp of Kingston, died suddenly at Grimsby Park of apoplexy yesterday at 5 p.m. The Dr. was feeling remarkably well all day, took his dinner as usual about 2 o'clock, went to the Lakeview House to bid goodby, but soon after going upstairs he became unconscious, and expired three hours later. The funeral will take place from Dr. William Philp's residence, 94 Hess street North, Hamilton, on Monday at 2.30 p.m. to Dundas. Rev. Dr. Philp was the son of the Rev. William Philp, a Methodist clergyman who came to this country from England in the early forties. The deceased married Miss Grafton of Dundas, who died about a year ago. During his ministry Dr. Philp had occupied a number of important pulpits, having been stationed at Toronto, London, St. Thomas, Hamilton, Montreal, and at the time of his death, the Sydenham Street Church, Kingston.

A LAKE YACHT ABLAZE

Castanet, of Visger Line, With 150 Passengers on Board.

Beached Four Miles From Kingston—No One Seriously Hurt—Passengers Transferred to the Nokomis Without Loss of Life or Accident—Crews of Both Vessels Put Out the Fire—Accidents and Deaths.

Clayton, N.Y., July 23.—The steam yacht Castanet of the Visger line, returning from Kingston yesterday afternoon with a load of 150 excursionists, caught fire in midstream and only by the most fortunate circumstances was an awful accident averted. The yacht was four miles from Kingston and half a mile from shore; a stiff breeze was blowing and the passengers were enjoying the ride when suddenly, without a sound of warning, a sheet of flame shot up through the hatchways.

Ablaze to the Stern.

The passengers at once ran to the ends of the boat. The flames swept up to the canvas awnings, and in a moment these were ablaze to the stern. While the passengers were huddled forward and aft in fear, the engineer and firemen crawled from the flames of the engine room. The crew had meanwhile caught up armfuls of life preservers, which they handed to the passengers. Then they began to fight the blaze. The captain, Barney Nunn, turned his boat from its course, heading it for the shore, followed by the steam yacht Nokomis, which was a mile away when the blaze burst out.

Passengers Transferred to Nokomis.

The burning boat was beached on Cedar Island, and in a moment the Nokomis was run behind her. The transfer of passengers was quickly made without the loss of life and the united efforts of both crews extinguished the blaze. Engineer Charles Wood and his son, Raymond Wood, the fireman, were both badly burned, but will recover. The cause of the accident was an explosion of gas in the fire box, which threw the fires out into the engine room and down the galleys. The boat was a handsome excursion yacht, built in 1898. The damage to her can be repaired.

Drowned Near Berlin.

Berlin, July 23.—A drowning accident took place in the Grand River, about three miles above Bridgeport, on Thursday evening. Two young men left town Thursday afternoon to go up the river with the victim, who is Fred Elliott of the eastern section of Toronto. He was in the employ of James Reid of Stratford, a photographer and picture enlarger. About 4 o'clock on Thursday evening, Elliott and two fellow-employes, named Rutledge and Clymer, left Berlin to go up beyond Bridgeport for a swim. They did not return yesterday and Mr. Reid received a telephone message that while in bathing, Elliott [illegible] Bridgeport.

Drowned at Owen Sound.

Owen Sound, July 23.—As the steamer Collingwood was nearing the dock Thursday night with a load of Owen Sound excursionists returning from Collingwood a man was seen to drop or fall from the dock between the dock and the steamer. Search was made, but no trace could be found until yesterday morning, when the body was recovered. It proved to be that of William Deay, a resident of Owen Sound. Deay leaves a widow and three small children.

Boy With a Gun.

Napanee, July 23.—Frank Wilson, 26 years of age, while playing with a gun, accidentally discharged it, the contents lodging in the neck and shoulders of a Miss Walker, who was picking berries on Mr. Field's farm, about two miles from town. It is thought the young lady will recover.

Port Hope Man's Death.

Hamilton, July 23.—James McCormick, Port Hope, fell backwards off a G.T.R. bridge between Hamilton and Dundas yesterday morning and was brought to the City Hospital, where he died last evening. His spine was injured. He was about 35 years old and unmarried. He had joined the G.T.R. forces only a few days ago.

"Trouble Man" Hurt.

Hamilton, July 23.—Sam Williams, known to almost everybody as the "trouble man" of the Cataract Power Company, fell from a pole at the corner of King and John streets last evening, about 8 o'clock. He fell thirty feet on the cement sidewalk and was very seriously injured. He had climbed the pole to turn on the Gore Park lights.

Mrs. Malone Badly Burned.

Toronto, July 23.—Last night a lamp carried by Mrs. Malone, a widow, who lived with her son at 72 Kensington avenue, exploded, and the room was immediately filled with flames, which soon seized on Mrs. Malone's clothing. Her son escaped through a window, and Mrs. Malone was found in her yard moaning, she having succeeded in extinguishing the flames. She was so badly burned that the nurses at St. Michael's Hospital, to which she was conveyed, could not say this morning that she would recover.

Kruger's Funeral July 26.

The Hague, July 23.—The family of the late Paul Kruger has arranged for a public funeral here on July 26 of the former President.

Air the Closets.

Even tidy housekeepers who insist upon a daily airing of their rooms seldom extend this attention to their closets. Clothes presses, especially those containing garments but seldom worn, should be visited with light and air daily, if only for five minutes. Instead of inviting the nimble moth to take up its abode therein it will really aid in the detection and expulsion of such as have already established themselves.

JAPS OCCUPY KIAOTUNG

It Cost Them 424 Troops But Russians Lost 1,000 Men.

Gen. Kuroki's Troops Drive the Enemy From a Strongly Fortified Position in the Chi River—One Japanese Company Lost All Its Officers in the Fierce Fight—Japanese Are Closing in on Liaoyang.

Tokio, July 23.—General Kuroki, after a severe fight, occupied Kiaotung on July 19. The place had been fortified by the Russians, who defended it stoutly. In the fighting General Kuroki's troops drove the Russians from their strongly fortified position on the Chi River, which is northwest of Motien Pass, and east of Anping, inflicting upon the enemy more serious losses than they sustained themselves. The fight began on the 18th, and ended on the 19th. The Japanese lost 424 men in killed and wounded. The Russian losses are estimated at 1,000.

One Company Loses All Its Officers.

General Kuroki began his advance early on the morning of the 18th. He covered and followed the enemy along the Chi River. The Russians seemed to be retiring to the northward, when suddenly two battalions, with eight guns, turned and attacked the Japanese advance vigorously. At this point the Japanese suffered before the relief came, one company losing all its officers. At a late hour in the afternoon the Russians' position was developed. They occupied an eminence on the bank of the Chi. This river guarded their left flank and high precipices protected the Russians on the right. The only approach to their position was through a narrow defile. The fighting continued until dark, when the Japanese forces bivouacked. The Russians made two counter attacks, but were repulsed in each case.

Renewed at Midnight.

The Japanese renewed the attack at midnight, posting their artillery in the valley below and on the high ground to the south of the Russian position. The main Japanese body was assigned to attack the Russian centre, a small detachment was sent toward the right flank and another to watch the enemy's left flank. After these positions had been taken, the fighting ceased for a time, but it was resumed at dawn. The Russians had thirty-two guns in action, and they vigorously shelled the Japanese. To this fire the Japanese replied, and the bombardment lasted for four hours. During this time the Japanese infantry moved forward, the flankers had succeeded in scaling the heights on the Russian right by 3 o'clock in the afternoon, at which hour the main force was ordered to storm the Russian centre. The Japanese artillery protected this move splendidly, but the infantry met with a severe fire, and lost heavily in gaining the heights. The final successful charge was delivered at half-past five in the afternoon.

Retreat a Rout.

The Japanese succeeded in partially cutting off the Russian retreat and it soon became a rout. The enemy went in two directions, to the northward and to the eastward. The Russian forces engaged and included, in addition to the artillery, seven battalions of infantry and a regiment of Cossacks. The enemy left 131 dead and 300 rifles on the field. Prisoners taken estimated the Russian losses at 1,000. The Japanese lost one officer and 54 men killed, and one officer and 350 wounded.

On July 19 Japanese forces attacked a battalion of infantry, who occupied Chechiato, to the northward of Shaotientszua. After four hours of fighting, the Russians retired across the Taitsu River. In this engagement the Japanese had 17 men wounded.

SO MANY KILLED.

That Japs Had to Cremate the Dead of Battle on July 19.

General Kuroki's Headquarters in the Field, July 20, via Fusan, Corea, July 23.—The Japanese attack on the Russians at Kiaotung Thursday resulted in another Russian disaster. Kiaotung is 25 miles from these headquarters. Few details of the engagement have been received, but they indicate that the fighting was fierce. The Russians had more than one division engaged and the artillery was used freely. The Russians are fortifying new positions before Motien Pass. There were more men killed in the fighting of Sunday, July 17, than can be buried, and the Japanese are now engaged in cremating the bodies.

Joined Northern Fleet.

London, July 23.—A despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from St. Petersburg says it is reported there that cruisers said to have been bought by Russia in Germany have joined the Vladivostock squadron, which went to sea especially to meet them.

Released on Bail.

St. Catharines, July 23.—In the police court yesterday afternoon, Charles Brooker, John Byron, Robert Darling, Frank Couglin, Charles Doyle, John Epler and Robert McCann, all Riordan Paper Mills strikers, were committed for trial upon a charge of notoriously assembling and assaulting R. A. Nicholas of the Noble Detective Agency, Toronto, on the night of July 11. The men all elected to go to a jury. They were released on $200 bail each.

Suicide By Carbolic Acid.

Ottawa, July 23.—The body of Alfred Powell, a man well known in the city, aged 27 years, was found dead at Rockliffe Park yesterday afternoon. A bottle of carbolic acid by his side told the tale of suicide. He was a victim of drink and had been out of work for some time. He had apparently been dead two days when found.

Why So Many of the Sons of Sunny Italy Went There.

Montreal, July 25.—Judge Winchester appears to have got at the bottom of the work of the men who induced so many Italians to pour into this city when there was no work for them to do. Labor Agent Antonio Cordasco admitted Saturday evening that 3,910 laborers had applied to him for work, and that he had collected $5,350 from the lot, some paying $1 and others $3. It also came out that Cordasco owned a paper called Courrier del Canade, and that it was circulated in Italy and Italian centres in the United States. Then Mr. Cordasco admitted having received a further sum of $1,200 between the 8th and the 12th of July, but he told the judge. he was ready to pay it back.

Vigilance Committee Aroused and Threats of Lynching Made.

Bonesteel, S.D., July 25.—Riot and disorder were again in evidence yesterday, at least four citizens having been shot and seriously wounded. A number of grafters also were wounded. The vigilance committee is thoroughly aroused and there are threats of lynching as the most effective punishment to be meted out to offenders.

There are reports of a pitched battle at a sodhouse east of the town, in which a dozen or fifteen shots were exchanged.

About 40 men arrested Saturday and Saturday night were convicted yesterday and will be deported.

CANADIAN RIFLEMAN CAPTURES KING'S PRIZE.

Pte. Perry, Vancouver, B. C., Best Rifle Shot in the Empire.

Wins the King's $1,250, the N.R.A. Gold Medal, and the N.R.A. Gold Badge From 1,371 Competitors For the Coveted Trophies—Perry, Who Was Formerly of the Royal Grenadiers, Toronto, Exceeded 1903's Winning Score 10 Points

Bisley Camp, July 25.—(C. A. P.) Pte. J. Perry of the 6th Duke of Connaught's Own Rifles, Vancouver, won the King's Prize on Saturday. His winning was a great surprise, but most popular. He scored seven bulls and three inners at 1,000 yards, giving him a total of 47 over that range. His total score over the 200, 500, 600, 800, 900 and 1,000 yards ranges was 321, out of a possible 355, which was 10 more than the score of last year.

Carried Around the Camp.

An enthusiastic crowd followed the hero of the hour as he was carried around the camp. At the Canadian hut the procession halted while Perry was photographed. All the Canadians in camp have decorated their hats with maple leaves taken from the trees lining the avenue leading to the Canadian hut. Commander Anderson is jubilant, and Adjutant McDougall is equally so.

The Prince and Princess of Wales both congratulated Pte. Perry, and the Prince asked him if he had been in South Africa. On Perry replying that he had Lord Roberts overheard him. The veteran soldier came up and spoke to Perry, congratulating him.

Pte. Perry's Target in 'King's Prize' —1000 Yards.

Pte. Perry was chaired by the members of the Canadian team and carried around the camp, his bearers singing "The Maple Leaf." At the pavilion they were met by a band, which, playing "See the Conquering Hero Comes," proceeded to the Canadian hut.

Perry's win is the most popular one the C.A.P. representative has seen in sixteen years at Bisley.

Corp. McGregor, Canada, was 21st in the King's Prize and won $60 and the National Rifle Association badge with a score of 306 points.

Major John Howard, Agent-General in London for Nova Scotia, is the winner of the St. George's Challenge Vase competition. He gets the vase, a dragon cup, a gold cross and £30.

42nd in St. George's Vase.

Pte. J. Perry of Vancouver was 42nd, winning the N.R.A. badge and £6. The match is shot over 500, 600 and 900 yards ranges.

Staff-Sergt. Crowe was 115th in the first stage of the St. George's Vase competition, at 500 and 600 yards, winning £2.

In the Doubles Saturday Sergt. W. Mortimer and Sergt. T. S. Bayles, two men of the 10th Royal Grenadiers, scored 61 out of a possible 70.

In the King's Prize, at 900 yards, Pte. J. Perry scored 45 and Corp. R. McGregor 42.

The Prince of Wales, accompanied by Lord Roberts, visited the Canadian camp and inspected the colonials drawn up in an open square in front of the Canadian hut. Lieut.-Col. Anderson, the commandant of the team, showed them through.

PRIVATE PERRY.

Winner of the King's Prize.

Scotland won the National Challenge Trophy. This is open competition by teams of twenty from the volunteers of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales. The ranges are 200, 500 and 600 yards.

The Prince of Wales asked the audience at the pavilion to join in a welcome to the representatives of the King's dominions over-seas. The audience gave a rousing cheer.

Prince Congratulates Perry.

The Prince also asked them to join himself in congratulating Pte. Perry on his success in winning the King's Prize. The Princess then distributed the prizes.

The Prince, before leaving, congratulated Lieut.-Col. Anderson, and said: "I am more than pleased that a Canadian has won the King's Prize."

McGregor Won £15.

In the Corporation of the City of London competition of the value of £105, open to Indian and colonial volunteers, McGregor was second, winning a prize of £15; Sergt. Crowe third, winning £10; Baynton tenth, £5; Capt. Crowe eleventh, £5; Smith twelfth, £5.

London Press Comment.

The Daily Chronicle says that Private Perry's victory in the chief volunteer event of the year will help to obliterate the bad feeling caused by Lord Dundonald, and at the same time recall the high services rendered the Empire by the Canadians during the Boer war.

The Daily News says that Great Britain will heartily write Private Perry's name on the roll of honor. Markmanship will do much more than any expedient that could ever be devised to bring the Empire together and to neutralize such small mischief as half a dozen Dundonalds could do.

The other London papers in their reports of the Bisley matches feature the fact that the King's Prize was won by a Canadian, and give due credit to Private Perry for his unerring markmanship. The Canadian colony is rejoiced at the success of their kinsman.

Samuel J. Perry, born in Toronto, 26 years ago, an old member of the Royal Grenadiers, was one of the first contingent on service in South Africa.

The King's Prize.

The prize consists of $1,250, given by His Majesty, the N.R.A. gold medal and the N.R.A. gold badge. And greater than these is the overlasting glory of being the best shot in the Empire for his year. The prize is the blue ribbon of the rifle world, and is unrivaled among the great contests of skill and endurance.

The prize is competed for in three stages, the first at 200, 500 and 600 yards, with seven shots at each distance. The first three hundred in this stage compete at the second stage distance of 600 yards, with 20 shots each. The first hundred in this stage may enter the last stage at the distances of 800, 900 and 1,000 yards, with ten shots at each distance. The possible is therefore 355, and the score of 321 made by Perry is a remarkably fine one. His target at the 1,000 yards range is one of the best ever made.

Ottawa, July 25.—Sir Frederick Borden has forwarded to Col. W. P. Anderson, commandant of the Canadian team at Bisley, a cablegram of congratulation to Private Perry of Vancouver upon winning the King's Prize.

Yale and Harvard Won.

London, July 25.—Taking first honors in six out of nine events on the card, Yale and Harvard defeated Oxford and Cambridge Saturday afternoon and won the rubber in the athletic contest between the principal universities of America and England, which began in 1899.

Peace at Lhassa.

Nagartse, Thibet, July 25.—The Thibetan peace delegates met the British mission and professed willingness to arrange peace if the mission would return to Gyangtse. Col. Younghusband replied that he could only make peace at Lhassa, but that he was willing to discuss terms while proceeding there.

MR. MONET'S RETIREMENT.

Mr. Dominique Monet, the Grit member for Laprairie and Napierville, a few days ago announced his retirement from public life. Mr. Monet has been most known throughout Canada as the co-worker with Mr. Henri Bourassa in certain racial campaigns in Quebec for the purpose of holding that province "solid for Laurier." At the same time these gentlemen endeavored to make a display of independence of their leader in order that their work in Quebec and for Quebec consumption might not be attributed to and used against Sir Wilfrid in other provinces. But it is not likely that anybody was deceived by the pretence. This appearance of party independence Mr. Monet keeps up even in his valedictory to his constituents, part of which is reported as follows:—

> "I do not mean to say," he continued, "that everything is to my liking in the administration of the country; I do not wish to say that I have no fear for the future, even the very near future. I do not wish to say that if I returned to Ottawa I would not be again obliged to combat my leader, and my party, as I did in the past. I have no regret for my past conduct, and it is for the good reason that it is impossible for me to bend the knee before a will that is not my own, and because I know I will again be a source of embarrassment for my colleagues and my leaders, that I have decided to retire from public life. Were I rich enough not to have to ask assistance from the electoral fund of my party, as I have always done in the past, I would remain in the political arena. I would continue to aid my friend Bourassa in combating that which we find bad in the two political parties of this country. But Mr. Bourassa has means and no family, while I have a family and no means."

This public declaration of party independence may have had a new and special reason. It is rather notable that right on the heels of it should come the report that Mr. Monet is likely to be appointed as a successor to Mr. McDougall in the office of Auditor-General.

BOY'S TRIP TO PARIS.

FIVE DAYS OF JOYOUS LIVING ENDED IN A FLOGGING.

Mr. C. M. Reid, of this city, sends us, from London, the following clipping from the London Daily Mail, and says "after one has been in Paris and seen the swift life there they can quite credit this account":

No less remarkable than the incidents of his first trip to Paris was the manner in which the visit of a precocious English youth of eighteen was brought to a conclusion.

The only son of a London solicitor, who is a strict disciplinarian, he disappeared from home a few days since and arrived here with £200 in his pocket, the proceeds of a day's betting at Alexandra Park Races. Determined not to be outdone in luxury by the gilded youth of this capital, he emptied his purse within five days of his arrival.

His extravagances included a motor-car at £25 a day, £24 for seats at the opera, a dinner for five at the Pavillon d'Armenonville costing £18, and a suite of rooms at 48s. per diem. At breakfast, served in the garden of his hotel, he partook of Cantaloup melon, peaches and iced champagne, the waiter invariably receiving a gold coin for his services.

Finally he found himself penniless, and communicated with his father, who at once set out for Paris.

On the arrival of the train the indignant parent, unable to restrain his anger, greeted his offending offspring with a series of sound boxes on the ear. Next, to the surprise of the bystanders in the station, he then and there administered a thoroughly British flogging. Subsequently father and erring son returned to London.

A LOCAL INVENTION.

MR. B. H. SILLS, OF THIS CITY, HAS A VALUABLE PATENT.

The "Three Square," a sporting magazine published in Toronto, has an interesting article describing the "Sills Hygienic Handle-bar" for bicycles, which consists of a spring set into the post head of the bicycle, thus doing away with cramping of the hands and vibration. What the cushion frame is to the seat the Sills Handle-bar is to the forward part of the bicycle. The invention is a highly popular one, as may be judged by the fact that it has been patented in six different countries and the Canadian right has been sold to the Massey-Harris company. The right to manufacture in the United States has been sold to a U. S. firm, who will give Mr. Sills a royalty on all sales and guarantee to turn out a minimum output of 10,000 per year for 17 years. The new bars are readily attachable to any bicycle, and should fill a long-felt want.

Shirt Bosom Board.

The best shirt bosom board is one made of seasoned wood, a foot wide, one foot and a half long and one inch thick. This should be covered with two or three thicknesses of flannel, drawn tight and well tacked in place. Cover again with canton flannel drawn very tight and liberally tack. Make outside slips of white cotton cloth fitted to the board, and put on a clean slip every week.

Black Lace.

To clean black lace wipe off all dust with a cambric handkerchief and then pin out the face on a board, carefully inserting a pin in each of the points. Sponge over the lace with cold tea and then leave till perfectly dry. When the pins are removed the lace will look fresh and new, far better than if it had been ironed.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

The Use of Powder.

A beauty expert who actually recommends the use of powder on the face is something of a rarity, but a prominent complexion specialist, writing in the Woman's Home Companion, has placed himself on record as advising women to powder even at home. Powder is essential to American women, he thinks, on account of the perpetual changes of climate and the dust and dirt in the atmosphere. Powder should always protect the skin outdoors. To apply properly, first soften the skin by an application of cold cream. Wipe off any that remains on the surface, then apply the powder with a piece of absorbent cotton.

THIN MATERIALS.

A Great Many Veiling Gowns Are Worn—Silk Mull Dresses.

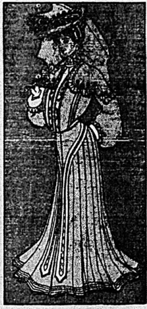
There are a good many voile dresses worn at this season of the year both for dressy and street wear. Cashmere, crepe de chine, toile de soie, embroidered linen and some beautiful heavy guipures mixed with taffeta are all smart.

Even gowns of a tailor made description show a considerable amount of trimming in the way of frills and double and single skirts. Nothing is more difficult than to put on these softening effects in the right way and still to retain that chic and simplicity characteristic of the best French gowns.

White pongee is particularly smart for evening dresses. It is trimmed with handmade tucks and with laces of the embroidery description.

White and ecru gowns, the latter relieved with a touch of red or grass green, will lead this summer for afternoon wear.

Pale blue silk mull makes a dainty gown which can be worn both in summer and in winter. A gown of this description should be made up with a much ruffled skirt and the waist shirred into a fancy collar of Irish lace. The sleeves are prettiest made of tiny ruffles or huge transparent puffs.



BATISTE GOWN.

A pretty evening toilet was designed of white chenille spotted net of the 1830 style, the bolero effect being introduced by an arrangement of white velvet bands and lace insertion. Applique water lilies and their foliage in high relief formed the decoration of the decolletage.

The cut shows a batiste gown. The skirt is made plaited, and the waist is trimmed with a frilling of lace. The hat is trimmed with a black ostrich feather and ruching.

JUDIC CHOLLET.

There is no other feature of house furnishing which is so abused as the draperies. The purpose of these should be borne in mind. They may be intended to keep out the light or the cold, or, in the case of window draperies, to screen one from the gaze of the public. The materials should be selected with this purpose in mind as well as to harmonize in color with the other furnishings of the room. What can be uglier than the popular chenille curtain, with its long bedraggled fringes, thrown over a pole, looking for all the world as if it were hung up to dry? The portieres should be of plain material, for the bric-a-brac and pictures will be sufficient to give variety of color and design.—Josephine Wright Chapman in Success.

Good Uncle Ben

By C. B. LEWIS

Copyright, 1904, by C. B. Lewis

Sarah Jane Williams, daughter of Farmer John Williams, was characterized by her parents as a pigheaded girl. They said she had been pigheaded even in her babyhood days and had grown worse as she grew older. When asked by her in reply to furnish a bill of particulars, about all they could bring forward was the fact that at seventeen she had refused to marry a lightning rod man twice her age, that at eighteen she had scorned a patent hayfork agent who had fallen in love with her at first sight, at nineteen she had refused to receive the attentions of an old widower who owned the only windmill for ten miles around and at twenty she was "taken up" with Harry Seymour, son of a nearby farmer in moderate circumstances.

The girl did not deny that she meant to marry Harry. But the old folks had other plans in view. They wanted her to look higher, even as high as the commission man who came through the country every fall buying up thousands of bushels of apples. They first began objecting to Harry in a general way, but in the course of a few months he had been as good as forbidden the house.

The lovers' difficulties simply increased their love. They had about determined on an elopement when Uncle Ben Churchill arrived on a visit and with him a distant relative. Uncle Ben was Mrs. Williams' brother, and the distant relative was a second cousin to both and a young man of twenty-two. The first thing that Uncle Ben did was to discover that Sarah wanted to marry and that her parents were opposed to the match. The first thing that the second cousin did was to fall in love with Sarah Jane. That made three complications on hand at once, and Uncle Ben was in his element. If there was one thing he liked better than another it was complications. When he had seen that the second cousin was smitten he took his part against the field.

"I'LL HELP YOU PLAN AN ELOPEMENT."

"Look a-here, Sarah," he began one day as he got the girl to sit down beside him in the orchard, "you believe I know folks better'n you do, don't you?"

"Yes, of course."

"I orter, Sarah—I orter. I've been to New York and Boston and all around, and I can spot a pickpocket as far as I can see him. That feller Harry ain't no feller for you to marry. I didn't have to look at him twice to see that he'll never make a hustler."

"I don't see why," protested Sarah.

"Natur' didn't make him that way. You'd never have a second dress to your back if you married him. Better give him right up now, and lemme p'int you out a feller who'll make a crackin' good husband."

"Who is it?"

"Your Cousin Walter. He's fell in love with you and can't sleep o' nights. He's a feller who's goin' to rip up the ground all around some day."

"But I know I never could love him."

"One can do a heap of things, my girl, if she sets out to. You jest go around thinkin' about Walter from mornin' till night, and you'll be lovin' him inside of a week."

"I don't believe father and mother would like it."

"Say, now, that's the fun of the hull thing," laughed Uncle Ben as he rubbed his hands together. "I've kinder sounded your dad and mam, and they ain't stuck on Walter. They can't cotton to a feller who parts his hair in the middle and has a gold filled tooth. They might be opposed to a marriage, but that marriage could come off jest the same."

"How?" asked Sarah, with considerable interest.

"Lean your head down till I whisper one word in your ear—elopement. If you and Walter make up to each other, I'll help you plan an elopement and put $100 in your hand for a bridal dower. I'd jest like to show your dad and mam that there's other folks who know a thing or two."

An idea was trying to work itself out in Sarah's mind, and she asked for half a day to think things over. At the end of that time she accepted Uncle Ben's proposition.

"Good girl!" he exclaimed as he kissed her and smiled like a June morning. "You just go right ahead lovin' Walter, and when the time comes I'll be on hand."

Sarah and Walter went ahead. As he was no great favorite of her parents she was not put to any great bother. The most she had to do was to hear him sigh and recite poetry and apostrophize the rising and setting sun. Backed and urged on by Uncle Ben, he finally proposed and was inferentially accepted. This was no sooner over with than there was a further confab in the orchard.

"Now, then, for the elopement!" chuckled Uncle Ben. "And here's the $100. I'll give Walter another hundred before the thing comes off."

"Dear old Uncle Ben, but what a good man you are!" Sarah said gratefully.

"Yes, all wool and a yard wide," he replied as he pinched her cheek.

Three nights later at 11 o'clock at night Sarah Jane Williams tiptoed softly downstairs and left the house. There were a horse and buggy waiting in the road which had been ordered by Uncle Ben. A young man followed close on her heels and took the lines and drove away. As the outfit disappeared in the darkness the good man waved his hat and chuckled. Then he entered the house to sit down and chuckle some more, when some one came rattling downstairs. It was Walter, the distant relative. He had been locked in his room for the last half hour.

"By gum, but let us figger on this!" exclaimed Uncle Ben as his smile vanished.

It needed no Sherlock Holmes to unravel the mystery. Sarah had locked Walter in, and Walter was out of it. The man who had driven off with her to get married before the waiting minister in the nearest village must be Harry Seymour. They would see Niagara falls and other wonders of the world on that $100, and then come back for forgiveness.

"Walter, my boy," said good Uncle Ben when through with his "figgering, "you part your hair in the middle and have got a gold filled tooth, and you are a fool!"

"Uncle Ben," replied the chagrined and dejected distant relative, "you conspire and plan and chuckle and are an idiot."

A Smuggling Scheme.

Many are the devices employed by smugglers both by land and sea. A very smart trick is related of a method by which brandy was conveyed through Paris. Regularly, day after day, a tandem bicycle made its way through one of the gates into the city and attracted no attention. The same pair of cyclists rode it always and appeared to be but workmen hastening to their work from their homes in the suburbs. One morning, just after the machine was through the gates, it went to earth, unseating both the riders. The man who had occupied the front seat jumped to his feet, grabbed the machine, vaulted into the saddle and rode for his life, never giving a glance at his stunned companion. Astonished, the customs officers, who had witnessed the mishap, rushed to the aid of the fallen man, who showed no signs of life. They were still more surprised when they reached him, for he wasn't a man at all, but just a dummy with movable legs and arms, a false head and face and a hollow body of rubber. He had punctured in the fall and ten gallons of the best brandy was making its exit as quickly as it could.

Elusive Syllables.

A crowning specimen of ludicrous helplessness in the face of elusive syllables is that of the unfortunate speaker who, at a pathetic point of his address, when his hero was about to undergo a heartrending parting from home and friends, uttered in his most melting voice:

"Biddy diddy"—

He stopped confused, flushed, set his mouth and tried again, with a difficult resumption of the interrupted pathos:

"Diddy, diddy"—

Something was still wrong. He grew scarlet, perspired and gasped forth a third attempt, not more intelligible. His hearers could none of them interpret it. It might be high German or it might be a "Mother Goose" refrain:

"Diddy, hiddy, biddy doo?"

The situation was desperate, but the persistent orator rallied, paused until he had fully recovered his self control, and trying once more, with slow utterance and distinctive enunciation, conquered at length the simple phrase which had overthrown him. He said:

"Did he bid adieu?"

Worth Bringing to Light.

One can easily imagine that the judge smiled, the lawyers laughed and the spectators burst into applause when a courtroom bore was subdued in the following effectual way, told in the Christian Endeavor World:

George B. Smith and I. S. Sloan, two of the greatest lawyers of their day, were once trying a case as opponents. Mr. Sloan had a habit of puncturing his address to the court with the expression, "Your honor, I have an idea." The case had been dragging its weary length through the hours of a warm summer day, when Mr. Sloan, who was making what appeared to be an interminable argument, said:

"Your honor, I have an idea"—

Mr. Smith sprang to his feet, assumed a dignified position, and with all the solemnity imaginable said:

"May it please the court, I move that a writ of habeas corpus be issued by this court immediately to take the learned gentleman's idea out of solitary confinement."

Juvenile Lore.

"Oh, yes," said the little miss, "I understand; they keep their summer clothes in their trunks."—Watchword.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Lo! the poor Indian, whose team went against the auto experience on Saturday, has evidently his own opinion of the white man's "civilization." The redsking probably came from the Reserve, but he is not at all reserved in discussing the accident and cussing the auto.

• • •

The King's prize at Bisley was won by a Canadian, Pte. Perry, of Vancouver, B.C., who thus carries off the blue ribbon of the meet and the neat sum of $1250. Three cheers for Private Perry. He should be made a corporal without delay.

• • •

First the Diamond sculls, then the King's prize. What next?

• • •

Mr. Beckles Willson's open letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier is something like a Damascus blade—highly polished—but it cuts no less keenly on that account. It is a long time since Laurier had so much truth told him in one letter before.

• • •

And the letter is undoubtedly true. Who can conscientiously affirm that Laurier is loyal to the Crown of Great Britain? He has shown the cloven foot too many times.

• • •

Says the Montreal Witness (Liberal):

"Lord Dundonald has not said too much. One thing we are glad he did not forget to say, and that is to repudiate in the strongest terms the very mischievous insinuations of the Minister (of Militia) twice repeated, that he had in his administration been prejudiced against the French race."

SMART HABERDASHERY.

The man who wants the latest thing in a shirt, the right thing in a tie, smart gloves or hosiery, will be sure to find at Quick & Robertson's what he's looking for. While we're clothiers, of course, we still give our haberdashery department the greatest care. Everything must be correct or we'll have none of it. Hats also. Don't forget that we sell hats.

ENGINE 490'S WILD RUN

Hair-Raising Railroading on G.T.R. Into Owen Sound.

Locomotive, a Train of Twelve Heavily Loaded Marl Cars and a Caboose, After Developing High Rate of Speed in Runaway From Ben Allen, Piled Themselves in Twisted Mass in the Dock at Owen Sound.

Owen Sound, July 25.—The worst railway wreck ever experienced on the Owen Sound division of the Grand Trunk Railway, occurred at 12.35 Saturday afternoon, when locomotive No. 490 was forced over the end of the rails, plowed up three hundred feet of macadam roadbed and finally buried herself in the west side docks, almost touching the schooner Ida Ilsen. Five marl cars of a train of twelve followed up the engine and piled themselves up in an indiscriminate mass of twisted trucks, broken timber and marl.

A Hair-Raising Run.

The wreck was prefaced by one of the most hair-raising runs ever experienced by a railroad crew. The train, consisting of engine 490, twelve marl cars heavily loaded and a caboose, in charge of Conductor Kee, developed a high rate of speed on the grade near Ben Allen, a station five miles out of Owen Sound.

The engineer, H. Brown of Palmerston, whistled for down brakes. The brakes would not work, and from then on the train rushed wildly and helplessly down the grade towards Owen Sound. The engineer reversed the throttle, but the weight of the train and the momentum made this utterly useless. The engine was being pushed by the train.

The train swept into the yard and flashed past the depot. Fireman Wm. Johnson jumped at the last switch. At the end of the rails the engineer jumped also and the locomotive plunged across the roadway and buried herself in the dock at the side of the big schooner Ilsen.

That no one was killed is a remarkable fact.

Killed in Boyish Scrap.

Brockville, July 25.—The 11-year-old son of William Webb of Winchester Springs, was accidentally shot at his father's farm. Mr. Webb had left a loaded gun in the barn. Deceased and another boy named Liberty endeavored to get possession of it, and in pulling it out of the cutter the weapon discharged. The whole charge went into his breast, killing him instantly.

THE DAY OF TEST.

Capital of $25,000,000 to Clash With 25,000 Workers.

Fall River, Mass., July 25.—With hope of peaceful settlement abandoned, both sides in the pending industrial trouble here await with dogged determination the coming of this morning, and the first test of strength between manufacturers representing a combined capital of $25,000,000 and more than 25,000 cotton mill operatives.

The mill gates will be opened at the usual time this morning, when the operatives will be given an opportunity to go to work under a wage reduction of 12½ per cent. If an insufficient number responds, the mills will be closed for an indefinite period.

Fight to A Finish.

Chicago, July 25.—Determined on a fight to a finish to enforce the demands of the striking butchers, a sympathetic strike of all the union workmen employed in the meat packing industry throughout the country, with the exception of the teamsters, will be declared this morning at 7 o'clock. Last night the indications were that the teamsters will join the other unions on Tuesday in order to bring the packers to terms.

Dundonald at Alexandria.

Alexandria, July 25.—Lord Dundonald arrived here yesterday on the morning express from Ottawa, and was given a right royal Glengarry welcome by his fellow-countrymen from all parts of the county. The Earl was escorted to J. A. MacDonald's, where he was entertained until 11 a.m., when he attended divine service in the Presbyterian Church. During the afternoon he visited many typical Scotch familes. At 6 o'clock he was entertained at dinner by His Lordship Bishop MacDonell. Lord Dundonald attended service in the evening, after which he left on the 8.20 train for Ottawa. Hundreds escorted him to the station, and as the train moved out Piper Dewart struck up the Highland lament.

Band Refuses to Turn Out.

Ottawa, July 25.—The effort of the local Liberal organ, The Free Press, to intimidate civil servants against taking part in the citizens' send-off to Lord Dundonald, Tuesday evening, has evidently not been in vain.

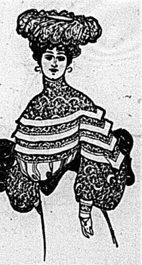
The band of the Governor-General's Foot Guards, eleven of whom are employed in the printing bureau and several more in various other departments of the civil service, met yesterday and voted against turning out, although permission for the band to play had been given by the military authorities, and the band had accepted an engagement from the citizens' committee to furnish music in the procession to the railway station.

NOVELTIES OF THE SEASON.

The Baby Hat—Long Shouldered Effects in Everything.

The baby hat made of lace ruffles has been so much copied in cheap materials that it will not be worn this summer by really smart women. In its place are semi-French sailor hats of shirred tulle lace and net combined with bands of tiny roses and French satin straw. These come with an accentuated roll, which is greater on one side to allow for a feather, which is fastened under the brim. In some cases this feather passes over the crown and is then run through a slit in the brim, so that the tip rests on the hair.

The long shouldered effect is more conspicuous than ever and is seen even on shirt waist costumes. A recent example in checked silk had the upper part of the sleeve run into a broad strap, which was then extended into the collar.



CREPE DE CHINE WAIST.

The cape effect has practically gone out of fashion, although a few modified forms are seen on imported gowns principally, though in the designs of yokes stitched down to within an inch or two of the edge.

The Dutch lace cap for night wear is quite the latest fashionable fad, which must not be confounded with the nightcap of our grandparents. It is composed of silk brocade finished round the face with a ruching of ribbon, while the lower part has a frill of old lace, one of its special features being that it gives to the hair the subtlest fragrance imaginable, merely a suggestion of a perfume. The scent comes from a special oil, the preparation of which is a secret, and is laid on a specially treated thin material, which is placed between the two layers of silk of which this cap is composed.

The picture shows a waist made of Irish lace and bias bands of crepe de chine.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very billous habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the billousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 68 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Billious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieves the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

THE CRIME OF THE CENTURY

been throwin food to the baby, and from the way she spoke to me I almost believe it might be hers, only she's that young it don't seem possible. Anyway that same day I told the policeman about it, and he sent word to the society, and they took it away. That's all I know."

"What is the name of the Jewish girl who fed the child?"

"Rebecca Polaski or some such queer name. Anyway her first name's Rebecca. She lives in the back, with her mother and two sisters, and she sews in the sweatshop in front."

"What day was it on which you first saw the baby?"

"Let me see. It was last Wednesday. I remember, 'cause it was the same day baby took sick."

Mr. Mitchel mused a moment and was struck by the fact that this was the day after the murder of Mr. Mora. Thanking the woman for what she had told him and again promising her his assistance, he went below, determined, if possible, to interview Rebecca Polaski.

As he was leaving the place he was once more impressed with the gloom of it and paused to ask:

"Do you know who owns this building?"

"We pays our rent to an agent, Mr. Mortimer, but I think the real owner is a Colonel Payton."

CHAPTER III.

REBECCA POLASKI'S STORY.

Mr. Mitchel groped his way gingerly down into the increasing gloom of the stairway. At the third landing he passed some one whose sex he vaguely guessed by the fumes of whisky which assailed his nostrils. At length he reached the bottom and stood in the lower hallway looking toward the light at the street door, which made the narrow passage strikingly resemble a tunnel. At the first door to the left he stopped and knocked, receiving, as upon his first effort, no response. Therefore he passed on and rapped upon the door nearest the street, and once more the bearded head of the proprietor protruded just far enough to inquire what was wanted, while the whirring of the sewing machines behind him made his squeaky voice scarcely audible.

"I wish to speak with Rebecca Polaski," said Mr. Mitchel.

"She's busy," was the curt reply, and the man tried to close the door, but was forestalled by Mr. Mitchel, who thrust his foot between, remarking firmly:

"But I tell you I must see her."

"Oh, vell, dot makes a diff'rence!" He came out into the hall and closed the door behind him. "Vhy is dot you must see Repecca? Vhat do you vant vid her?"

"I wish to speak to her about a matter of importance. I will not detain her more than ten minutes."

"Ten minutes! Holy Abraham! How do you suppose she can fool avay so much time? She's got her livin to make, my friendt. She couldn't afford to stop vork for ten minutes. Ve are not millionaires down here."

"How much could she earn in ten minutes?" asked Mr. Mitchel.

This disconcerted the old Jew, and he hesitated before replying, but presently, with a cunning leer and rubbing his hands together after the manner of his tribe, he drawled out:

"As to dot, my friendt, dot's her pizness, und it's not my pizness to gif avay oder people's pizness. But she could make enough to puy a loaf of pread, my tear, und a loaf of pread is a good deal in dese hard times."

"A loaf of bread, eh? Let me see," said Mr. Mitchel, making a quick calculation. "A loaf of bread is 5 cents, and 5 cents for ten minutes is 30 cents an hour, or about $3 a day. Is that what she earns?"

"Vhat a man you are at figgers!" said the Jew slyly. "You ought to be a pawnbroker. But you're wrong, my tear. I didn't say a fife cent loaf. She might puy a dree cent loaf, ain't it?"

"Very well. Then she does not earn more than 30 cents an hour. Tell her to come out and talk to me, and I will pay her 50 cents for her lost hour."

Mr. Mitchel thought that a rest of even an hour might be joyfully acceptable to the poor sweatshop slave and would be cheaply purchased. But the greedy ears of the Jew were doubly attentive now that money was offered. With a deprecating gesture of his most expressive hands, he whined:

"Impossible, my tear. An hour, a whole hour, for 50 cents! You undervalue de vorth of de girl's time. Fifty cents for a whole hour! Impossible, impossible!"

"But you have just admitted that her time is not worth as much as 30 cents an hour."

"You're no pizness man, my friendt. You're too rich to understand de leetle details of trade. Dhirty cents an hour might be de wholesale price of Repecca's time, but for one hour—dot's retail, don't you see?"

"No, I don't see. Explain yourself."

"Vid pleasure. I hires de girl py de month, so I get her time cheaper dan you can get it if you only vant one hour. It's very simple."

"Silence, you miserable wretch! Send the girl out to me at once."

He smiled blandly, as though making the most ordinary statement, but Mr. Mitchel, perceiving the avaricious intent in the man's mind, began to be slightly angry and therefore spoke with some asperity:

"You just now told me that the girl cannot earn more than 30 cents an hour"—

"For herself, see? For herself! For me she might be makin a couple of dollars. So, as her time pelongs to me py contract, if I let her off, vhy, I'm de loser, my friendt, and I'm a poor, hardvorkin man, vid a large family, und"—

Mr. Mitchel was too disgusted to discuss the subject further; so, taking a two dollar bill from his pocketbook, he placed it in the outstretched palm of the old screw and said shortly:

"There's your price. Now, send the girl out to me."

The Jew clutched the bill hungrily, yet either his curiosity to know what the stranger wished with the girl or some lingering qualms of conscience made him hesitate, and he said:

"You're very kind, but dis is a leetle irregular. I shall haf to ask vhat you vant vid de girl. You see, she's a respectable girl, und if any harm vas to come to her I should never forgive myself—never, so help me Abraham!"

This exasperated Mr. Mitchel, and he angrily exclaimed:

"Silence, you miserable wretch! Send the girl out to me at once, or I'll have an inspector down here within an hour to look into this shop of yours."

This threat frightened the old man, for he hastily disappeared through the door of his apartment, crying:

"Vhat's de use of gettin madt?"

A few minutes later a black haired, slim and rather pretty girl came out and stared wonderingly at Mr. Mitchel. Her skin was like putty, her eyes sunken, her cheeks hollow, and she looked tired almost to the limit of her endurance, yet withal she had traces of beauty about her, even as the dead and faded rose gives evidence of what it once has been.

Rebecca Polaski was really not more than 17, but the Jewish maidens attain maturity earlier than their Christian sisters, and the fullness of her figure excused the doubt in Mrs. Griffin's mind, though as Mr. Mitchel gazed into her sad young eyes he thought it highly improbable that she knew aught of the foundling, save what she might have learned by chance. However, she had fed the little one with remnants from her own meager supply, and whatever she did know might be well worth the inquiry.

"You are Rebecca Polaski?" he asked gently.

"Yes, sir," she replied, with little or no accent.

"You live in the back rooms?"

"Yes, sir."

"Take me into them. I wish to have a talk with you." Then, as she hesitated and threw a half frightened glance behind her, he continued: "Have no fear. You will lose nothing. I have arranged with your employer so that you may remain out an hour."

The prospect of so long a rest lighted her eyes with a momentary beam of pleasure, and Mr. Mitchel was more than repaid for the money given in her behalf. She led the way into the back rooms and, opening the shutters, disclosed a view of the graveyard, only a few feet beneath. She then dropped wearily upon an empty soap box and motioned her visitor to a seat upon the one chair, the cane of which was almost entirely torn away. The flat was about the same as the one which he had seen on the upper floor, though the window opening on the outer world let in light and air, which made the place so much the more cheerful.

How strange that what should be freest and most plentifully at the command of all should become an actual commodity through the cupidity of mankind! For one man erects a tall building, darkening the homes of others, and then sets a higher rental on those apartments in his own structure which are best ventilated and lighted. What wonder that the communists, socialists and other revolutionary sects find attentive audiences! Mr. Mitchel thought of this and sighed as he asked:

"What rent do you pay for this place?"

"Three dollars a week," was the reply, and then she added: "We could have the flat next door for two and a half, but it is dreadfully dark, though we could put up with that, 'cause we're mostly at home only in the night time, but there's no air except from the shaft, and the horrid smells made my mother sick."

So even on this ground floor there was an extra charge for a window!

"What do you earn in the shop?" was Mr. Mitchel's next inquiry.

"When I feel strong and well, I can make 75 cents a day in the shop, but mostly only 50, and maybe 25 cents more doing extra work."

Mr. Mitchel looked savagely toward the sweatshop, the proprietor of which had charged him $2 for releasing the girl from her task when he himself paid her such a pittance for the day's work.

"How many hours a day do you work?" he asked.

"About ten, though sometimes longer if I'm tired and don't finish up."

"What do you mean by extra work?"

"Sometimes he lets us take work home to do nights, and he pays us half price for that."

"What! You work ten hours for a day's task, and then he pays you half rates for overtime! Why should you get less for night work than for work in the day?"

"Well, you see, he says working in the night, when our eyes are tired, we can't do as good work. We only get the cheaper sort to take home."

Mr. Mitchel could find no words with which to express his feelings. The utter selfishness of such sophistry, the greed of the man who would thus swindle his poor employees, utterly amazed him. And the oddest thing was that the girl made no complaint, accepting her lot as a matter of course, a fact beyond dispute. Yet, observe her position—she worked ten hours per day for her slave driving master, earning enough per week to pay the greedy landlord for her shelter, the mother and sisters, by similar drudgery, finding the food and clothing for the family.

"What is the name of your employer?" he asked presently.

"Herman Polaski."

"Polaski? But that is your name. Is he a relative?"

"Yes, sir; my uncle."

Her uncle! Comment seemed superfluous. Mr. Mitchel paused to think, and the girl rambled on.

"Uncle Herman's been very kind to us. I don't know what we would have done without his help—starved, I guess. You see, father was sick a long, long time, and all the money we had went to the doctor and for funeral expenses. Then we had nothing. So uncle gave us all work in his shop, though he said he didn't need any more hands and it was just taking money out of his own pocket to hire us. We don't earn much, but anyway we've lived on our wages for over a year now."

The girl's gratitude was in strange contrast with the greed of her father's brother, who had not hesitated to benefit by the distress of his relatives. Mr. Mitchel felt a great sympathy for this poor family of women and would gladly have opened his pocketbook in their behalf, but he realized the magnitude of this problem of aid to the poor. He had gone into but two homes. In one he had promised assistance, and in the other he found the same need, inviting the same remedy.

But were he to go on and visit tenement after tenement, home after home, how soon would his resources be at an end and how little would he have accomplished toward lessening the suffering on the great east side! He felt the helplessness of the situation more than he had ever done when theorizing about it, and for the moment he decided that he might better confine himself to his special object.

"I have heard that you saw the baby which was taken from the graveyard next door," he began.

"Yes, sir," she replied and then stared at him, evidently alarmed at his question.

"Tell me about it," he asked persuasively. "Tell me all that you know."

She looked at him sadly and thoughtfully and then, to his astonishment, burst into tears, exclaiming:

"Oh, don't put me in prison! Please don't take me to prison! Mother'd starve if you locked me up!"

"My dear girl," said Mr. Mitchel soothingly, "what are you saying? What have you done? Why should you be put in prison?"

She endeavored to control herself, and finally between her sobs he caught the words:

"Don't — don't — they put — wit-witnesses—in—in jail?"

At last he understood. This girl knew something, but was not herself guilty of any wrong. She had witnessed the crime which had been committed, and she knew enough of our laws to understand that she could be held a prisoner as a witness needed by the state, under a law which thus works great injustice to many.

"There, there!" said he. "Don't weep. You have nothing to fear. I am not an officer, and you shall not be locked up. I promise you that. But I wish you to tell me all that you know. Come, Won't you trust me?"

"Yes, sir—I'll—trust you," she answered timidly, wiping away her tears. Then after a few moments she had composed herself and began her story:

"You see, sir, one night last week I had some extra work to do, and I tried hard to finish it, 'cause mother needed the money for medicine. She's got a bad cough. But I was so tired that I couldn't sew, and about 9 o'clock I had to go to bed. But I couldn't sleep very well. Every now and then I'd hear mother cough, and I'd think of the work I hadn't finished, and I'd try to get up to go at it again, but I was so dead with sleep, too, that I just couldn't. But after a long time I heard the clock strike 12, and I knew that if I was going to get the work done I'd have to get up, sleep or no sleep. So I made a jump and landed on the floor in a heap. I guess I hurt myself a little, 'cause it woke me up complete. Then I thought I was suffocating, the room was so hot and stifling, and I went to the window and stood breathing the fresh air. That's how I came to see him."

"Whom did you see?" asked Mr. Mitchel eagerly.

"A man. At first I couldn't make out what he was doing. He was walking about stealthy like, and he had a bundle in his arms. He came pretty close to the window, 'cause he was walking near the wall, but he had his head down when I first saw him, and then afterward he had his back to me. It was dark, too, being very cloudy. Well, he went a little way out, to the tree you see there, and he stooped down and began to fumble with the bundle. I could see he was unwrapping something, but I couldn't make out what it was, 'cause he laid it behind the tombstone. Then he stood up straight for a minute, and just then the cloud went away, and the moon shone out bright, and I could see his face just as plain as anything."

"Did you know him?"

"No, but I'm good at remembering faces."

"You mean that you would know him again?"

"Anywhere. I'd pick him out of a million. The moon shining on his face made it look like a ghost, and it's haunted me ever since. Why, in the dark of nights, if I shut my eyes, I see that face staring at me. Oh, yes, I'd know him again!"

"You say you saw him place the child behind a tombstone?"

"No; I didn't see the baby then, though I heard a baby cry, but that's common round this neighborhood, and I didn't think anything of it. But I saw him put something behind the stone, and when I saw the baby in the grass the next day I felt sure the man had put it there."

"What did he do after you saw his face? Did he see you in the moonlight?"

"No; I don't think he was exactly looking my way, though his face was turned so's I could see it. He stood just a minute. Then he picked up something from the grass, and he went over behind another tombstone, where I could see him, though, and he dug a hole and put whatever he had in it. Then he stood up and trampled down the grass with his feet. Then he watched his chance, when no one was passing, and climbed over the fence, and that's the last I saw of him."

"And when did you discover that he had left a baby in the grass?"

"I sat up the rest of the morning sewing till time to go to breakfast. We had some bread and milk, I remember, and after eating I went to the window to scrape the crumbs out of the plates, when I heard a baby cry. This time it sounded so near I looked down, and I nearly dropped the plate, I was so surprised and so scared to see that little baby, without any clothes on, crawling about in the grass."

"But why were you alarmed?"

"I knew right off that the man had left the baby, and I'd seen him do it, and I was afraid it would be found out and I would be arrested 'cause I knew about it. And, you see, we just barely make enough to live on now, and what would mother do if she didn't have me to help her?"

"But I heard that you threw food to the baby," said Mr. Mitchel.

"I had to. I fretted all that day thinking about what had happened and wondering if the baby would be found and if the police would come and ask me questions, and that seemed so likely, 'cause our rooms open right on the graveyard. And I knew that if they asked me what I knew I'd just blurt the whole thing out, and then where'd I be? Locked up for a certainty till they found the man and made me identify him. Then I got another idea that made my blood freeze in my veins. Suppose nobody found the baby. It would die! It would starve to death! And wouldn't I be held for that? Wouldn't I have helped the man to kill the baby by not telling what I knew? So, you see, it looked like I'd have to go to prison anyway, but I thought I'd prevent the baby from dying, so I just made an excuse, and I went to our rooms, intending to throw it some food, but I couldn't see it anywhere, and when I thought it had crawled away where I couldn't throw food to it it just made me sick and weak. I was that scared I dropped in a heap on the floor and leaned against the window sill and cried. Then I happened to look up, and my heart gave a big jump, for there was the baby crawling from behind a tombstone. I called to the poor little dear, and she stopped and looked up at me and smiled. She seemed to know that I meant to help her. Then I got some bread and soaked it in milk, and I dropped it down. You ought to have seen the little thing come right for it, and pretty soon she had it in her hands and was sucking away for dear life. Then I went back to my work more light hearted."

It was a baby's slip.

"And you fed the child after that, did you not?"

"Yes, sir. I think she got to know me, 'cause when I'd go to the window to throw her the bread she'd be waiting, and she always looked up and smiled like. Oh, dear! I'd have given my life to go down and bring her up stairs, but I didn't dare, I was that afraid of the police. But at last I told Mrs. Griffin about my feeding the baby, and she told the policeman."

"Two things that you have told me are very important, Miss Polaski. You say, in the first place, that you saw the man's face and that you would know him again?"

"Anywhere. I would know him among a million."

"Very well; I may ask you to point him out to me at some time. The other thing of importance is that you say the man buried something behind one of the tombstones. I wish you to point out as nearly as you can the spot where you saw him digging."

She went to the window and indicated a headstone which stood in the shadow of the tree near by, and, taking the chance of being observed from the street, Mr. Mitchel stepped upon the window sill and dropped to the ground. It was not long before he found where the sod had been overturned and replaced. Scratching away the loose earth, his fingers came upon something which he drew forth and held up before him. It was a baby's slip, in one corner of which he found what he hoped would be a name. Instead it proved to be a tiny flower done in embroidery silk.

Returning to the house by climbing through the window, he showed this to the girl and asked:

"What flower do you call that?"

Without hesitation she replied:

"A lily of the valley."

"A lily of the valley," murmured Mr. Mitchel. "And the valley was the valley of the shadow of death," he mused as he took his departure.

CHAPTER IV.

SLIPPERY SAM.

Mr. Mitchel left the tenement house with mixed feelings. He believed that he had made considerable progress in the investigation and thought that in his place Mr. Barnes would have been proud of himself, yet he felt depressed. Remembering his own wealth and his luxurious home up town, such penury as he had just witnessed made him dissatisfied with himself.

He went directly to an undertaker and gave orders for the burial of Mrs. Griffin's child, and he sent a plentiful supply of groceries to her house. Nevertheless he could not avoid the thought that this was but a trifle compared with what the rich might do for the poor.

He next went to Apollo hall. Here he thought that he might divert his mind, for here it was that young Mora claimed to have passed the night on which his father was killed. As his mind reverted to the Mora case Mr. Mitchel wondered at the sudden interest which he had taken in the other and smiled as he thought of how little Mr. Barnes would relish his neglect of his "crime of the century."

Apollo hall, situated as it is in the very heart of the east side slums, which in the minds of those who have only read of the section are inevitably associated with degradation, dirt and crime, is a surprise to the visitor. The building itself is attractive in its architecture and inviting in its general aspect. On the first floor there is a barroom, from which a wide staircase leads to the hall above. This is spacious and prettily decorated with bunting, which hangs from the polished rafters. The ceiling is high and the floor waxed smooth for dancing. Here take place the weddings, balls, soirees, lectures, indignation meetings, political conclaves and occasional riots that enliven the vicinity.

Mr. Mitchel looked around with interest, and, having read an announcement that a professor of dancing would begin his regular season on a stated date and that the charge, as usual, would be 10 cents per lesson, he at last understood why it is that the children of the street dance as well to the tunes of the piano organs as do the graduates of Marwig at the debutante's ball.

Leaning against the bar, he found a dispenser of drinks, who was easily induced to talk, and after a few general remarks by way of introducing his topic he asked:

"Do you know this Mr. Mora who has been accused of killing his father?"

"Never heard of him till I saw his name in the paper," replied the barkeeper, with a coarse laugh.

"But he claimed that he was in this place on that night," persisted Mr. Mitchel.

"Yes; I know he did. He proved his alibi as neat as wax. I guess he's fly, that fellow."

"But are you not pretty well acquainted with the people who come here?"

"Well, rather! There don't nobody get in without my seeing him. I keep the door."

"And if Mr. Mora had been here would you not have seen him?"

The barkeeper, by way of reply, winked one eye knowingly, grinned and with a flourish slapped upon the bar the drink which he had been mixing for his customer.

Summer Clearing Sale of Odds & Ends In China.

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly—in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

Atfer The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices.

Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen for, we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

Ruskin's Impulsive Generosity.

One day, walking near Radley, his attention was caught by a group of little girls playing in the road, and he went and talked to them. One of them specially attracted his attention. He asked her why she was playing in the dust. Had she no garden at home? Did she love flowers? What was her name? And she replied modestly, with wonder in her eyes. On reaching home he gave orders to his solicitor to look out for and buy a cottage with a garden in Radley and have a deed of gift made out in the little girl's name, which was done accordingly, and she, full of wonder, with her astonished parents, entered at once into possession of it.—From "Ruskin in Oxford."

WITH CRICK IN THE BACK

You are up against a whole lot of trouble unless you have a strong remedy like Nerviline to settle pain and dislodge stiffness from the muscles and joints. Just rub Nerviline on the painful spot—not much rubbing, because Nerviline has more power than ordinary remedies. You won't suffer long after Nerviline is applied, for it relieves almost instantly. Mr. Philip Adams, of Oakland, says, "If I hadn't used Nerviline I guess my back would be stiff yet. A few applications of Nerviline took out all the soreness and stiffness. I can recommend Nerviline for any kind of muscular pain, also for rheumatism. Price 25c.

NOTICE

Notice is hereby given that a meeting of the Municipal Council of the City of Belleville, to be held in the Council Chamber, Belleville, on Monday, August 1st, at the hour of eight o'clock in the evening to consider a by-law, entitled a by-law, to close a portion of the Thurlow and Tyendinaga road, also parts of Starling and McDonald streets where the same intersects the said Thurlow and Tyendinaga road, all of which lands are owned by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, situate in the City of Belleville, in the County of Hastings and Province of Ontario, where the same now passes between Bettes street and McDonald street in the said city, and to divert such highway and for the purposes of making such diversion to construct and open up for public use a new road or highway through lots known as block "B" and block "A", lots Nos. 29, 30, lots Nos. 28, 27, 26, 58, 57, 56, and 55

And further take notice that at such meeting the said Council will hear any person or by counsel all persons whose lands may be prejudicially affected by the passage of the said by-law, and who have prior to the date of the said meeting petitioned to be heard.

Snowbound

...By...
TEMPLE BAILEY

—Copyright, 1904, by T. C. McClure—

It was an awful storm. The snow curled up over the tops of the fences, and there were no roads to be seen, nothing but white fields broken here and there by black clumps of trees.

Dick Harwood bent his head to the wind and spoke softly to his horses. They were floundering sturdily through the snow, eager for the end of the journey and for the comfort of the warm barn and well filled mangers.

"Who-oo-oo-oo-pee!"

Dick lifted his head and looked out over the storm swept night. That was Myra's cry, the one he had taught her when he was in short trousers and she wore long braids.

"Who-oo-oo-oo-pee!" again came the cry, but Myra was miles away in the big city. It came from the little schoolhouse at the crossroads, which was half covered with drifting snow. Dick urged his horses nearer and discerned in the doorway a dark figure, then he caught the sound of a voice.

DICK FELT HIMSELF IN A BLISSFUL DREAM.

"Please, whoever you are, won't you stop?"

"Myra!" he cried and flung the reins down and ran to her.

"Why, Dick Harwood!" She held out both of her hands, and then while he held them in his warm clasp she broke down and explained, with little sobbing gasps:

"I started from the station before the storm—I thought I could get home, you know, and then it started—and at last I took shelter in here, hoping that some one would pass and give me a ride, and you are the first person who has come—and I am nearly frozen—nearly frozen, Dick."

"Wasn't there any wood in the stove?" asked Dick practically.

"Yes, but I hadn't any matches, and here I have been for hours with wood and stove and no fire."

Dick flung the door open and went into the schoolroom. The rows of battered little desks confronted him spectrally as he lighted a match and touched it to the ready laid fuel. The flames leaped up and at once began to give out comfort.

"Now, you get warm while I go and look after the horses," said Dick. "There is a shed back of the house, and I can cover the team with the old robes and give them a feed of corn. I'll be back in a minute."

When he returned he found that she had drawn an old settee before the fire. She sat in one corner of it, with her face pink in the reflected glow. Dick noticed the whiteness of the hands that she held in front of the blaze and the gleam of gold in the hair that rippled under the modish turban.

He brought in several packages and laid them beside her.

"Are you hungry?" he asked.

"Starved! Oh, you blessed boy! You were taking home groceries." And she held up a box of biscuits.

He thrilled at the sound of her old name for him. How often she had called him her "blessed boy" in the days before she had become ambitious for a career!

"It's so nice to see you, Myra," he said as he rummaged in the little cupboard over the teacher's desk.

"Nice! That isn't the word for the way I feel," said Myra from the settle. "I was just dying to see you—all." She added the last word quickly as Dick whirled around and looked at her, with his soul in his eyes. She did not meet his look, however, and he turned away, with a little sigh. "Do you like it in town?" he asked.

"Um—mm!" she murmured.

"Does that mean 'yes' or 'no?'". He had brought out a little kettle and a teapot and was filling the kettle with water from a covered pail that stood behind the stove.

"Both," she laughed. "I like it and I don't like it."

"What don't you like?" he asked.

"Oh, it's all so cold. Every one thinks of himself. Why, Dick, I might live and die with twenty people in the same house and not one of them would know it until the undertaker came. That is the trouble—no one cares, no one cares," she declared passionately.

He leaned forward eagerly, then checked himself. "But you have your music."

"Oh, music!" she said disparagingly, and at her tones his heart leaped.

The water had boiled in the little kettle.

"I will let you make the tea," he said and opened the package of the fragrant herb. While she heated the teapot and put the tea to steep he drew a little table in front of the settle and put on it crackers and cheese and sardines. Then, with a laugh and a flourish, he set in the center a great, creamy, custard pie.

"Aunt Priscilla sent it to mother," he said, "but I guess we need it the most."

Myra danced around the table and clapped her hands like the little girl Dick remembered so well. Finally she stopped in front of him. "Dick," she said, "did you ever eat a boarding house pie?"

He shook his head.

"Well," she said, "you are in no condition to appreciate Aunt Priscilla's pie. I am the only one who will do its deliciousness justice."

It was not a bad supper, that impromptu one served by candlelight in the old schoolhouse, and Dick felt himself in a blissful dream as he looked across the table at the fair face.

After the meal Myra fell into a retrospective mood.

"Do you remember the winter afternoons right here in this old room when we children used to pop corn and roast apples and Miss Betsey would read to us—dear Miss Betsey?"

"I remember you with the firelight on your face and with your cheeks red as they are now," said Dick ardently.

"And how we used to slide down the long hill outside and how I lost my mittens once in the snow and you found them for me?"

"I remember the kiss that you gave me for a reward," said Dick.

Myra flushed. "Listen how the wind blows," she said irrelevantly.

Dick got up and went to the door.

"It's an awful night," he said as he came back with his coat collar powdered white, "but when the horses are rested and you are thoroughly warm I think I can get you home. It isn't far."

He knelt in front of the stove and poked in more wood. Myra sat with her chin in her hand as she leaned her elbow on her knee and gazed dreamily into the fire.

"It's good to be at home," she said.

Something in her tone gave him courage.

"I wish home might always be where our two hearts were, Myra," he said, with unconscious poetry.

"I think that is the only home in which I shall ever be happy, Dick," she said simply.

"Do you mean it, Myra? My ways are such plain ways, dear!"

She sighed happily as he drew her to him.

"Oh, you blessed boy!" she said. "It was just because I loved the plain ways that I came back and because I missed my friends and the dear old hills and you, Dick."

Admission by Ticket Only.

The fire engines had just gone, and the crowd, rather disgusted to see nothing more than a little smoke and a broken basement window, had dispersed. But, says the Chicago News, a number of small boys still hung about the house, apparently expecting a fresh outburst of the fire.

They were as quiet as ten or twelve boys gathered together under such exciting circumstances usually are. They scuttled up and down the steps, peering into the window and shouting the result of their observations. They ran up the front steps and peered inquiringly into the vestibule.

Suddenly the front door opened, and a little woman came out. It was plain that she had not entirely recovered from the shock of the engines and the smashing glass, but she made a heroic effort to speak calmly.

"Now, boys," she said, "go right away, if you please! There is nothing here to interest you! This is just a little private fire!"

What She Would Have Lost.

A class of normal school girls were asked to pretend for one day that they did not know how to read, in order to bring home to them the importance of reading in education. They were asked to make a list of the things that they would have been prevented from doing during that day if they had not the ability to read. The lists were read in class the next afternoon. Some very properly said that they could not have learned their lessons for the next day, could not have read the papers to find out the hour for the musicale the night before, could not have read the catalogue to find out what the pictures were at the art exhibition, etc. But the eternal feminine finally cropped out in one list which concluded with, "I could not have read the sign in M. & G.'s store saying that they were holding a bargain sale in shirt waists and would have missed buying a dandy at a very low price."—New York Times.

Gorgeous Women of Abyssinia.

For downright gorgeousness there is little that can surpass a family party of Abyssinian women bound from one village to another in festival time, notably about Easter, for the Abyssinians are Christians. A brilliant, bangle adorned headdress is bound over the brow and drawn back to fall down the shoulders. The upper part of the body is clad in a blouse of red and white literally covered with gold and silver ornaments that are handed down from generation to generation. A short skirt in the same style comes below the knees, and the legs are incased in brilliant colored strips wound tightly about like putters, often beaded and spangled. The feet, usually bare, are variously adorned with toe rings, ankle bracelets and other ornaments.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

A NEW FIRM IN THE CITY.

MESSRS. REED AND SILLS MAKE THEIR BOW AND SOLICIT YOUR PATRONAGE.

It will be seen, by reference to the advt. in another column, that the furniture and upholstering business, so long and successfully run by the late John G. Frost, has been taken over by Messrs. Reed and Sills. Mr. Geo. L. Reed comes of an old Belleville family, he being a son of Leander Reed, who for years carried on the grocery business on Mill St., his brother, W. H. Reed, being the present manager of Stroud's. Mr. Reed is a practical upholsterer, and for the past ten years has been connected with several large firms in the United States. Mr. Reed and Mr. Chas, Archibald, who has been in the employ of Mr. Frost for the past 12 years, will look after the undertaking for the firm.

Mr. Bidwell Sills is also an old Belleville boy, and comes of U. E. Loyalist stock. His father, John Wesley Sills, who died in 1885, was for many years a respected farmer of Thurlow. His mother, who was a Massey and a graduate of Albert College, this city, still survives and now resides in Kingston, where for a number of years Mr. Sills was manager of the furniture dept. of the F. F. Harrison Co. Mr. Sills will have charge of the furniture department of the new firm.

Being both practical upholsterers, Messrs. Reed and Sills propose manufacturing all their own upholstered Parlor Suites, Couches, Rockers, Morris Chairs, Mattresses, etc., thus being able to guarantee the work and produce the articles at first cost.

They have purchased the entire undertaking equipment of the late Mr. Frost, including the two hearses, and are contemplating improvements in all departments, thus being enabled to guarantee their patrons a most acceptable service.

The fall stock of fine furniture is now arriving daily, and a visit from time to time of the old patrons, and everyone interested in all that is new and up-to-date in fine furniture and upholstering, is invited.

The new firm will occupy the old premises.

DIED IN VANCOUVER.

MISS HATTIE McBOWELL PASSED AWAY THIS MORNING AS THE RESULT OF AN OPERATION FOR APPENDICITIS.

Sir Mackenzie Bowell this morning received a telegram announcing the death, at Vancouver, B. C., of his granddaughter, Miss Harriet Minguay Bowell, eldest daughter of Mr. John M. Bowell, Collector of Customs at Vancouver. The young lady's death followed an operation for appendicitis, performed last week. The late Miss Bowell, who had a very bright and vivacious disposition, was 21 years of age, and was born in Ottawa. She had enjoyed remarkably good health previous to the development of the dread disease, and was to have been married this fall.

CHARGE AGAINST MAGISTRATE

E. GUSS PORTER MAKES STATUTORY DECLARATION AND INQUIRY MAY FOLLOW.

Brockville, July 22.—E. Guss Porter, M.P. for West Hastings, was solicitor for a client in a case before Police Magistrate Deacon, of this town some few months ago and failed in his case. He expressed the opinion that the Magistrate did not treat him fairly. He has now made a statutory declaration stating that the Magistrate at first refused to accept the information, and when his consent was finally obtained he warned Mr. Porter that judgment would be given against his client anyway. Mr. Porter says the case was prejudiced and practically decided before the evidence was heard. He believed the Police Magistrate is unfitted for the duties of his office. It will probably lead to an investigation.

ANOTHER AUTO ACCIDENT

AN INDIAN GOT HIS FACE AND HEAD BADLY CUT ON SATURDAY EVENING.

There was another automobile accident on Saturday evening about 6 o'clock, and one Indian in this district can thank his lucky stars that he is not now pushing clouds in the happy hunting grounds. It appears that at the time mentioned above a big green touring auto went down Front street at a lively speed, turning up Dundas. Just as the motor car turned the corner, a team of horses, pulling a wagon in which were three Indians, were only a few yards from it, going in the opposite direction. The team were badly frightened and bolted. One of the Indians was thrown out, his face and head being badly cut. Then the team ran away up Front street, but were caught before doing further damage.

CHURCH CHIMES OF YESTERDAY.

NOTES OF SERVICES IN BELLEVILLE'S DIFFERENT PLACES OF WORSHIP.

Bridge Street.

In Bridge Street Church last night the sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. Ackroyd, of the New York Conference, who is at present on a visit to relatives in this city. The musical portion of the service was very pleasing, consisting of an anthem, the solo being taken by Miss Gertrude Price; a quartette by the Misses Price and Messrs. Cameron and Jessop, entitled "God is Love," and a solo, tastefully and charmingly sung by Miss ingly sung by Miss Alice Phillips, of Washington, D.C., whose rendition of "My Redeemer and My Lord," stamped her as a refined and gifted vocalist.

Rev. Mr. Ackroyd's text was 2 Phil., 9-10:

> "Wherefore God hath also highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name;
>
> "That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth."

The sermon was an eloquent and scholarly effort, yet withal one calculated to appeal to every class of listener. Names, the preacher said, were pegs on which the history of the world was hung. The prophecy of St. Paul in regard to the name of Jesus must at the time it was made have been considered a daring one, for then the followers of Christ were so persecuted that they were afraid to mention in public the name of the Redeemer. The name of Jesus was spoken with fear and trembling, yet slowly but surely the leaven of Christianity had spread through the world and now 4-7ths of the globe is under Christian rule, and the other 3-7ths dare not move hand or foot without the consent of the Christian nations. Since the world began there had been no character like that of Jesus, so wise, so humble, so pure. Not only his friends, but his enemies had been forced to declare, we find no fault in him. "What is the name of Jesus to you to-night, my friends?" concluded the preacher. "Does it stand for simply a historical fact? Does it stand for an ideal? or does it signify one who is a Saviour and friend?" He earnestly prayed that the time would soon come when the whole world would be under the gentle rule of Jesus Christ.

Holloway St. Church.

At the morning service Rev. W. Hyde, of Ohio, occupied the pulpit, and preached an appreciative sermon. In the evening the pastor, Rev. R. H. Leitch, preached, his subject being 'Need and Supply." His text was from Philippians, 4th chapter and 19th verse:

> "But my God shall supply all your needs, according to His riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

During the service a quartette composed of the Misses McMurray, G. Ashley, and H. Wrightmyer sang "Meet Me There."

Christ Church.

Rev. W. L. Armitage, Vicar of St. Mary's Church, Picton, officiated at both services yesterday, much to the edification of the congregation. In the evening the Rev. gentleman's text was from Philippians, 1st chapter, 9th, 10th and 11th verses.

Whilst the offertory was being taken Mrs. A. G. Parker sang a solo, entitled "The Prayer."

Emmanuel R. E. Church.

The rector, Rev. Mr. Gilliland, officiated at both services yesterday His morning sermon was an earnest appeal to all to walk in the ways of the Lord, for every Christian was, in his own sphere, an example to others, even as the Saviour himself had been.

Baptist Church.

A large congregation was present in the Baptist Church last evening. The pastor of the church, Rev. O. C. Elliott, conducted the services and preached from 1 Cor. 5-7, his theme being "Christ our Passover Lamb." He recited the historic circumstance of the deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage, by the blood of a lamb slain, which when applied in faith to the lintels of the doors, saved the first born of the family from the death-angel who smote the first born of the Egyptians. The Apostle in the text had drawn an analogy between the sacrificial lamb on that occasion, and the atonement of Jesus, and the speaker analyzed the similarity then and now. The sin of Pharaoh in defying and resisting God prevailed now, and to them was an impending judgment. Jesus, the spotless, blameless one had been slain, and if we would escape the destroyer, enjoy the freedom from sin's bondage, and enter into the new life, we must apply the blood, appropriate the merits and assimilate the life-giving powers of Jesus, our Passover Lamb.

At the close of the sermon Mrs. Leo Riggs, soprano soloist of the First Baptist Church, Indianapolis, Ind., sang a beautiful number, entitled "The Children's Friend," in excellent voice. Her full clear voice, clear enunciation and sympathetic interpretation of the piece made a deep impression on those present. Mr. Leo Riggs presided at the organ at both services, and played voluntaries during the offerings.

Other Church Notes.

Rev. B. B. Williams, of Guelph, preached at both services yesterday at John Street Presbyterian Church. At the morning service Mr. Jessop sang a solo, entitled "Sands of Time."

At St. Andrew's Church yesterday Rev. W. Young, of Pakenham, officiated at both services. In the morning his subject was "Zacchaeus the Publican," and the text from St. Luke, 19th chapter and a portion of the 2nd and 10th verse.

FORMER RESIDENT KILLED.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT WHICH HAPPENED TO HUGH McCORMICK AT HAMILTON ON FRIDAY LAST.

Mrs. Wm. McCormick, who resides on Pine street on Saturday received the sad news that her son, Mr. Hugh McCormick, had died at the city hospital, Hamilton, as the result of an accident. The unfortunate man was working upon a G. T. R. bridge between Hamilton and Dundas, assisting in moving a large stone with a hook, when the hook slipped and he fell backwards for a considerable distance. His injuries consisted of a fractured spine and head terribly cut. The accident occurred on Friday, and he died on Saturday morning. Deceased was about 45 years of age. He lived in this city for some time, but of late years had resided in Port Hope. A wife and three children survive. The remains were brought here at noon to-day for interment.

RAN AWAY WITH HIS EMPLOYER'S MONEY.

THOMAS SLATER, A S. A. VETERAN, IS IN AN AWKWARD FIX.

On Saturday evening a telegram was received here from Mallorytown, stating that a man named Thomas Slater was on the train coming west, and requesting that he be arrested. An officer went to the station and when the train arrived here at 8.30 Slater was found on board in an intoxicated condition. It appears that he was working for a yeoman named Mr. Peter Larue, who resides in the Township of Escott, near Mallorytown. On Saturday morning Slater took his employer's milk to the Union factory near by and was given an envelope for Mr. Larue, which contained $81.23. Slater returned to Mr. Larue's place, but neglected to give up the money. Later in the day Slater left and went to Brockville and there took the train for the west. When arrested here he had but $43.23 upon his person, and he is unable to tell where the remainder went. This morning he was brought up before Magistrate Flint and pleaded guilty to the charge of theft. When asked where the remainder of the money was he stated that he could remember nothing until he woke up on Sunday morning and found himself locked up. In addition to the $81, Slater had $10 of his own money, which was given him by Mr. Larue on Friday evening. The culprit is an unmarried man, 35 years of age, and his home is in the western part of the province. He was in active service during the recent trouble in South Africa. Mr. Larue states that Slater was an excellent farm hand, and appeared to be thoroughly trustworthy.

Mr. Larue was not disposed to prosecute, and in fact offered to take Slater home with him. The Magistrate imposed a suspended sentence of one year in the Central Prison. The money taken from Slater was returned to Mr. Larue and the former agreed to return with his employer and work for him until the remainder of the money was made up in wages.

MOBBED THE GOELETS.

FURIOUS PEASANTS ATTACK RICH MAN AND BRIDE.

Vienna, July 21.—Robert Goelet and his bride, touring through Austria on a high-powered automobile, had a narrow escape from a mob of infuriated peasants on Thursday last, near Polling, Upper Austria. Only the firm stand of the gendarmes, who held back the crowd with cocked revolvers, saved the party from serious disaster.

They were en route from Paris to Vienna, when the horses of a harvest cart, driven by a 12-year-old boy, shied and overturned the load of corn upon the lad, who extricated himself without much harm. The country people, armed with pitchforks and clubs, surrounded the Americans, shouting and gesticulating.

Mr. Goelet sought to placate them by offering the boy's father a thousand franc note. The man spurned the money, and this action further inflamed the peasants. One of their number was despatched to inform the gendarmes that the boy had been killed and the rest pressed forward to attack the Americans.

Mr. Goelet, fearing for the lives of his party, drew a revolver and ordered the chauffeur to draw likewise. Then with level pistols they backed to the automobile and jumped aboard and turned back towards Mauerkirchen at top speed. There they told their story to the authorities, an engineer named Wagner acting as interpreter, and Mr. Goelet was fined a small sum.

British Steamer Sunk By Russian Fleet.

Peculiar Action of the Vladivostock Squadron—What Will the Outcome be?

Grave Situation at Dardanelles ··British Warship Patrolling Off Cape Helar.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Yokohama, July 25.—The Vladivostok squadron yesterday sunk the British steamer Knight Commander, from New York, off the Province of Izu, after transferring the crew of the Knight Commander to the steamer Chinan, which arrived here this morning.

The Vladivostok squadron also captured a German vessel, believed to be the Araba, with three thousand tons of flour, and an unknown British steamer.

The two vessels were sent to Vladivostok in charge of prize crews.

The American Trading Company are the agents here for the Knight Commander. The Knight Commander's cargo was a general one. Her European passengers were detained by the Russians and her crew of 21 was transferred to the Chinan, which also reported that the Russians sank two Japanese schooners.

Constantinople, July 25.—A British warship is patrolling off Cape Helar, 15 miles south of the Dardanelles. She is using her searchlight, with the supposed view of intercepting any British ships which may have been captured by the Russian volunteer fleet steamers if they attempt to pass the Dardanelles.

SPORTING NOTES.

A correspondent who signs himself "A Lover of the Game," writes pointing out that it is nearly time to think of next winter's hockey team. Goodness! And nearly 90 this afternoon. However, our correspondent points out that in about four months the game will be in full swing, and that, in Belleville, we could get together a team which ought to land an intermediate championship. Our correspondent then proceeds to urge the formation of an Eastern Ontario Hockey Association, pointing out that Belleville has been robbed twice already, and should take no more chances. The E. O. H. A., he thinks, starting at Port Hope and terminating at Smith's Falls, would furnish good sport and a fair show to everybody.

It does certainly appear that, after Belleville's "fierce" experience of the past two years, she should be chary of again joining the O.H.A. What do our sporting men think of the suggestion made by "A Lover of the Game?"

Lacrosse results on Saturday: Capitals 7, Tecumsehs 3; Brantford, 9, Chippewas 1.

Twenty-seven thousand people saw New York and Chicago baseball teams break the Sabbath yesterday.

The Capitals of Ottawa are likely to be expelled for playing lacrosse with the Tecumsehs of Toronto. It looks as though the "amateur" farce was on its last legs in lacrosse.

U. S. college athletes beat representatives of Oxford and Cambridge by 6 to 3 on Saturday. A Harvard man won the hundred yards in 9 4-5.

Old Bob Fitzsimmons and Philadelphia Jack O'Brien went six rounds to a draw on Saturday.

RUSSIA SENDS ORDERS

Volunteer Fleet Must Refrain From Further Interference.

Smolensk, However, Fired Three Blank Shots, Followed By Two Loaded Shots, Across the British Steamer Ardova, and Then Boarded Her and Transferred Her Crew—Another Vessel Sunk By the Vladivostock Fleet.

St. Petersburg, July 25.—Grand Duke Alexis presided at Saturday's Council, which Count Lamsdorff, the Foreign Secretary, and Vice-Admiral Avellan, chief of the Admiralty Department, and other high naval officers attended. The result of the conference removes all doubts concerning the present attitude of Russia, with regard to the volunteer fleet. The validity of the view expressed in the British note regarding the irregularity of the position of the vessels was so far admitted that the Council agreed to waive the right of search.

After a long discussion, in which Count Lamsdorff took a leading part, it was decided that the present status of the volunteer fleet was not sufficiently well defined, according to international law, to render further searches and seizures advisable, and that therefore Russia, in the interests of friendly relations with the powers, should withdraw the authority given the volunteer fleet in this respect.

Russia Sends Orders.

Orders have been sent to the volunteer fleet steamers St. Petersburg and Smolensk to refrain from interference with foreign shipping. It is expected these steamers will eventually join the Baltic fleet, and be replaced by ordinary warships.

The Malacca will be received by the Russian and British Consuls at Algiers, and will be formally liberated on a declaration by the latter that the ammunition on board the vessel belongs to the British Government, and is destined for Hong Kong.

Boarded Another.

Port Said, July 25.—Advices received here say that the Russian volunteer fleet steamer Smolensk fired three blank shots across the bows of the British steamer Ardova, the cargo of which vessel consists of coal and explosives, and the vessel not stopping, the Smolensk sent two loaded shots at her, one of them passing over amidships and the other over her stern. The Ardova was then seized and her crew transferred to the Smolensk. The vessel will be brought to Suez.

ANOTHER VESSEL IS SUNK.

The Vladivostock Fleet Active on the Japanese Coast.

Tokio, July 25.—The Russian Vladivostock squadron has sunk the merchantman which it captured off the coast of Izeu Province yesterday. The name of this ship and her nationality is not known, and nothing had been learned of the fate of her crew. Witnesses ashore saw the merchantman following the fleet. Then they saw her fired upon, after which she disappeared. The Russian warships were last reported at 11 o'clock yesterday morning to the southwest of Caperio, Izeu Province, steering to the west.

Ships to Canada in Peril.

London, July 25.—The Tokio correspondent of The Times, in a despatch dated July 24, says he believes that the object of the Vladivostock squadron is to interrupt trade between the United States and Japan, and that steamers on the way from Canada and San Francisco are in serious danger. He says that another aim of the squadron is apparently to seal Tokio Bay.

ACTIVE WAR OPERATIONS.

Kuropatkin Is Reported Anxious to Abandon Liaoyang Without Fighting.

London, July 25.—Specials to the London morning papers confirm the news of active operations at the seat of war.

The Daily Telegraph's Che Foo correspondent, under date of July 23, says:

"A junk from Dalny reports that last night a Japanese fleet of 20 warships and 20 torpedo boats bombarded Hwangshin for three hours and the forts replied."

The same correspondent learns that the Japanese first army is being largely reinforced by veterans from the reserves.

The correspondent of The Standard with the Japanese army, under date of July 25, says:

"It is difficult to understand the intentions of the Russians. Kuropatkin is evidently bent on retreat northward, yet he lingers in the south, attracted apparently by Port Arthur."

The correspondent of The Daily Chronicle, in a despatch dated at Motien Pass, July 25, regards Gen. Kuropatkin as outmanoeuvred and anxious to abandon Liaoyang without fighting, but also reluctant to retire while Port Arthur reamins uncaptured.

Russians Unable to Oppose Jap Advance.

London, July 25.—The Daily Chronicle's Yinkow correspondent reports that there was heavy fighting Saturday and Sunday in the neighborhood of Tatcheskia with Gen. Stakelberg's force, consisting of twenty battalions of infantry, a brigade of artillery and a division of Cossacks, and that the Russians appeared to be drawing the cordon tighter around the Japanese positions.

The correspondent of The Times with Gen. Kuroki's army says: "Chinese report that Gen. Kuropatkin, with 40,000 troops, is at Liaoyang, while his second in command with many men is still at Haicheng. I still adhere to the opinion that the Russians are not able to seriously oppose the Japanese advance."

Battle Fought Saturday.

Newchwang, July 25.—A battle was fought Saturday near Tatchekiao, attended, it is believed with heavy losses. The progress of the battle was watched by many people in Newchwang from the roofs of the houses. The day was clear and the smoke of the guns could be plainly seen.

News at Tientsin.

Tientsin, July 25.—News has reached here that a battle is raging outside of Newchwang. The fighting can be seen from the housetops. In the engagement of Saturday, the Russian loss is reported to have been 800. The Japanese are slowly nearing Newchwang. Great excitement prevailed in that city during Friday's and Saturday's fight.

Another report from Newchwang states that Saturday's battle was at Tathsuithang, six miles distant, and that the Japanese were successful. Many Chinese refugees arriving at Newchwang have reported that nine Japanese gunboats from Port Arthur have arrived at Tahtingshan.

Japs Lost 280.

Chicago, July 25.—A special cablegram to The Daily News from Nagasaki, Japan, says: Despatches from Omura state that the strong Russian position at Shimou, ten miles east of Liaoyang, was captured by the Japanese troops July 19. The Mikado's men lost 280 in the attack.

GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

Cabinet Will Ask For An Appropriation to Begin the Work.

Ottawa, July 25.—The Cabinet worked overtime on Saturday fixing up the supplementary estimates. These were practically ready for submission to the House last week, but at the last moment, almost, it was decided to ask an appropriation for the commencement of work on the Georgian Bay Canal. The Prime Minister, however, judged it to be well that the Government should have an intimation from the transportation commission as to the advisability of this undertaking, and it was to secure this that the estimates were delayed beyond Friday last. It is understood that this desideratum was furnished on Saturday, and Council sat until late Saturday night re-arranging the estimates so as to include the new canal grant. The policy will probably be announced of making a commencement at the Georgian Bay outlet and deepening the French River and eastern end of Lake Nipissing so as to give a deep water terminus at North Bay. The work could be finished in about three years, and would cost a couple of millions. Preliminary surveys for this work are on file in the Public Works Department.

Coat Drew Him Down.

Deseronto, July 25.—A sad drowning accident occurred about a mile below Adolphustown Saturday evening about 8 o'clock in which R. H. Gifford, druggist, aged 33 years, of Watertown, N.Y., was the victim. The Crescent Yacht Club of Watertown, N.Y., of which deceased was a member, were enjoying a week's cruise on the Bay of Quinte. The anchor of the yacht Heola dragged. Gifford and another man left in a small boat to get a stone off shore. They placed the stone in the bottom of the boat, and their canoe capsized. Both had oil skin coats on, which dragged them down. Gifford's companion clung to the capsized boat, but Gifford started to swim to shore. He sank almost immediately before help could reach him. They were about 15 yards from the shore and in about eight feet of water.

Sun Scorches Englishmen.

London, July 25.—Only a slight break has been experienced in the prolonged drought. The cry of the agriculturist now is for rain. Many moors have been seriously damaged by fires. At the Tunbridge Wells cattle show valuable cows had to be treated for sunstroke, one prize animal expiring from the cause. Between Aldershot and North Camp, the railway rails expanded to such an extent that the line buckled, a thing said to be unprecedented in this country.

Jockey Swalw[illegible]led.

New York, July 2[illegible] Ernest Swalwell, a Canadian steeplechase jockey, who came from Toronto a week ago to ride Robert Davies' steeplechaser Opuntia, was thrown in the Brighton steeplechase Saturday, and died from his injuries while being carried in an ambulance to the Emergency Hospital, Coney Island. Swalwell is the second steeplechase rider who has met death in a race in the course of the present meeting at the seaside track.

Merry Del Val Resigns.

Rome, July 25.—The Tribuna says it is reported that Cardinal Merry dell Val, the Papal Secretary of State, has tendered his resignation, owing to the hostility of the cardinals, which indicates that they accuse him of rendering impossible an accord with France, and that the Pope has refused to accept the resignation.

Hit Head on Bolt.

Grimsby, July 25.—Friday afternoon Albert Marsh's little boy, Earl, was playing in an upright swing. The little fellow fell out backwards, striking the back of his head upon a quarter-inch bolt point, penetrating through the skull and fracturing it. It was found necessary to perform an operation to save the little fellow's life.

To Take His Seat.

Ottawa, July 25.—John Charlton arrived in the city on Saturday and will take his seat in the House Monday afternoon for the first time this session. Mr. Charlton shows traces of his severe illness, but is in a fair way to recovery.

THE EVILS OF POLITICS

PARTY PRESIDENTIAL CONVENTIONS SUGGEST PREACHER'S TEXT.

PEOPLE'S CHOICE OF RULER

When the Bad Elements Got Control in Politics the Result Was a Curse to the Nation—Who Are Trying to Drive the Almighty From the Control of Public Life—National Value of Righteousness.

Los Angeles, Cal., July 24.—With the national conventions as a theme and an oriental fable as a text the preacher makes some timely reflections on certain evils that afflict our politics and threaten the well being of Government and people. The text is Judges ix, 14, "Then said all the trees unto the bramble, Come, thou, and reign over us."

This is the year of great national conventions. The Republican party sent its representatives last June to Chicago to nominate their candidate for the presidency of the United States. The Democratic party this month met in St. Louis to nominate their candidate for the same office. The Prohibition party, the Populist party, the Labor party, all have had their conventions and nominated their leaders. From among the different statesmen nominated for the office of the Presidency of the United States by the different political parties the next chief executive of our nation is to be chosen. We, as intelligent men and women, are conversant with the struggles which the different political parties made in late convention halls. It is not inappropriate, therefore, for us to take as our sermonic theme to-day the vision which Jotham had when all the trees of the forest came together in convention in the valley of Shechem, with the blue dome of the heavens for a roof, and selected the useless, destroying bramble as their King.

This famous parable or fable of Jotham was truly realistic in more ways than one. For a convention of trees it had a perfect topographic setting. On the southern side of this famous valley is mighty Mount Gerizim. On the northern side hoary headed Mount Ebal lifts its seared and wrinkled face. These two mountains as sounding boards tossed the echoing voices of the cheering delegates backward and forward, even as the shuttlecock might be thrown through the air by the powerful blows of two battledoors. The soil of that valley was black and rich. There the gurgling waters of many fountains sounded a musical accompaniment to the murmurings of many voices trying to win votes for their favorite sons. Isaiah, in prophecy, saw "all the trees of the fields clap their hands." Jotham, in vision, saw the trees, as convention delegates, with moving hands, moving feet, moving lips and sparkling eyes. Their rustle was to him articulate speech. Their branches were outstretched arms. Their names were symbols to him of honor and truth or of dishonor and disgrace.

Hardly had this great convention of trees assembled in the valley of Shechem to select a king than it became self evident that the great majority of the delegates were ready to be stampeded for one tree. "Come," the majority cried, "come, let us make the olive tree our king!" To Jotham the olive was the symbol of strength and wealth and power as well as of healing. But the olive tree would not become king. It declined the scepter of kingship over the trees. Then this great convention wanted to elect the fig tree king. The delegates next offered the nomination for rulership to the vine, whose rich blood had made the vineyards of Shechem famous. But the fig tree and the vine both refused the scepter of the forest.

But in this Jotham parable, after the olive and the fig and vine had all refused the scepter, the worst elements got control of the convention hall. Then these bad elements said to each other: "Let us nominate a king after our own spirit. Let us make the curse of the field our king. Hail, bramble! King Bramble! Hail, bramble, our future ruler!"

Jotham's purpose in this parable was to show a danger which menaced his own country and has menaced our country all through its history. There have been in the past, as there are to-day, men who conspire to get control of the political parties in order that they may nominate men utterly unfit for the high office of the Presidency of the United States. Thank God, they have not succeeded yet, for the men who have been nominated by the various parties are men of high character and sterling worth. But we need to be on our guard against the conspirators, who will never cease their efforts to win that great prize. Let us identify them, that we may sedulously guard against their insidious attacks.

First among the Satanic conspirators are the infidels. They say: "We cannot fight God in the open. We cannot as yet blot off the American silver dollar the sentence, 'In God we trust.' But we can plead for so called religious liberty. We can say that the Bible should be driven out of the public schools. We can place upon the statute books the statement, 'The United States Government is entirely a human Government. No divine hand is to-day guiding the helm of state. Therefore no name of God and no prayer to any God shall ever be heard in any of its legislative buildings or public halls. We, the people of this fair land, can decree that hereafter we can attend to our business. We will make no public recognition of an overruling Divine Providence.'"

My friends, as intelligent Americans, have you not recognized the fact that the infidels, the agnostics, the atheists, the deists and all those who would deny public recognition of God are trying to drive out the Almighty from the control of our public life? What is the meaning of the movement that has accomplished this one fact? There is hardly a state college in all this land where the Bible is now studied as a text book. In all those different schools the faculty makes provision for the teaching of English belles lettres. They are willing to teach Grecian and Roman and Scythian and Alexandrian and Asiatic mythologies. They are willing to teach Buddhism, Confucianism, Brahmanism and all other isms, but they are not willing to teach who Jesus Christ was and is and for what the gospel of Jesus Christ stands.

Now, for my part, while I hold that denominationalism ought never to be taught in a state institution, I contend that no young man is properly educated who has not been made familiar with the Bible and its religious and moral principles. I claim that as educated men and women it is just as important to know who were Moses and Joshua and David as who were Shakespeare and Burns and Walter Scott and Goethe and Victor Hugo. I claim that it is more important educationally to know who Jesus Christ is than who Mohammed was and what was the cause of the Trojan war. If the atheistic elements of this country are not trying to get possession of this Government, why did certain infidel newspapers a few year ago denounce the presidential act of taking the oath of office upon the leaves of an open Bible? They claimed that, "as the Government had no established church, therefore the President elect had no right to render allegiance to any one particular God." Men who write sophistries of this kind are enemies whom we cannot afford to deride. I tell you that today the church as well as the people at large should recognize the evil influences which are working underneath us and all about us to render this a godless nation and to exclude all recognition of God from the acts and policy of the United States Government. Already this evil monster calling itself "Free Thought" has a grip upon our ballot box.

I would especially plead with the American people to fight the evil "bramble of free thought," because resistance of God is the spirit of anarchy, which, when developed, becomes social and political anarchy and is subversive of every form of Civil Government. When under the teaching of that great infidel Voltaire the churches of Paris were closed and a harlot dressed in gorgeous robes and seated about the French capital and worshiped, then the "reign of terror" was at hand. Where were the bullets of the slayer of Garfield and of the slayer of William McKinley molded? Amid the hot, hissing flames of a fire started in the attempt to burn up the throne of God! You never saw in your life an anarchist who was not at heart an infidel.

I was never more impressed with this thought than when some years ago from a noted atheistic as well as anarchistic paper I cut out the full developed poisonous results of those two accursed doctrines. Like Siamese twins, these two words, atheism and anarchy, in their ultimate meaning should never be separated. This was the editorial I found in that famous sheet: "This is our doctrine: We believe in no divine Government. We believe in no human Government. Might only is right. The only remedy for wrongs is butchery. The tree of liberty bears fruit only when manured with the bones of fat usuers, insolent despots, perfidious politicians and blacklegs generally. If squatters oppress you, plant rackarock for their buggies; also fire low and lay them out. If Shylocks of the bloody city fleece you, make their homes desolate. Study the science of death. Use bullets, steel, melinite, kerosene, phosphorus, fire sticks, torpedoes, lithofracteur, poison, blasting powder, bombshells—any weapon you can get hold of. Also you must steel like Spartans, think like heroes and lie like hell." Such is the full grown, poisonous plant which the soil and seed of atheism will ultimately produce if left alone. Ah, my fellow countrymen in the convention hall of the American people, fight this foe miscalled "free thought" as you would fight death. Drive God away from your land, and you hand over this Government to be the playing of anarchists, the spot of nihilists. Then you send forth the death knell to all order and to the protection of life and property.

But standing to-day in the great convention hall of Jotham's vision we see the bramble being advocated as king by another powerful faction. It is composed of the worshipers of wealth. When the members of this faction rise to make their nominating speeches we see that the speakers' teeth are all of gold, and their arms are of gold, and their hair is of gold, and their legs are of gold. Their fingers are of gold, though they have gold rings upon those fingers. Their necks also are of gold, though the collars around those necks are of pure gold. Their feet are of gold, though the shoes which cover those feet are not made of leather, but of gold. By the old Roman law a man could not vote unless he was a property owner and his property was valued, I believe, at something like $1,200 in our money. To-day there is a tendency not so much to restrict the vote in Presidential elections to the property owner as to those who either own gold or can be influenced by the prospect of getting gold.

Do you profess to believe that gold—yellow gold—as a would be bramble king, is not trying to get possession of this Government? Do you for one moment profess to believe that the United States would be as quick to declare war against England or Russia or Germany or France as it was against a poverty-stricken nation like Spain? Touch the nation's pocketbook and in many parts of this land you will make the word "patriotism" written in letters of gold, turn as black as the heart of selfishness and deceit. One of the great dangers threatening the welfare of our land is the power of the great money combinations. It is a rapidly developing power, and it is ever aimed to seat in the Presidential chair of this free nation its bramble king, gold, as the supreme ruler of this great people. When the great railroad trusts and the oil trusts and the tin can trusts and the beef trusts and the sugar trusts and the steel trusts can dictate who is to be President of the United States let us beware! Take thy cloven foot, O yellow and would be King Bramble, from off the front doorstep of the White House. Thou didst destroy the Roman and the Grecian Governments when their national power passed into the hands of the few capitalists. Thy foul breath is now hot upon our cheeks, but by God's help thou shalt not be allowed to destroy us.

But again we find the destroying Bramble canvassing for supremacy in American politics in another way. He now appeals to the diseased and inflamed appetite of man for strong drink. But, though, if a man may look at this Bramble long enough, he can see him changed into the wriggling coil of a snake; yet, like Melusina, the most famous of all the French fairies, when he first appears he looks like a beautiful god, instead of like a devil. His hair is a cluster of luscious grapes, rich as those of Eshcol, which the spies carried back from the promised land to the Hebrew encampment. His cheek has not upon it the pale look of a corpse, but it is flushed with what looks like the redness of health. He comes to us not as a pauper. In his pocket he jingles the coin of his taxes as he says: "You cannot, you dare not, do without me. I am King Alcohol. There is not a political convention in all this land except one that has dared hurl defiance at my sceptre. My den may seem to be the saloon, but my throne will yet be built under the great dome in the rotunda of our national capitol. I shall yet be publicly recognized as king in American politics as I am everywhere in secret recognized as King Alcohol now."

Is not the defiant assertion true? What political convention, with the exception of the Prohibition convention, dared double up its fist and smite this Bramble Alcohol a staggering blow?

Not one alone, but all of the great political parties, with but one exception, are bidding for the alcoholic vote to-day. There may be silver planks, anti-trust planks, anti-imperialistic planks, woman suffragist planks, high tariff planks and low tariff planks found in the different convention platforms upon which the various candidates for the Presidency stand, but with the exception of the Prohibition party not one assembly of delegates to a national convention called to nominate a candidate for the Presidency of the United States has dared to say to the saloon keeper, to the brewer and to the wine merchant: "Get out of this convention hall! Be off! We defy you and your Satanic hirelings. You are destroying our youth and our strong manhood with your liquid poison. Out, agents of darkness! Out! Out!" No, that is not the way the different conventions spoke. In their suggestive silence they say: "Bramble Alcohol, we may yet elect you king—but not now. However, if you promise to help us now we will promise not to hurt your trade hereafter." Am I wrong in stating that Bramble Alcohol is one of the threatening dangers confronting the future sovereignty of this land?

I would like, if there had been time enough, to have spoken of another form of evil threatening this land and bidding for kingship. I allude to the bramble of licentiousness or of immorality. I know that most people will lift their hands in horror as I speak and say, "Why, there is no danger like that threatening us!" Yes, there is, my friends. When an honest man is elected to the highest executive office of a city he finds out, much to his surprise, he cannot shut up the brothels as he would. He cannot stop the immoral evils of the low dance halls. Everywhere our cities are honeycombed with vice, merely because the voters at the polls back up dishonest officials in their willingness to allow these evil resorts to exist.

"Well," says some one, "how, then, are we to keep the bramble—the hateful, worthless bramble—from becoming ruler in American politics?" Ah, my friends, the direct teaching of this Jotham's fable tells the whole story. What did those delegates of trees down in the Valley of Shechem do? They first offered the rulership to the olive tree, then to the fig tree, then to the vine. But these three practically said: "Nay, we would not leave our respectability and comfort to go and mingle in dirty politics. We would stay off here alone in dignity and quiet and ease." That is the whole story. The reason the bramble became king in Jotham's fable was because the olive, the fig and the vine refused the rulership for which they were so eminently fitted. And to-day the reason the bad element predominates in so many of our city and county and State elections is because so many of the better element refuse to go to the primaries, refuse to be candidates for the humbler offices, refuse to see that public moneys are administered as honestly as private funds.

Thus Jotham's fable or parable teaches us that a man has a responsibility to his Government as well as to his home; a responsibility to those who shall rule over him as well as to those under him. By this statement am I here to tell you for whom to vote? Oh, no! In the coming election I say to you, "As a Christian man think for yourself and let your conscience be your guide." But hereafter, in the home or on the street and in church, always make your public business your Christian business. Always make your duty to your city, to your State, to your nation, your Christian duty. Then the great dangers which threaten this, our native land, from the rulership of the worthless bramble and its kind will be done away with, for the olive and the fig and the vine will be bending the knee in national worship at the foot of the cross.

RIOTS IN IRELAND.

Orangemen and Catholics Clash at Armagh Cathedral Opening.

Armagh, Ireland, July 26.—An enormous concourse from all parts of Ireland was present Sunday at the ceremony of the re-opening of Armagh Cathedral after four year's work of re-decoration, which included the covering of the entire walls with mosaic pictures. Cardinal Vannutalli as the legatee of Pope Pius and many Irish and foreign prelates; the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk, John Redmond, John Dillon, Timothy Healy, and other prominent persons were present. Some rioting of Orangemen and Catholics followed the ceremonies. Shots were fired and the police were stoned.

Stopped After First Round.

Buffalo, July 26.—The fight between Curley Supples and Kid Fredericks at the International Athletic Club, Fort Erie, last night, was stopped after the first round by Provincial Detective Greer, representing the Canadian Attorney-General's office and Chief of Police Griffin of Fort Erie. Both officers claimed the bout was not a boxing contest, but was developing into a prize fight. Supples had the better of the round all through and got the decision. The attendance was large.

Your Stationer Sells It,

AFTER 14-HOUR BATTLE THE RUSSIANS GET OUT.

Japanese Are Now Aiming To Go Into Newchwang.

Battle on Sunday Near Tatchekiao Will Drive the Russians to Liaoyang—Losses Said to be Heavy on Both Sides—News of the Desperate 14-Hours' Battle, in Which Firing Line Extended 15 Miles.

London, July 26.—Cabling under date of July 26, The Daily Mail's Newchwang correspondent describes a fourteen-hours' desperate battle with heavy losses on both sides, and which resulted in the Russian position at Tatchekiao being rendered untenable, by reason of which the Russians will be compelled to retreat towards Haicheng.

"The battle began at 6 o'clock in the morning," the correspondent says, "the Russians resuming the attack on the Japanese position on the heights east of Tatchekiao. After a few hours the Japanese left flank, from Taping Mountain, captured the Village of Tanghudituen, compelling the Russians to retreat to Tienghuaiteun, six miles from their base.

"The Russians, now reinforced, maintained the position until 5 o'clock in the afternoon, when the Japanese right flank made a sudden appearance on the hills south of Tatchekiao, and by a tremendous fire forced the Russians to retreat.

"The Japanese firing line extended fifteen miles.

"After two more hours of an incessant storm of shot and shell they swept the last hill and the plain clear of Russians."

The Russians Routed.

Paris, July 26.—A despatch to The Matin from Newchwang says that heavy firing continued all day long on July 24. The battle lasted for sixteen hours. The Russians were driven back on the east side, and were reported to be utterly routed on the north. The despatch says that the Russians evacuated Newchwang, of which the Japanese will probably take possession on July 26.

Battle on Sunday.

Newchwang, July 26.—A battle took place Sunday east of Tatchekiao, which resulted in the Russians being driven back, and it is believed they will have to retire to Liaoyang. The battle lasted all day.

Russians Get Out.

Washington, July 26.—Minister Conger, at Pekin, has cabled the State Department under yesterday's date that he has been informed that the Russians yesterday evacuated Newchwang.

Japs Not in Yet.

Tientsin, July 26.—Information has been received here to the effect that the Japanese have not entered Newchwang. The Russian civil administration departed Sunday night, and the destruction of Russian Government property began yesterday morning at the instance of the administration. The fighting reported Sunday took place between Newchwang and Tatchekiao, and Japanese troops from Kaichou were engaged. No engagement has taken place at Tachekiao.

Russians Lost 400.

London, July 26.—A despatch to a news agency from Liaoyang reports heavy artillery fighting there all Sunday. The Russian casualties, it is alleged, were thought not to exceed 400, while the Japanese are said to have lost more men. The Japanese, who were attacking the "southern detachment," according to the despatch, were forced to retire precipitately, leaving their dead and wounded on the field. The despatch lacks convincing details and names of places.

Japs Protest.

St. Petersburg, July 26.—It is reported that Japan officially protested to the Russian Government against violations of the rules of war on eleven counts, viz.:

Several Russian battalions hoisting the white flag at the battle of Vafangowand, inducing the Japanese to cease firing.

Abuse of the Red Cross flag, stabbing, shooting and mutilating the wounded, etc., as contained in Gen. Oku's report, already published.

The protest was presented by the United States, which, however, made it clear that the United States did not share in the protest, but acted only as the medium for its transmission, and, as such, would agree to forward any reply Russia cared to make.

BRITISH STEAMER SUNK.

Vladivostock Squadron First Transferred the European Passengers and the Crew—Crew Is at Yokohama.

Tokio, July 26.—The British steamer Chinan has arrived at Yokohama with the crew of the British steamer Knight Commander, which was sunk by the Russian Vladivostock squadron off Izu. The Knight Commander's cargo was a general one. Her European passengers were detained by the Russians and her crew of 21 were transferred to the Chinan, which also reports that the Russians sank two Japanese schooners.

The Vladivostock squadron also captured a German vessel believed to be the Arabia, with 30,000 tons of flour, and an unknown British steamer. The two vessels were sent to Vladivostock in charge of prize crews. The American Trading Company are the agents here for the Knight Commander.

Railway Material Contraband.

London, July 26.—It is pointed out in shipping circles at Liverpool that in Russia's contention that railroad material is contraband of war, the presence of bridge work for Japan among her cargo accounts for the sinking of the British steamer Knight Commander. Her crew numbered 68, including natives. She was insured against war risks.

Ardova Released.

Suez, July 26.—The British steamer Ardova, which, after being fired at by the Russian volunteer fleet steamer Smolensk, was seized by that vessel, has arrived here. She is flying the Russian naval flag and has a prize crew on board. It is declared her destination is a Russian port. The British cruiser Venus is anchored close to the captured steamer.

The British steamer Ardova, which was seized by the Russian volunteer fleet steamer Smolensk, has been released and her prize crew has been landed.

Squadron Sighted.

Tokio, July 26.—The Russian Vladivostock squadron was seen to the eastward of Kasuza Province at two p.m. yesterday. It was steaming to the east. Kasuza Province is on the east side of Tokio Bay. Katsura lies almost due east of Tokio.

Stopped a German.

Berlin, July 26.—The German steamer Lisbon of the Oldenburg-Portugal Line, has been stopped and searched by a Russian warship in the Gulf of Finland. She was then released.

Vigilant British Ship.

Constantinople, July 26.—Vessels arriving here report that a British warship is patrolling off Cape Helas, 15 miles south of the Dardanelles. She is using her searchlights, with the supposed view of intercepting any British ships which may have been captured by the Russian volunteer fleet steamers, if they attempt to pass the Dardanelles.

Called Home.

St. Petersburg, July 26.—The Associated Press is informed that the Russian volunteer fleet steamers Smolensk and St. Petersburg have already been ordered home, and that instructions for them to return have been cabled. The assurances given Great Britain on this point are declared to be satisfactory.

Buffalo, N. Y., July 26.—A special to The Evening News from Delavan, N.Y., says three men were killed and two others were injured in a head-on collision between two freight trains near that village yesterday.

Short $900 in Accounts.

Stratford, July 26.—A few days ago H. Milton Moir, agent of the C. P.R. and Dominion Express Company at St. Mary's, was arrested on a charge of embezzlement laid by the latter company. He had been found to be $900 short in his accounts. The preliminary hearing took place on Friday before two St. Mary's justices of the peace. The prisoner was sent up for trial. He is now out on bail.

Toronto Man Robbed in Kingston.

Toronto, July 26.—Treffla Andre of this city, went on the Kingston Old Boys' excursion on Saturday. Shortly after 2 a.m. Monday, while hurrying for the return train, two thugs severely handled him, robbed him of a gold watch, which he values at $60, $7 in cash and a silver mounted pocket knife.

She is using her searchlights, with the supposed view of intercepting any British ships which may have been captured by the Russian volunteer fleet steamers, if they attempt to pass the Dardanelles.

Called Home.

St. Petersburg, July 26.—The Associated Press is informed that the Russian volunteer fleet steamers Smolensk and St. Petersburg have already been ordered home, and that instructions for them to return have been cabled. The assurances given Great Britain on this point are declared to be satisfactory.

Buffalo, N. Y., July 26.—A special to The Evening News from Delavan, N.Y., says three men were killed and two others were injured in a head-on collision between two freight trains near that village yesterday.

Short $900 in Accounts.

Stratford, July 26.—A few days ago H. Milton Moir, agent of the C. P.R. and Dominion Express Company at St. Mary's, was arrested on a charge of embezzlement laid by the latter company. He had been found to be $900 short in his accounts. The preliminary hearing took place on Friday before two St. Mary's justices of the peace. The prisoner was sent up for trial. He is now out on bail.

Toronto Man Robbed in Kingston.

Toronto, July 26.—Treffla Andre of this city, went on the Kingston Old Boys' excursion on Saturday. Shortly after 2 a.m. Monday, while hurrying for the return train, two thugs severely handled him, robbed him of a gold watch, which he values at $60, $7 in cash and a silver mounted pocket knife.

GREAT DAYS FOR THE GRAFTERS.

These are great days at Ottawa for the grafters. They are to be seen in clouds about Parliament Hill and, if they are on to the ropes, there is no need of their leaving without a nice fat wad. Take this case of the Saskatchewan Valley Land Company. One of its directors, Mr. Adamson, is the Liberal candidate in Humboldt. Another party who is alleged to be closely connected with the company, Mr. Turriff, is running in a second Western Riding. That brings the matter pretty nearly home to the Liberal ranks. What did the company get? For $1 an acre they were given the privilege of purchasing 250,000 acres of land along the line of the Long Lake and Qu'appelle Railway. Moreover, they were authorized to pay for it in script, which is purchased from the half-breeds at ridiculously low prices and does not represent dollar for dollar. They paid $98,000 in this currency. The lands purchased are to-day worth anywhere from $5 to $10 an acre and at the lower figure the company has made a cool million. At $10 an acre they stand to gather in $2,250,000, which could have remained in the pockets of the people of Canada had the persons so solicitous in securing the concessions not been of the Sifton-Liberal-candidate type. It is well to know these things, in the days when the Auditor-General is being driven from office by a Government willing to allow private parties with a pull to exploit the treasury for such amount. This case should be treasured up in the minds of all who believe in Canada, and not the man who knows the ropes at Ottawa.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Chief Newton was reading "The Sons of England Record" when the Topics man saw him. "There's a good article," he said, "and one that hits this county hard," and he pointed to a strong protest against the practise, which prevails in Ontario, of keeping aged paupers and lunatics in jail. It is alleged that more than a score of fellow-creatures, guilty of no crime but poverty and mental sickness, live out their days in the common jail in the City of Toronto alone.

* * *

"The same state of affairs prevails in this city," said the Chief. "Only last week the Magistrate had to send a poor old man to jail because he had no money and no friends. He had committed no crime, but we had nowhere but the jail to send him to. And there have been many, many such cases in the last few years."

* * *

It is high time, and more than time, that the above practise was stopped. But then it will probably be stopped, so far as paupers are concerned, in this county next year, when the County Council builds the Home for the Friendless. When the outrages in regard to lunatics will be stopped only the stars can tell.

* * *

If those Red Sea raids don't end soon some other sea may run red.

* * *

Whether the Czar's ships are recognized as men-of-war or not, his soldiers and sailors can easily be recognized as a lot of duffers.

* * *

Wouldn't it be dreadful if the Russian volunteer fleet captured one of the boats carrying picnics out of this beautiful city to-morrow?

* * *

These be the days when no one can sneeze
At the restful old hammock cut under the trees.

* * *

If you are fond of lying in a hammock and would like to get one, we will tell you how to do it. First, get a barrel, knock the bottom out of it and carefully remove all the hoops and nails. Then borrow somebody's auger and bore holes in the staves, being careful not to split more than half of them. Next take the staves out to the woodshed and carefully saw them up into lengths to fit the stove. All you have to do now, in order to secure a comfortable and cheap hammock, is to go down street and buy one.

* * *

The above plan may seem, to some people, rather a complicated one, but it is fully as simple and useful as most of the recipes you come across in some weekly "home" newspapers.

* * *

* * *

We don't hear any more kicking about that granolithic walk on Bridge St. west. Have the boulevards been graded up, or have the residents grown used to climbing?

* * *

Anyhow, it's a pity we have not as good walks as that all over this beautiful city.

* * *

There is no truth in the report that a big yellow touring automobile had been in collision with the corporation steam roller. No such luck!

* * *

It is to be hoped that, at the different picnics to-morrow, people will remember that no lady or gentleman ever tries to get aboard a boat by walking over anybody else's shoulders. Take your time and the gangplank. You are not eager to jump into the bay and eternity. Neither are other people.

* * *

* * *

Well! Well!! Well!!! What do you think of this, from the Port Hope Guide, one of the Grittiest of Grit papers, and which, when its own corns are not stepped on, can always be depended on to say black is white if told to do so by the "machine":

"There is a rumor that has been freely circulated in town, to the effect that Senator Cox, or rather the Bank of Commerce, has secured an option upon all the waterpowers between the Rice Lake and Trenton. If this is true we are up against "a condition (and a serious one) and not a theory." We give the rumor for what it is worth. We think, however, that the Dominion Government has thrown into the way of Senator Cox all the "casual advantages" absolutely necessary and Cox should be made to wait. The Liberal electors will not eternally wink at the doings of any Government, and we feel called upon as a warm and ardent supporter of the Liberal cause to sound a word of warning to our friends to call a halt, and to shake themselves free from these political grafters and others that are hanging on with their eyebrows to every Government scheme that can be squeezed and skinned to their financial advantage."

* * *

Russia will promise to release all ships held by her, but the Knight Commander is past releasing. She is in the possession of Davy Jones.

* * *

Mr. Charles T. Simpkins will be the new principal of the Canifton Road School. There were only 48 applicants for the position, which was last night given to Mr. Simpkins, who has for some years been teaching at Canifton, where he is said to have been very successful.

* * *

It appears that another development in the celebrated lot case has cropped up. The heirs of the Roberts estate have taken legal action to set aside the sale of certain lots, made by the City of Belleville to Mr. Joseph Caldwell, and the case will come up for trial this fall, probably at the same time the case of Phillips vs. City of Belleville is tried. There are, we are told, 14 lots in dispute in the Roberts heirs' action.

* * *

Isn't it a pity that a Jap cruiser or two could not turn up in the Red Sea. There would soon be something smashed besides Russian promises.

* * *

It was very nice of those Yankee visitors to come into our harbor last night and play "God Save the King." Here's luck and a pleasant voyage to 'em.

* * *

All the world loves a square sport. That's why people everywhere are glad to see that Toronto yesterday gave young Scholes a redhot and fitting welcome. And, judging by the telegraphic reports, it must have been a "corker."

* * *

Nothing comes from Port Arthur these days. The Russians can't send anything and the Japs won't. So there you are.

* * *

The Russians have been driven from their base, it seems, but it's safe to assume they will still keep on making runs.

* * *

The supplementary estimates are down, but, though they aggregate nearly twelve millions, we look in vain for any further appropriation for the Belleville Armory. What a measly shame it was for the Government to induce the Council to expend over $4,000 of the citizens' money in the purchase of a site which they have apparently no intention of building on for goodness knows how long. Six months has passed now since the lot was purchased and it is still as vacant as the Grit candidate.

* * *

The supplementary estimates bring the grand total of expenditure up to nearly $75,000,000. Not bad for a crowd of blue ruinites who wept crocodile tears because the Conservatives spent $38,000,000. How in the world that fine old economist, Sir Richard Cartwright stands it is more than we can tell.

Wages Case.

Harry Demill charged Chas. Ashley, of Foxboro, with refusing to pay him $40 alleged due for wages. The defendant alleged that he only owed Demill $17, which was tendered him and he refused to accept it. Mr. Carnew appeared for the plaintiff and Mr. Diamond for the defendant

Wood Cases.

Frank Bunkin was charged with appropriating some wood to his own use which A. S. Vantassel claimed belonged to him. Bunkin had to pay $1 for the wood.

Allan Stapley and Thos. Cleveland were charged with removing some timber which W. Lucas claimed was his property. The accused were ordered to replace timber and pay the costs.

Imported Horses and Cattle.

Several of the most prominent breeders of horses and cattle in Canada are at present in England, or have recently returned from the trip, which was undertaken for the sole purpose of procuring stock for show at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, August 29th to September 12th, and for the improvement of their well-known stables. The exhibits of these gentlemen alone would offer an interesting horse show, and when combined with the hundreds of other entries in all classes, will complete the finest display of horses and cattle ever seen in Canada. Among those whose direct and recent importations will be shown are Robert Beith, M.P., of Bowmanville; Thomas Graham, of Graham Bros., Claremont; J. M. Gardhouse, of the Highfield stables, and William Smith, ex-M.P., of Columbus. Among the cattle breeders, Hon. John Dryden, Minister of Agriculture, and Robert Miller, of Stouffville, will show for the first time their recent purchases in England. All the exhibitors agree to keep their entries on the grounds during the full period of the exhibition.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

The Dairy Industry.

The future of the dairy industry depends to a large extent upon the efforts put forth by the individual farmer. The Department of Agriculture asked the two chief dairy instructors for a statement of the needs in the dairy business from the farmer's standpoint at the present time. The replies received are given below.

Geo. H. Barr, London:—"The principal defects in the milk being delivered at the cheese factories at the present time are over-ripeness, cowy flavors, gasy, and what is known as bitter milk. All these defects are caused by the same thing, improper care on the farm, such as unclean milking, not straining the milk, allowing the milk to stand over night in places where the air is made impure by adjacent hog pens, barn yards, etc., and not cooling the milk to under 70 degrees immediately after milking.

Our makers are having hard work at the present time in many of the factories to make even a passable cheese from the quality of milk being delivered, and the quantity of milk required to make a pound of cheese is much greater than if the milk was in proper condition. Where the makers are careful in selecting the milk at the receiving window there is not so much trouble in the factory, which leads one to the conclusion that the makers have the solution of the problem largely in their own hands. Where we find clean, tidy factories, we invariably find clean milk delivered; and where the factory and maker are dirty and untidy, the milk is generally of the same nature. Cleanliness is the one great feature necessary to put our cheese on a higher plane."

G. G. Publow, Kingston:—"I would say that the great need of the present time is for people to be more careful in the manner in which the milking is done and the place wherein the milk is kept, and to pay more attention to the cooling of the milk. Too much stress cannot be laid upon the latter, namely, cooling, and—especially in the districts where yeast fermentation is prevalent. To handle this fermentation with any degree of satisfaction, it is absolutely essential that the milk be well cooled at the farm immediately after milking, so as to retard its growth before it reaches the hands of the cheesemaker. All cans should be covered with mosquito netting or some other such covering, to prevent flies and insects from dropping into the milk while on the stand over night, as I believe flies are a great source of infection to milk."

It will be seen from the above that the men who have covered the whole field are of one mind as to the importance of the farmer giving more attention to the care of his milk. As an evidence of what may be accomplished by proper care, an instance may be given of a patron in the vicinity of Peterboro, who delivered three cans of milk, representing three milkings, to a factory on Monday morning, July 11th. Saturday night's and Sunday morning's milk was first-class but the Sunday night's was rejected because sour. The two lots had received proper attention but the Sunday night's had been neglected, the farmer thinking, no doubt, that the milk would be delivered the next morning and would not therefore require the attention given that which had to be kept a longer time. Even the milk which is to be delivered the same morning as produced should be thoroughly aerated and cooled.

Unless the farmers are prepared to co-operate with the makers and instructors in their efforts to better the quality of the cheese produced they will be the sufferers sooner or later. An insufficient and impure water supply is often the cause of an inferior product, especially in creameries, where so much depends on its purity.

and will quickly eradicate all trace of scalp bacteria, which is the cause of hair falling, dandruff and baldness. NO SCALP CAN BE HEALTHY AND NO HAIR CAN BE BEAUTIFUL WHEN CONTAMINATED WITH THESE DISEASE-BREEDING CREATURES. They undermine the hair and devour all the nutriment or life-sap of the scalp, without which the scalp dries up and peels off, forming dandruff and causing the loss of hair. SEVEN SUTHERLAND SISTERS HAIR GROWER AND SCALP CLEANER ARE THE ONLY REMEDIES IN THE WORLD THAT WILL DESTROY THESE GERMS. They penetrate the scalp thoroughly, carrying with them all the necessary properties to quickly regenerate all the impoverished parts. They rebuild the lost tissues of the scalp and renew the growth of the hair in every case. A few applications will make the hair fairly sparkle with new life and vigor. They make healthy hair grow twice to three times as fast as it does normally.

CANADIANS IN ENGLAND

OUR BOWLERS MADE THOROUGHLY WELCOME BY THEIR CONFRERES.

No Halfway Heartedness About John Bull —Lord Strathcona and Alfred Jury Assist the Dominion Team and Friends to Many Good Things—Of the Games Played—A Good Time Given Everywhere.

The London correspondent of The Toronto Telegram, with the Canadian bowlers in England, writes under date of the 15th June:

The first few days in London were enjoyed by the Canadian bowling team in a variety of ways. It was an off week for them, but friends were not wanting to minister to their tastes. Mr. Jury, of the Canadian Emigration offices, whose services have been placed at the disposal of the visitors, has left nothing undone to furnish entertainment and information. He is a prime favorite with all. The result of his efforts has been manifested in a number of pleasing channels and invitations to receptions, excursions and public institutions pour in daily. Theatres have been thrown open to us, and in the music halls and other centres of popular entertainment, nothing is too good for the wearer of the maple leaf.

Lord Strathcona, patron of the team, was one of the first to receive the bowlers, and made the little band feel quite at home. At a reception in his Grosvenor square mansion they were honored guests, and were introduced to the many noble and distinguished guests present. In bowling circles the preparations for the visitors have been conducted on the most lavish style, a noticeable feature being the keen interest taken by the ladies in every function arranged by the clubs all about London.

Singles at Sydenham.

During the off days mentioned, the international singles at the Crystal Palace, a three-day competition, naturally attracted many of the Canadians. Seven of the latter were among the hundred and odd entries and they gave a good account of themselves, when it is considered that their opponents were the skilled pick of the three kingdoms. Mr. Carmichael, Sir Thomas Lipton's secretary, is regarded as the king bee of his club, the London Counties, but he went down under the careful play of Aleck Yule of Harriston. Similarly a Midlands and Northern star respectively succumbed to the steady draws of G. B. Woods of Toronto. It happened unfortunately that in a couple of instances Canadians were drawn against each other thus lessening their chances, and in one case, Mr. Hunter, president of the Irish Bowling Association, and a devoted friend of the Canadians, was fated to contest in the third round with Mr. Woods and defeated him. He in turn fell before the ultimate winner of the championship.

Where Honors Were Even.

Heathfield was the first real match of the original schedule of the Canadians with the Englishmen. It is a pretty place near Wandsworth, about seven miles out of London. Two rinks only were played and honors were divided. Dr. Wood, of Mitchell, and "Teddy" Wigmore, of Toronto, being the Canadian skips, here called "drivers," the latter being the winning team. Scores of ladies flitted in and out of the neatly decorated pavilions and tents, and pressed tea and other comforts upon the non-playing visitors, and after the match a huge marquee accommodated the hundreds of guests, who enjoyed an excellent repast. Welcoming speeches were made by the Mayor of Wandsworth, the members for Clapham and Wandsworth, members of the London County Council and others, and responded to by Captain Anderson, Messrs. Wigmore, Davies and Stevens. Great enthusiasm was created by Ruthven McDonald's songs, and it is safe to say that the "Maple Leaf" and other Canadian airs will be whistled on Wandsworth Common for many a day.

Rain and Defeat.

Heavy rain greeted the team's visit to Muswell Hill on the following day. Everybody deplored its arrival for the local club's preparations were elaborate. The Canadians appeared for the first time, in white, and as five rinks a side were playing, the effect with the gaily flagged surroundings, the parterres of flowers, and the scores of summer dressed ladies and top-hatted gentlemen who crowded the tented walks above the banks on the four sides of the beautiful green, was as pretty a picture as one would wish to witness. Jupiter Pluvius, however, was inexorable. The crowds thinned out, as did the pleasurable enthusiasm. The play, which was becoming interesting, fell off, and it was stopped after a number of ends were concluded, with the home team away up two to one. A jolly smoker was, however, heartily enjoyed ere the visitors took the 9.30 train for the city.

Dry and Victory.

To-day the Canadians encountered four rinks of the Bound's Green Club at Bowes Park, the long time rivals of the Muswell Hill bowlers, their respective greens being but a brief mile or two apart. Here, as elsewhere, the excitement was keen and onlookers, including the ladies, were numerous. The inter-club annual competitions in this district for the local trophy have in the past excited much interest, and between Muswell Hill and Bound's Green the cup has stayed for several periods. The defeat of the Canadians on the previous day raised the hopes and confidence of the latter, but the weather, which was lowering, did not contribute rain nor lessen the determination of the Canucks. The contest was close, and in some cases exciting, and in not a few instances elicited generous applause from the spectators. The green was, as indeed they all are here, in perfect condition, and a little heavy but unspoiled by the wet, was just suited to the Canadian taste. At the close of the twenty-one ends, it was announced that the visitors were victors by five points, and ringing cheers from spectators and opponents alike greeted the declaration.

Our Canadian Songs.

The hospitable Englishmen and their ladies were again in evidence indoors and a pleasant hour was spent at the supper table, Ruthven, the brave, again making the welkin ring with the "Maple Leaf" and other songs.

How those national airs of ours do catch on. It requires but a repetition of the refrain and all are in it. Then questions about Canada come in volleys, and to escape them we manage somehow to put Stevens, of Chatham, on an elevation, and in his happy and forcible way he unfolds to his eager listening audience a story of the greatness and wonderful resources and possibilities of Canada; especially does he disabuse the minds of many of their hazy notions of the meaning of America and leaves them convinced that there is a mighty distinction between the home of the Yankee and the great Dominion over which waves the flag they all revere and love, the brightest star in the Empire.

As time proceeds we are being appreciated for what we are, not for what we were heralded, viz., picked players sent out to vanquish and gain supremacy. They know us now as gentlemen who play for the love of the game only, and who are here to fraternize with our fellow-bowlers and establish cordial relations with them as such, and incidentally to lighten their darkness about our loved Dominion, of which indeed but few possess a more than superficial knowledge.

Something to Learn.

Of the team it may be truly said that to most they are learning also. The marvellous greatness and wealth of London, and the beauty and richness of England generally, are a revelation. The acquirement of this knowledge on the spot may not add to the strength of the loyalty which possesses them, but that it intensifies it goes without saying, and if such were possible, will bring them home better Canadians than ever. Each and all are benefitting by the trip, a few being away to scenes of their childhood, or of which they have heard since that innocent age, and others contemplating such a visit, when they can go conveniently without hurting the strength of the combination.

For Canadian Colored Children.

On Nov. 24th, 1854, in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., the will of one Esther Moore was probated. By this will the interest on $1,200 was left "for educational purposes for children of color and of both sexes in Canada, apart from all sectarian or traditional dogmas." In a codicil the testatrix provided as follows: "I wish my executors or trustees to carry out my views in regard to the education of colored children in Canada by paying over the interest arising annually from the $1,200 mentioned in the second item to such school or schools as in their judgment they may deem best, my desire being the benefit of such children of fugitive slaves residing in Canada West and other colored children who may be in the same neighborhood with them."

For a time the interest was paid regularly to the Wilberforce Educational Institute, Chatham, but this payment ceased many years ago and no claim has since been made on the fund which has thus been accumulating. The trustees and executors of the testatrix have all died, and the Provident Life & Trust Co. of Philadelphia have been appointed by the courts to administer the estate. All these facts are set forth in a letter from Townsend, Elliott & Townsend, attorneys-at-law of Philadelphia, who, acting for the Trust Company, have written to the Hon. Mr. Harcourt, Minister of Education, for information as to the school or schools which might be entitled to all or a portion of the yearly revenue from the fund.

Mr. Harcourt is making inquiries into the whole matter.

The Rage for Insurance.

A curious case in insurance has come to light lately, and is causing much comment in London. A Canadian lady married a nobleman who was in his eighty-first year. The Marquis of Donegal had taken out an insurance policy in his seventieth year against issue being born to him. The first Marchioness died, and by his second wife he had a son, who now claims from the Norwich Union the sum of £2,500 payable on his father's death. It is the first time that this company have had to pay, and it brings to light what the rage for insurance is in this age. The old Marquis paid one premium, a lump sum of £131, and doubtless the mother of his heir rejoices in his forethought. I am told by those who ought to know that among the middle class in England insurance in every form is popular to a degree, and that romances without number could be written on the extraordinary credulity of the mass of the public.

As It Will Be.

Give me a spoon of oleo, ma,
And the sodium alkali,
For I am going to make a pie, mamma,
I'm going to make a pie;
For John will be hungry and tired, ma,
And his tissues will decompose,
So give me a gramme of phosphate
And the carbon and cellulose.

Now give me a chunk of caseine, ma,
To shorten the thermic fat,
And give me the oxygen bottle, ma,
And look at the thermostat,
And if the electric oven is cold,
Just turn it on half an ohm,
For I want to have dinner ready
As soon as John comes home.

THREE CENTURIES.

Annapolis Royal's Celebration During the Week Ending June 25—Some Canadian History Restated.

Seven years ago the City of St. John's celebrated with appropriate ceremonies and festivities the 400th anniversary of John Cabot's landing on the coast of Newfoundland. During the week ending June 25, Annapolis Royal, in Nova Scotia, and St. John, in New Brunswick, rendered similar honors to the memory of De Monts and Champlain, who 300 years ago explored the shores of the Bay of Fundy, and gave the history of Acadia a beginning. During most of the century intervening between the events thus commemorated, North America had been neglected. Distracted by the Reformation and religious wars, the enterprising nations of Europe had not much thought for colonization, especially in the latitudes north of Mexico. It is true, adventurous mariners who had friends at court were enabled to make voyages to the Atlantic Coast of this continent. From England came Sebastian Cabot, John Cabot's son. Several years later came Verrazzano from France. In 1534 Jacques Cartier began his voyage from St. Malo. Fishermen and fur traders kept up some connection with this side of the Atlantic, but the era of colonization did not begin till the opening of the 17th century.

Chauvin had made three unsuccessful attempts to establish the fur trade at Tadousac, where the Saguenay empties into the Lower St. Lawrence. The Winters proved too severe for him. When he died Aymar de Chastes, who had fought against the League and won the friendship of Henri IV., obtained from that King a monopoly of the North American fur trade. He formed a company, to which were admitted the principal merchants of the West ports, who had been associated with Chauvin, or had engaged in the fur trade on their own account. Samuel de Champlain had just returned from the West Indies. A place on the expedition was offered to him by his friend de Chastes. To Pontgrave, who had been at Tadousac with Chauvin in 1600, was given the command. But de Chastes was not destined to be more successful than his predecessor. Pontgrave and Champlain went to the St. Lawrence in 1603. The commercial results were disappointing, and when they returned the first news they heard was that de Chastes was dead.

Pierre du Guast, Sieur de Monts, Gentleman-in-Ordinary of the King's Chamber, and Governor of Pons, succeeded to the monopoly held by de Chastes. His patent gave him power to colonize Acadia, a region defined as extending from the 40th to the 46th degree of north latitude. Over this vast extent of continent he had vice-regal powers. He preserved de Chastes' old company. To obtain settlers for his projected colony he was authorized to impress idlers and tramps, and many a vagabond was forced on one or other of the two vessels with which De Monts put to sea in 1604. Catholic priests and Huguenot ministers took passage with them. Baron de Poutrincourt and other noblemen accompanied De Monts, Pontgrave and Champlain. De Monts sailed from Havre de Grace on April 7, 1604. Pontgrave, in command of the second vessel, followed a few days later. Between the Calvinist ministers and the Catholic clergy on board there was much controversy and some fighting. So, at all events, we are told by Champlain, who has left an account of this voyage, and of the subsequent explorations and attempts at settlement.

Like Pontgrave and Champlain, De Monts had some experience of the St. Lawrence. He had been with Chauvin at Tadousac, and the hardships suffered at that place warned him away from it. He steered further south, hoping to find there a milder region. His first landing place was what is now called Liverpool harbor, on the south-east coast of Nova Scotia. He was joined further down the coast by Pontgrave, who had seized four Basque fur traders found trespassing. The southern shore of Nova Scotia was rounded, and the exploration of the Bay of Fundy was begun. Poutrincourt was captivated by the beauty of Annapolis Basin, with its narrow entrance and wide land-locked expanse. He asked and obtained a grant of it from De Monts. Poutrincourt called his possession Port Royal. It held that name till the place was captured by a British expedition from Massachusetts in 1710, after which it was called Annapolis—the City of Anne—in honor of the Queen then reigning over the United Kingdom. In the present name, "Annapolis Royal," a part of the old one survives. It is not known on what day De Monts entered the basin, but the people of Annapolis adopted June 21 as a very close approximation to the date, and their tercentenary celebration was accordingly begun on Tuesday.

It is known, however, that the River St. John was entered by De Monts on St. John's Day, and named by Champlain accordingly.

Dating its beginning from 1605 Annapolis Royal can claim to be the oldest settlement in Canada, and the second oldest in North America, St. Augustine, in Florida, alone exceeding it in age. It is three years older than Jamestown, the first permanent settlement in Virginia, and it is sixteen years older than Plymouth, the colony founded by the Pilgrim Fathers in Massachusetts. Not till three years after he had helped to establish the Port Royal colony did Champlain found the old City of Quebec.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

HAPPY MOTHER'S TOUCHING STORY

Of Baby's Dreadful Suffering from Eczema.

CURED BY CUTICURA.

Now His Skin Is as White as a Snow Flake.

"A terrible rash broke out on Charlie's poor little face and spread to his neck, chest and back. I had never seen anything quite like it before," writes Mrs. Helena Rath of 821 10th Ave., N. Y. City. "The skin rose in little lumps, and matter came out. My baby's skin was hot, and how he did suffer. He wouldn't eat, and night after night I walked the floor with him, weak as I was. Often I had to stop because I felt faint and my back throbbed with pain. But the worst pain of all was to see my poor little boy burning with those nasty sores. At last I was persuaded by a friend across the street to try the Cuticura Remedies. She gave me some Cuticura Ointment—I think the box was about half full—and a piece of Cuticura Soap. I followed the directions, bathing Charlie and putting that nice Ointment on the sores. Little by little, but so surely, Charlie and I both got more peace by day and more sleep by night. The sores sort of dried up and went away, and now Charlie is cured completely."

"Yes, that fat little boy by the window is Charlie, and his skin is as white as a snow flake, thanks to the Cuticura Remedies. I think everybody should know about the Soap and Ointment, and if it is going to help other mothers with sick babies, go ahead and publish what I have told you."

Cuticura Resolvent, liquid and in the form of Chocolate Coated Pills, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap are sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27 Charterhouse Sq.; Paris, 5 Rue de la Paix; Australia, R. Towns & Co., Sydney; Boston, 137 Columbus Ave. Potter Drug & Chemical Corp., Sole Proprietors. SUMMER STYLES.

Full Flounced Effects Are Used With Veilings—Separate Waists.

Many dresses are made with full flounces, especially veilings, which, when treated in this fashion, have the airiness of muslin. The half sleeve effects, now so smart, are often composed of three or five ruffles. This half sleeve is always lined with a ruffle of lace.

The brightest blue tones are being worn, and they are combined with dyed lace or black and white embroidery.

A brown shot taffeta seen recently was trimmed with entre deux of embroidery, edged with yellow lace and little taffeta roses with yellow centers. With it was worn a hat of the pretty Lamballe shape, trimmed with a wreath of yellow roses and a falling curtain of brown lace.

LINEN SHIRT WAIST.

Separate waists for morning wear are of embroidered linen, while for dressy occasions they are of embroidered net or lace.

Jacket and skirt effects are going to be worn a great deal this summer. They will be made unlined, so that they will not be too heavy even for the warmest days.

For evening and reception frocks there is a new shade of rose called Rose Du Barry. This grows brighter and brighter. Sometimes it is trimmed with little black velvet dots.

The illustration shows a tucked linen shirt waist trimmed with cluny lace.

HATS OF THE MOMENT.

Large Flat Shapes Vie With Tiny Toques—The New Sailor Hats.

The flat Lamballe shape is replacing everything else in millinery. This flat and large shape is becoming only to very tall women. There are, however, other shapes which are coming into style, notably the shape with a rolled brim and a short back, which is particularly adapted to a feather.

Hats made entirely of lace ruffles are decorated with bows of velvet or tiny rosebuds.

The new straws are so fine and silky that in many cases they look like satin ribbon or gold lace.

Openwork hats are very smart, particularly in flower and cherry hats. The latter are made of red straw in circular strips and wreaths of cherries. The openwork spaces are thinly covered with red net.

The torpedo toque is made in the most fantastic fashion, and the rolled brim is incrusted with motifs of circular decoration. Black with ecru, white with black and lavender with pink are smart color combinations.

Sailor hats trimmed with ruches of ribbon in two or more shades are among the latest millinery products.

Children's dress at present is noted for its daintiness rather than for its cost or elaborateness. Surely every one should realize the vulgarity of overdressing a child, and a glance at the present fashions will show that they are plain even to the extreme. Russian costumes are still smart for little boys, and their small sisters wear modified editions of this same style in wools or linens or else kilted skirts with smart blouse bodices trimmed with strappings of silk or a little hand worked embroidery. White linen dresses worn with white kid belts are becoming warm weather gowns for little girls. Wide berthas appear also upon the children's gowns, and often the bertha composes the entire trimming, and it is noticeable for a fine trimming of hand embroidery or some other dainty touch. The French child's dress with the tiny ruffle of a skirt and the long waisted effect has returned into favor.

A FRENCH HAT.

The cut shows a smart little hat of rough yellow straw trimmed with a black rosette and a cream bird of paradise tail.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 68 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

THE CRIME OF THE CENTURY

BY RODRIGUES OTTOLENGUI,

"Well, then," continued Mr. Mitchel, "perhaps you know the two men who swore at the inquest that they saw Mr. Mora here?"

"Oh, yes, I know them right enough!"

"Are they reliable?"

"Re-li-able?" repeated the barkeeper, pronouncing each syllable separately, and, accenting the last two with significant emphasis, he laughed at his own wit as he continued his rude joke. "Well, now, you've just hit them off. They're liable to lie and to re-lie, according to price offered. Why, for a silver quarter with a hole in it either one of that pair would swear his mother was a cigar store Indian, so you see what a beautiful alibi they let that duck off on. Oh, I tell you this is a great town for some folks, especially them that has the price and pays their way."

"Then you do not believe that Mora was here?"

"Oh, I don't go as far as to say what I believe. I'm an unbeliever, I am. All I say is it ain't proved that he was here. He might have been, you know, under some other name, only if he was them fellows told the truth for once in their lives, and that would be queer, the both of them honest the same day. That would be funny." He chuckled till his fat form shook like a bag of jelly.

"Still, as you say," pursued Mr. Mitchel, "it is possible, after all, that he was here?"

"Oh, yes, it's possible! Anything's possible. Today might be Tuesday, only it ain't."

"Still, on the chance that, as you suggest, he has visited this hall and is known to you under another name, I should like to have an opportunity of seeing him here. He claims that he comes here to study the condition of the poor, but I think it more probable that if he comes at all there is some other attraction."

"In petticoats, eh?" said the barkeeper, with a laugh. "Say, you ain't no fool yourself. Are you a detective?"

He asked this last question so suddenly and looked at Mr. Mitchel so attentively while trying to seem busy polishing a glass that Mr. Mitchel instantly decided that it would be wise to disabuse his mind of that idea if he hoped to retain his friendly aid. Therefore he said without a moment's hesitation:

"Oh, no! I am a reporter."

"Then you're welcome any time, and I'm at your service." A certain brightening up of the man's countenance assured Mr. Mitchel that his answer had been a wise one. The fellow continued: "Say, you've got that Mora chap dead to rights. If he comes down here, he don't give his own name, and you can bet on that, and he ain't visiting this neighborhood for the good of the neighbors. There's a girl in it, or my name ain't what it is. Say, I'll tell you what! The dancing school opens Saturday night with a swarry. You be down, and I'll do what I can to tell you who's who."

Mr. Mitchel thanked him for his offer and, tossing him a dollar in payment for his drink, bade him keep the change, which he did, passing the silver coins to his pocket with the dexterity of an expert. Turning to leave the place, Mr. Mitchel was attracted by a picture tacked to the wall. It was a crude lithograph in garish colors and represented the face of a rather pretty girl, but what most interested him was the fact that in the picture the girl wore a single blossom of lily of the valley as a headdress, while printed below were the words, "Miss Lilian Vale, 'The Lily of the Valley.'"

"Who is this girl?" asked Mr. Mitchel, turning again to the bar and pointing at the lithograph.

"Say, she's a peach, she is, the best in the business!" The barkeeper lowered his voice to a confidential whisper. "I'm stuck on the Lily myself, but there are others, and I guess I ain't in it." He shrugged his shoulders as though expressing resignation at the thought of living without her. "She's a serio comic and does turns in the halls on the Bowery. But she's too good for that sort, 'cause she's got a voice like a bird. She ought to be on Broadway, she ought. She could sing right 'longside of Lillian Russell, and it would be a toss up which Lillian got the applause. I tell you she's a wonder."

"Do you know where she is singing at present?"

"Well, it's summer now, you know, and as she ain't got called to the roof gardens up town yet I guess she's out of work. In fact, come to think of it, it's a long time since she's sung any place. See the date on that bill? It's over a year old. Funny I never thought of that before." He seemed quite taken aback and lost in thought for a few moments.

"Do you know her personally?" Mr. Mitchel asked. This aroused him at once.

"Do I? Well, I guess! Many's the turn I've had with her in the mazy waltz up stairs."

"Then she comes here sometimes?"

"Oh, yes! She's around pretty regular. She'll be at the opening swarry sure. You be here, and I'll give you a knockdown."

Considering her name and remembering the emblem worked on the baby's slip, Mr. Mitchel promised himself much interest in meeting the young singer and assured the barkeeper that he would be present at the dance.

He had walked less than a block after leaving Apollo hall when a short man, with an eye that never met the gaze of another, suddenly appeared beside him, leaving a doubt as to whence he had come. In a sepulchral whisper the newcomer addressed him:

"I say, mister, can I see you a minute?"

"Yes. What do you want?" said Mr. Mitchel. Then, thinking that the man must be a beggar, he took out a dime and offered it to him, but the fellow declined it with a grin.

"No, sir," said he; "t'anks awfully, but dat ain't me price. I'm no beggar."

"Well, then, what are you?" asked Mr. Mitchel sharply.

"I'm a crook—just a plain, simple crook. Slippery Sam's my name. What's yours?"

The audacity of the man attracted Mr. Mitchel, and, looking upon him for a moment as a curiosity, he said:

"You are a crook, eh? Then why might I not hand you over to the police?"

"Time wasted an nothin gained. I done my time for my last job, an I've lived straight ever since. So what could they hold me for, eh?"

"How long have you been out of prison?"

"Two weeks, an I ain't struck no money since I reached town, straight or crooked. But I seen you give that barkeep your change, an says I to myself, says I, 'Sam, that man's your meat.'"

"And what may that elegant expression signify?"

"It signifies that you've got money to burn, an I want some of it."

"Do you mean to get it by robbery?"

"Not unless you force me into crime," said Slippery Sam, looking at Mr. Mitchel so quizzically that the latter laughed outright.

The fellow was evidently an original character, one of those whose destiny is to see the humorous side of life. Such as he would be the light spirit of a party, whether in clubroom or prison cell. Continuing the conversation, Mr. Mitchel said:

"I have no wish to make you steal, but how else do you expect to get money from me?"

"In exchange for information," was the quick response.

"What information have you to give?"

"None. My information is for sale."

"Very good. I'll buy it if it is worth anything."

"I knew you would. That's why I followed you. You told the barkeep that you are a reporter?"

"I did."

"Too thin! Not by no means!"

"How do you know that I am not a reporter?"

"Them diamonds is too white," replied the crook.

Mr. Mitchel blushed and thought of how he would have guyed Mr. Barnes in such a predicament. That he should have made a claim the falsity of which had been so readily discerned by a member of that class whose intelligence he had always held to be so poor disturbed his vanity. Evidently it would be necessary to be more alert if he should pursue this investigation. Turning to his companion with more respect, he said:

"Well, then, if a am not a reporter, what am I, since you are so smart?"

"No offense, I'm sure," was the reply. "I got on to you; that's all. I ain't very fly, but I ain't such a chump as that barkeep. Why, he asked if you was a detective, an anybody with half an eye could see you didn't belong to that set. But you ain't no reporter neither. I'll tell you what you are. You're a gentleman, one of the real sort. What you're up to in this section is none of my business only as I can give you tips in exchange for cash."

"Yes, but what information have you to impart which you think I would care to buy?"

"Well, the fact is, I guess, if you're after anything special I ain't in it. But I say if you'd like to see a sight as would make the old man in Mulberry street open his eyes I'm your guide."

"Speak more plainly."

"Say, would you mind turnin round an walkin the other way? That duck over there lookin so innocent into that cigar store is a detec in plain clothes. He ain't seen me yet, an I'd rather he wouldn't."

"I thought you had done nothing to make you fear the police," said Mr. Mitchel, turning, however, and retracing his steps.

"Neither have I, but then, you see, by this time tomorrow I might want to prove I was in Jersey City today. You can never tell, an it would be awkward for that chap to swear he'd seen me down here. See? But about this little circus. I s'pose you know that since the Lexow committee cleared up things this town's been run like a Sunday school—all the gamblin places shut up tight, with rooms to let, eh? Well, s'pose I could take you to a place where there was just the fanciest kind of a layout—faro, poker, roulette, everything. How would that strike you?"

"I would not give 10 cents to visit such a place."

"Wait a minute, mister. There's more. S'pose I was to tell you that the place was run on a steamboat; that we do a moonlight excursion down the bay to cover up tracks. How then?"

"Seven sharp, foot of Jay street. Good place for a crowd like ours, eh?"

"If your statement is true, it is interesting, of course, but I'm not connected with the police, and the arrest of such people is nothing to me."

"I guess you're straight enough," said the crook in an odd tone, and it dawned upon Mr. Mitchel that the fellow had been sounding him for fear that, after all, he might be a detective. His replies had been so honestly made that even Slippery Sam was satisfied, for in lower tones he added:

"I didn't think you'd care for that, but I calculate you're lookin into crime as a kind of study. Am I right?"

"You are," said Mr. Mitchel, admiring the fellow's astuteness.

"Good!" said the crook. "Then I've got you. What do you say to attendin a lecture on crime to an audience of crooks?"

"And who is to deliver the lecture?"

"Why, Preacher Jim, we call him. He's the longest headed, smartest, bravest an squarest crook in New York city." He spoke with evident admiration. "I tell you, it makes me feel mean offerin to sneak you into this lecture, but if I wasn't sure you wouldn't make use of what you'll see to git some of the boys in quod I'd cut my heart out first or yours." For a moment he looked vicious enough to carry out his threat upon the spot, but in a moment he had resumed his suave tone and continued: "But what's a man to do when he ain't got a nickel to his name an he meets a gent as easy to get money out of as you are? I tell you the temptation's too much for Slippery Sam."

Mr. Mitchel laughed heartily at this estimate of himself and then said:

"Yes, my man, you have now offered me something for which I am willing to pay liberally. Where is this lecture to be delivered and when?"

"You won't have long to wait, 'cause it's tonight. The place is the steamboat I spoke of, the floatin gamblin palace. The B. S. U.'s have chartered the boat for tonight."

"And who are the B. S. U.'s?"

"The Burglars' Social union. Sounds like a queer society to you, don't it? Well, it's queerer than you think. Oh, you'll have a good time for your money!"

"I suppose I shall need some special dress in order not to excite suspicion. Shall I not?"

"Not a bit of it. Say, mister, you never made a bigger mistake in your life. Why, if you was to go to masqueradin in clothes you ain't accustomed to you'd give yourself away in ten minutes. I tell you, the crowd on that boat tonight'll have brains, an you want to keep cool. No, sir; dress natural, an you'll feel natural, an as you'll feel you'll act. Say, do you know it's the funniest notion folks has—them as don't know, I mean—that a thief dresses different from other people? Why should he, now? Tell me that. Why, if he did, wouldn't everybody be on to him in a second? Well, I guess!"

"Very true. But would it not be best not to wear such expensive clothing? And then my diamonds. They attracted your attention, you know."

"Oh, there'll be just as good clothes there an just as good diamonds! But, then, as you ain't a regular crook—no offense meant—why, I guess you'd better leave your best stones at home. There's some men so mean they'd rob the dead, much less a brother crook. Of course you've got to pass for a thief. You don't mind that?"

"No; not at all," replied Mr. Mitchel, laughing. "And now where shall we meet?"

"Seven sharp, foot of Jay street. Good place for a crowd like ours, eh?" He laughed at his own feeble wit, and his hand closed eagerly over a ten dollar bill which Mr. Mitchel handed to him. "A tenner! Pretty good for a start. T'anks. I knew you was the genuine article the minute I spotted you. Well, so long! Jay street, 7 sharp." And Slippery Sam disappeared into a byway so quickly that Mr. Mitchel wondered as he walked on how the police ever caught him at all.

CHAPTER V.

THE ETHICS OF HONEST THIEVERY.

Promptly at 7 o'clock Mr. Mitchel was at the appointed place, where he waited long enough to begin to doubt that Slippery Sam would keep his tryst, when suddenly that worthy appeared at his side, like a sprite in a pantomime. Evidently he enjoyed the trick of stepping forth from places of concealment, for he chuckled at the surprise which he created and remarked:

"Excuse, me mister, but I've got my reputation to keep up. See?"

"Ah, yes, of course!" replied Mr. Mitchel, remembering the fellow's name. "Well, you see I have come. Are you still willing to take me to this meeting of your friends?"

"Why, cert! What am I here for? You follow me, an all I've got to say is keep your eyes peeled an your mouth shut, an you won't git into no trouble. By the way, what line are you in?"

"What line am I in? Oh! You mean what sort of crime is my specialty?"

"You're fly, mister. You see, you've got to be introduced, an we'd better fix up your trade before we git started, so's to have no slips."

"Well, then," said Mr. Mitchel, slightly amused at his anomalous position, "as an expert, what would you advise? What sort of crook do I look most like?"

"That's the trouble," said Sam, scratching his head by way of assisting thought. "You look so much like the genuine gentleman it's hard to place you. Say, I've got it, by ginger! You're a bank note engraver; that's what you are—regular trade, I mean, but you do an occasional job with the queer, an you've never been spotted yet. See? That's why you ain't known out of your own private circle. What's more, you've just dropped in to hear the lecture, but you ain't lookin for no new pals, nor you ain't extendin your operations into other lines. That's the ticket. That's as safe as a string. No inquisitive questions answered an no new friends desired."

"Very good. But how do I happen to know you?"

"Oh, me! Oh, as to me—that's simple! One of your pals is up the river for carelessness in changin a bill. I met him, an he give me a message to you when I come out. I'm hard up, an you're stakin me till I git on easy street. How does that strike you?"

The insidious naivete of the latter part of this answer tickled Mr. Mitchel's fancy, and he laughed aloud as he replied:

Summer Clearing Sale of Odds & Ends In China.

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly — in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

Atfer The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices. Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen for, we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

"CURED TO STAY"

Is the universal testimony for South American Nervine, and what it did for Mrs. Armstrong it will do for any woman living.

"For one who has suffered as I have for over six years from nervous prostration, and having spent nearly all I possessed in doctor bills without any permanent relief, you can imagine what a God-sent blessing I feel South American Nervine has been to me. The first few doses gave me great relief. It took six bottles in all to cure me, but I feel I am cured to stay cured." —Mrs. Geo. Armstrong, Orillia, Ont. 58

Literary Notes.

COURAGE THE ENEMY OF DISEASE.

The way to avoid contagion is to keep the mind pure and sweet, having due regard also for the body. Cultivate optimism and hopefulness and avoid gloomy thoughts and forebodings. Seek the society of those who are buoyant and helpful and if at any time you are overtaken with the realization that your lot is not what it should be, think of the condition of many who are not so fortunate as yourself, who are suffering from actual want.

The woman who would avoid microbes will not fear them. Courage and the consciousness of right living and high thinking are the enemies of disease.—Editorial in Madame for August.

The up-to-date character of the Methodist Magazine and Review is shown in many of the articles in the August number. There is a comprehensive and well-illustrated one on "Japan in War Time," and another on "The Morocco Crisis," with map and numerous engravings. A very well-illustrated article is on "Pioneering in British Columbia." A strong article on "Church Union," by the late Principal Grant, is reprinted. Current Comment and other articles make up a very attractive number. Toronto: William Briggs. Montreal, C. W. Coates. Halifax: S. F. Huestis. $2.00 a year; $1.00 for six months.

HER WILD BARBARIAN.

An Additional Instance Wherein the Unexpected Happily Came to Pass—Canadian Story by Grant Allen.

"You see the child has spent most of her life at one of those trading posts somewhere in the Northwest—her father is agent or factor or whatever you call 'em—and he is sending her to me for her first real taste of civilization. She is in all probability a perfect little barbarian, but I must do what I can for her, of course, and I thought, with your usual good nature, you'd help me all you could, Fritz."

Young Mrs. Landers look appealingly at the big, goodlooking fellow on the other side of the fireplace.

"When Jack read the letter," she went on, "the first thing he said was, 'Well, here's where Fritz Mendell fits in, all right,' and while it wasn't exactly a nice way of putting it, it expressed my own ideas in the matter thoroughly. You'll help me, Fritz?"

Fritz Mendell grinned good-naturedly.

"My dear Agatha," he said, "as always, I'm yours to command. Now, a few points about your—er—barbarian. First and foremost, in what stage of evolution is she? Is it candy age or the matinee age with her?"

"She is nineteen," said Mrs. Landers.

"Good-looking or otherwise?"

"I know nothing about her, Fritz, save that she is nineteen and has spent most of her life at one of those absurd posts. I believe she was educated in a convent."

"Ah, probably speaks patois French."

"Possibly."

"And carries a skinning knife in her belt."

"Don't be absurd."

"And has wild black eyes and wears moccasins and enjoys a diet of caribou venison and bear steak."

"Fritz!"

"It's good strategy not to be taken by surprise," he commented. "I'll do my best, Agatha. When does the aboriginal maid arrive?"

"Tuesday, sometimes."

"All right, I'll be around about five to view the exhibit. If she isn't too impossible, I'll do the honors, but I reserve the right to fly the field, should circumstances, in my poor opinion, seem to warrant such a course."

"Fritz, you're a dear.

"Agatha, don't attempt to repay me by repeating these delicate, but well-known truths. Of course I am.

• • • • •

The clocks were just chiming five the following Tuesday afternoon, when Mendell rang the Landers' bell.

"Is she in the library?" he inquired of Jenkins who opened the door. It is needless to state that he referred to Mrs. Landers.

"Yes, sir. In the library, sir," said the obsequious Jenkins as he took Mendell's hat and coat.

Fritz strode briskly through the drawing-room, and flinging aside the leather portiers, entered the library.

The winter twilight was fading, and the fire on the hearth having burned to a bed of glowing coals, the room was quite dark. Mendell could but dimly make the woman seated on a broad divan. He sank into a big carved chair by the table.

"Hello, Agatha," he said cheerfully, "has she arrived?"

"Yes," came the response from the divan. It was much lower than Agatha's normal voice.

"Got a cold?" he inquired solicitously.

"Nothing serious."

"Where's our young barbarian?"

"She's in the house."

"Hm-m," Fritz mused. "I judge from you somewhat brief replies that the worst is realized."

"The worst?"

"Yes. Our worst fears of the other day, you know—that she might speak the horrible patois—"

"Oh!"

"And have wild, black eyes and moccasined feet and carry a sharp skinning knife in her belt habitually."

"Oh!"

"And insist on venison and bear steak."

The "Oh" that greeted this was decidedly reproachful, but Fritz heeded it not.

"Pretty?" he questioned.

"Frightfully plain."

"I feel an incipient stampede brewing with me," he assured her. "Is she utterly impossible, Agatha?"

"Utterly."

"Well trot her out, and let me sanction your decision anyway," he said.

She rose from the divan and touched a button on the wall. The room was suddenly flooded with light. Fritz Mendell came out of the chair with a mighty bound. He was face to face with a pretty, graceful girl in a stunning gown. And as he beheld her, the truth flashed upon him.

"Lord massy!" he groaned with more contriteness than he imagined could be squeezed into words.

The girl's face was flushed scarlet, but her eyes were laughing at his discomfiture.

"It was mean of me," she said "frightfully mean! Cousin Agatha said when she went out that Mr. Mendell might come at any moment—and you came, and the temptation was too great. Can you forgive me?"

And then Fritz laughed—a wholesome, ringing laugh, and held out his hand.

"But for Heaven's sake," he cautioned, "don't let Agatha get hold of this."

• • • • •

One dripping night in the early spring Fritz and the barbarian sat before the same library fireplace.

"When may I tell Cousin Agatha about that first meeting of ours?" she asked.

"When you're Mrs. Fritz Mendell," he said gravely.

"I—I don't know but what it's worth it," she said mockingly.

Fritz was by her side in a trice.

"And you know you will want to tell her soon—by June at the latest," he pleaded.—Grant Allen.

STRIPPING OLD QUEBEC.

Antique Household Utensils Are Fast Disappearing From the Province.

Antiquity is fast becoming one of the chief gods of the ancient city of Quebec, but it is a sad thing to observe that reverence for the remnants of bygone days usually settles on how much an article will represent in gold. An old copper kettle, in which the hammer-beats and the brazing of the early blacksmith can be readily detected is esteemed, not so much as a sample of a changing art and oftentimes marvellous skill, but as something worth more in the curiosity shop than in the junk shop. Happily, however, there is something to induce a preservation of these things, even if eventually the rarest specimens find a way into foreign museums or the homes of wealthy tourists. Old brass, old copper, old pewter, old earthenware—these are the things that are being gathered in, and it is safe to say that within a very few years the Dominion will be stripped of the unappreciated homely relics that Canadians should prize next, almost, to their nationality. The day of the grease dip, the candle pan, the old brass snuffers, the huge brass knockers, the log fireplace, the iron crane, the swinging kettle, is gone, but from musty garrets and century-old kitchens the evidences of an earlier civilization are being brought to light. Now the beaten metal that decorated the living room a hundred years ago finds an honored place in the best parlors.

The big search for curiosities in the Province of Quebec began three or four years ago, encouraged purely as a commercial undertaking by wealthy tourists passing through the ancient capital. Huge hand-made cauldrons of brass or copper, that had been regarded as so much scrap, splendidly modelled brass demijohns and kettles of all sizes and shapes, slipped through the fingers of the original and unappreciative owners and passed over to those who really should prize them least. An old metal kettle, dented and covered with verdigris and smut, is a very different thing from the old metal kettle, burnished and sparkling, showing the marks of a rude yet artful craft, and giving evidence of its years in the apparent methods of its production. So articles picked up by the gatherers for 25 cents are cleaned, placed in a shop window and marked three or five or ten dollars, as the case may be. Very rare specimens, of course, sell for more or less, according to the knowledge of the persons who handle them.

Being of itself an attraction for tourists, the city of Quebec has become a distributing point for curiosities. Numerous shops have been established for the purpose, and during the summer season places for the sale of this ware appear with little more accommodation than the ordinary candy stand. Every shop of any consequence maintains a staff of collectors, who scour the countryside for their stock-in-trade. It is becoming more and more difficult all the time to get the goods, because the owners are awakening to the fact that they hold something to which a sentimental value is attached. The quest for brass and copper has given way in a measure to a search for the products of old English or "habitant" potteries long out of existence. Old delft is in good demand, and a dealer will ask ten dollars for an odd platter or two dollars for a willow-patterned plate with the same grace as the baker asks five cents for a small loaf. A connoisseur may pay five or fifty dollars for a rare piece, according to his taste and means, and oftentimes according to the impression he makes on the seller. The dealers in antiquities here estimate the style of their patrons with great skill, and their prices fluctuate accordingly. As a rule the stuff does not cost them much, so the price depends on the customer. Grandfather clocks and spinning wheels are by no means neglected, and it is the boast of one dealer that clocks having no claims of antiquity or uniqueness, and fit only for kindling wood, sell readily to American visitors for five dollars each.

The observation "Distant hills look green" seems to apply in this connection, for while the collectors have scoured the outlying districts they apparently have neglected the opportunities that lie within sight. A recent visitor to Quebec before going a mile from the city procured from a habitant on the verge of the century mark twenty-three pieces of long-used delft for what had been asked for one piece of a similar kind in the city. The regrettable part of this trade is that most of the best specimens are leaving the country. After a while, when it is too late, Canadians will awaken to their lost opportunities.

Stages of the Dandelion.

The violet is fragrant,
  And beautiful the rose;
But close to human nature
  The dandelion grows.

In youth its clustered ringlets,
  With golden brilliants burn,
And then, despite all hair dye
  To scanty silver turn.

The three-score-ten of flowers
  Comes with relentless fate,
Then sadly it exhibits
  A bald and shining pate.

Death of the Sun.

Among the Ojibway Indians, who once occupied the lands about the great lakes in Canada, the sun, moon and stars were all objects of worship, for the red man was in his own way a decidedly religious person. At dawn the old chief and warriors chanted the praises of the sun, and at nightfall they thanked him for the light and heat with which he had supplied them during the day. An eclipse of the sun filled them with dismay. That event was looked on as his death, and they were then very anxious about his safety. They used to fasten bits of live coal to the points of their arrows and shoot them into the air in order that the expiring sun might be relighted. As for the moon, it was equally precious. They reckoned their months by it. Their children were forbidden to point at it with their finger lest it should be bitten off.

BATTLE OF LUNDY'S LANE.

YESTERDAY, JULY 25, WAS THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE FIERCE FIGHT.

Yesterday was the anniversary of the Battle of Lundy's Lane, which was fought in 1814. The Americans had 5,000 of their best troops and nine guns engaged; the British had 1600 men and five guns until 9 o'clock at night, when two more guns and 1200 men joined in such utter darkness that friend and foe were mingled fatally in some instances.

The 1200 men (British) and two guns had been nine hours on the march before they had joined in the dark. This was, in fact, the most steady, hard fought action of the whole campaign in Upper Canada, as was proved by the excessive slaughter, by Gen. Riall having been wounded and taken prisoner by the British commander. Gen. Drummond having been seriously wounded, and by the two American generals, Brown and Scott, having been so disabled that their command devolved upon Gen. Ripley.

The Americans claim this as a victory. It was a strange sort of victory for them, for the British recaptured their artillery with two companies of the Forty-first under Capt. Glen, who attacked their rear guard whilst the British army remained on the field during the night and Gen. Ripley retired to his camp in the direction of Chippewa. Next morning he retreated towards Fort Erie, which he fortified for a siege, and was replaced by Gen. Gaines. The British disposed of all the dead, friend and foe, on the following day, July 26.

The British loss was 870 killed and wounded; the American loss was 930, and 300 taken prisoners.

CHANGES IN MILITIA.

BRITISH OFFICER, WHO HAS SERVED IN CANADA, THINKS BORDEN'S SCHEME WON'T DO.

London, July 12.—Military circles in London are discussing the changes that Sir Frederick Borden proposes for the reform of the Canadian militia. The idea of the post of General Officer Commanding being replaced by a militia council of seven, composed of four military men, two civilians and one minister, is regarded by the British officer as entirely impracticable. A correspondent had a conversation with an English officer, who once served in Canada, at the United Service Club yesterday, and, while he did not wish his name to be used, he did not hesitate to give his opinion.

"I do not see how the militia can be reorganized upon a sound basis by any such body," he said. "The abolition of the General Officer Commanding and the substitution of a committee of seven will hurt discipline; it will introduce the political and civil element too much into military matters; it will break that perfect chain of responsibility which is necessary for any military force or department to have.

"Let the G. O. C. be a Canadian by all means, if you will, but do not abolish the post. You have some efficient men out there. Use them, instead of demoralizing the militia by putting it under a mixed committee of civilians and officers."

Miss Carre Has Graduated.

Miss Daisy Carre, daughter of Henry Carre, C.E., completed her course of training in St. Luke's Hospital, Ottawa, on the 22nd inst. Four months' course was taken in the Isolation Hospital and four in the Maternity, the remainder being in St. Luke's General. Miss Carre was just leaving the institution and had accepted an invitation from a former patient of the hospital to take a well-earned rest and change at Norway Bay, when a lady from Belleville begged her to remain and nurse her daughter through a trifling ailment. "Duty first and pleasure after," so Miss Carre concluded to accept the case, and the uniform was unpacked and nurse and patient quickly established in St. Luke's. It was a strange coincidence that Miss Carre's first "case" should be that of an acquaintance from her old home in Belleville, and she thinks that if all her work could be as easy and pleasant as in this case she would find it a very charming task to nurse the sick.

WITH CRICK IN THE BACK

You are up against a whole lot of trouble unless you have a strong remedy like Nerviline to settle pain and dislodge stiffness from the muscles and joints. Just rub Nerviline on the painful spot—not much rubbing, because Nerviline has more power than ordinary remedies. You won't suffer long after Nerviline is applied, for it relieves almost instantly. Mr. Philip Adams, of Oakland, says, "If I hadn't used Nerviline I guess my back would be stiff yet. A few applications of Nerviline took out all the soreness and stiffness. I can recommend Nerviline for any kind of muscular pain, also for rheumatism. Price 25c.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

(The Globe.)

Of official news from the front this morning there is scarcely a word. Despatches to the Government of the United States, however, and to the Chinese Government indicate that on Sunday the Russian non-combatants left Newchang, and that yesterday morning the Russian garrison began to destroy all material that could not be carried away upon the evacuation of the city. The railway section of the city was burned with the object, no doubt, of preventing the Japanese using the workshops and rolling stock. The occupation of Newchwang by the Japanese probably took place last night, as it would be rather a serious thing to leave the foreign residents over night in a city given up to anarchy.

The battles of Saturday and Sunday in the vicinity of Newchwang evidently resulted in a Russian retreat toward Liaoyang, which seems to be the rallying point for the various detachments of Kuropatkin's army driven in by the Japanese. The fighting was of a desperate nature, and London morning paper despatches say the losses on both sides were very serious. The Japanese front was fifteen miles in extent.

Not a word comes from Port Arthur, which might as well be on the planet Mars for all we hear of it. The Russians were able to get despatches from the beleaguered city so long as they held the Liao River, but that channel of communication is now closed. The Japanese give no indication of the progress they are making. It seems probable that the sailors and marines of the fleet in Port Arthur are now doing duty on the land defences, and that this explains the cessation of sorties from the harbor and naval operations generally.

The Vladivostok squadron is doing most effective work for Russia. It has captured several important ships and sunk at least one British vessel, the Knight Commander, from New York and Shanghai for Yokohama. The Russians seem to be quite sure she was carrying contraband of war. The owners protest the opposite, and the case is one for the prize courts and diplomatic negotiations. The crew was put on board of a steamer that landed the men at Yokohama yesterday. The Knight Commander had passengers who were detained by the Russians.

REV. MARK GUY PEARCE.

CLEVER AND GRACEFUL SKETCH OF THE NOTED AND KINDLY DIVINE.

(Francis Daor, in Montreal Herald)

A large man with a kindly face, strong featured and earnest, with a certain humor withal, is this Mark Guy Pearce. His name is familiar to Montrealers. More than once has he spoken in our city, and seats have always been filled by those who came to hear him.

Last night was no exception. This London preacher, with his slight English accent, his marked personality, so long associated with the beloved Hugh Price Hughes, seems to have an attraction about him that draws all men to him.

He does not talk over the heads of his listeners, and he teaches an every-day Christianity. He knows life as he has studied it in the slums of London, and has realized the need of a practical religion, a gospel for the people.

He told the gathering of St. James last night the story of the fishermen, the toilers, the toilers of the sea, in whose boat Christ slept and upon whom the fierce storm broke and frightened. How, Christ had wakened and stilled the waves, with his "Peace, be still." He drew the picture of the sleeping Master, so human in His weariness, so like all human kind who get tired. He told them that it was a human Christ, who had a message for humanity in its daily work and sorrow.

"You come to church to hear about Him," said Rev. Mr. Pearce. "Do not go away without Him." The religion that did not last through the week, was not the religion of the Master, who had taught that faith which penetrated all daily duties.

A human Christ for humanity, is the keynote to Rev. Mr. Pearce's preaching. He draws his illustrations from homely bits of every-day life and experience, and he draws them cleverly. He is interesting. What is more he is sincere. He pleases the people, for his religion includes all of them.

The people who filled the church to the doors listened attentively, and even seemed regardless of the heat of the evening. When they came out they spoke appreciatively of the man and his words to them. Everyday people understand philosophy based on every-day facts. The world needs an every-day religion, based on every-day life. So the people appreciate a man who preaches an every-day gospel in every-day language. It ensures interested audiences to Mr. Pearce so long as he preaches to his people, not above them. It ensures a lasting welcome from his listeners.

DELICATE BOYS AND GIRLS

Are altogether too numerous. Our schools are full of them. Chances are your own children are weaklings. It's a shame so many children grow up without health when they could be made strong by Ferrozone, the best tonic growing boys and girls can take. Ferrozone invigorates the whole body, helps digestion, makes the blood pure and rich. It supplies more nourishment than children can get in any other way and soon establishes a reserve of force and energy. Give your children Ferrozone and watch them grow strong. Price 50c per box.

Sports and Pastimes

SPORTING NOTES.

Ald. Ketcheson and ex-Ald. Pope yesterday had excellent sport trout fishing. They caught a number of fine ones.

A crusade against steeple-chasing has been started in the United States, owing to the large number of fatal accidents, and the sport may be stopped.

Ed. Barrow, lately with Detroit, may again manage the Toronto baseball club.

In the yacht races at Kingston the Whirl, of Toronto, won in the 20-foot class, the Neola of Oswego in the 30-foot, and the Vreda, of Toronto, showed the way to the first-raters. The Petrel II. captured the prize for 25-footers.

St. Catharines beat Buffalo at golf, by a score of 15 to 3.

The Capitals of Ottawa will surely be professionalized by the N.A.L.A. This move will be far-reaching, as many of the Caps are members of the hockey team which holds the Stanley cup.

Lou Dillon, driven to wagon by her owner, Mr. Billings, trotted a mile in 2.05 1-4 at Detroit yesterday.

FOOT ELM.

THE GREAT FOOT DOCTOR.

Hundreds of delighted people in all parts of the Dominion speak in glowing terms of Foot Elm, and no wonder. Some of these people had to change their stockings 2 or 3 times daily from excessive and offensive sweating of the feet. Now, after using Foot Elm, their feet are healthy and one pair of stockings will last them for days. Druggists sell it.

BRITAIN URGED TO ACT.

To What Purpose Does Britain Maintain a Large Navy.

London, July 26.—Answering half a dozen questions based on the seizure of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Malacca and other ships by Russian volunteer fleet steamers, Premier Balfour in the House of Commons yesterday, after referring to the diverse character of the questions, went on to say:

"The difficulties, I may say great difficulties, I do not wish to minimize them, arising from these captures deal with a problem which has given and is still giving the Government great anxiety, but of which I may say the signs portend a favorable issue. More than that, I think it would be inexpedient to say."

Situation Still Grave.

The British Cabinet will meet again to-day to consider the case of the steamer Knight Commander and the general situation arising from the action of the Russian warships.

The report of the captain of the Malacca was presented at the foreign office yesterday, and the demand of the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Co. for compensation will probably be considered.

The London newspapers this morning consider that Premier Balfour's statement in the House of Commons proves that the situation is still exceedingly grave, and they insist that the Government shall act promptly in demanding an explanation of the Knight Commander incident, which is characterized by The Daily Graphic as an outrage of the most gratuitous and barbarous kind.

The Morning Post, in an ironic editorial, asks to what purpose Great Britain maintains a large navy, if such things are to be permitted?

FALL ELECTION SIGNS

Supplementary Estimates Supply Evidence in This Direction.

Total Amount Asked For By the Government Is Nearly $75,000,000 For the Year—Sir Richard Cartwright Admits That the Railways Own Express Companies—Pte. Perry Formally Thanked For the Honor Brought to Canada.

Ottawa, July 26.—Autumnal elections are foreshadowed in supplementary estimates amounting to $11,839,270, which were brought down by the Minister of Finance last night. This brings the total estimates for the year up to $74,774,608, of which $12,692,104 is chargeable to capital and $62,082,504 to consolidated fund. Few places in the list of applicants for Government assistance seem to have been neglected.

The Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal gets $250,000 for a survey for waterway. No less than $2,850,700 is appropriated for the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway. Of this amount about three-quarters of a million is revote. The Trent Valley Canal gets $300,000.

In a discussion in the House yesterday it came out that the cattle guard commission cost $6,943, and what Mr. Holt, who was paid $150 a month and actual traveling expenses, wanted $1,000 more. Nothing was accomplished by the commission.

A long discussion took place over the use and abuse of private cars by members of the Government, and it came out that Sir William Mulock went to Mexico in one that cost $20,000.

When the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce were up, Sir Richard Cartwright stated unreservedly that the express companies were owned by the railways, and W. F. Maclean promptly put in an oar to induce the Minister to join in bringing express companies under the Railway Commission. Mr. Maclean also advocated a first-class express system in connection with the Government railways.

The honor which Private Perry won for Canada on the Bisley ranges was formally acknowledged by the House yesterday, and eulogistic speeches were made by Sir Fred. Borden, Col. Sam Hughes, Hon. W. S. Fielding and W. F. Maclean.

JUDGMENT RESERVED.

Dr. Henderson and A. W. Cockburn Heard in Their Defence.

North Bay, July 26.—The bribery charges brought out by John Bidgood of the National Hotel, Sudbury, against Dr. James Henderson of Warren and A. W. Cockburn of Sturgeon Falls, were given a hearing before Commissioner Gordon in the court house here yesterday.

"The second time I ever saw Bidgood," said Dr. Henderson, "he took me through his house and ended up by handing me an envelope. I returned it to him immediately, and he gave it back, and I kept it. I found out later it contained $125. Bidgood did not ever say anything about the money, and neither did I. After Detective Rogers interviewed Bidgood he came east to see Cockburn and myself. Bidgood wired us to keep silent."

"Ten minutes after I was introduced to Jack the Ripper," said Cockburn, "we were standing in a passage between the postoffice of Sturgeon Falls and the next building. He placed an envelope in my hands and said it contained $75. I never took the money out, and returned it some time afterwards."

John Bidgood, in contradicting the evidence given in Sudbury last week, stated he had given $125 to Henderson and $75 to Cockburn. The envelope which contained the money received from Cockburn was not the same as that in which he had given the bills to Cockburn.

The Commissioner reserved judgment.

TRIBUTE TO LOU SCHOLES.

Dowered With a City's Tribute in Miles of Salute, Cheers and Acclaim—20,000 in Queen's Park.

Toronto, July 26.—If "one crowded hour of glorious life is worth an age without a name," Toronto is rolling up the debt of ages rapidly, and there are some more still in prospect. Probably so young a man never before received such a magnificent ovation, and if for no other reason yesterday's reception to Lou Scholes, winner of the Diamond Sculls, amateur rowing champion of the world, may be historic. The city spoke for the nation, and there is not a township in the Dominion, not a spot where the wine runs or the lagging post bears its message, but sympathetic hearts will thrill to know that the city of the people gave her warmest welcome from her own heart, and from the heart of the Dominion, to the latest home-coming hero of Canada. Not mere village conceit inspired the enthusiastic pageantry of the occasion, but the consciousness that Lou Scholes had added another lustre to the Maple Leaf of the two oceans.

The Welcome at Buffalo.

At Buffalo, when the Toronto-bound party arrived, they were taken in hand by Sheriff Harry Kaiser, Duncan McLeod and John D. Kammon, entertained at breakfast and then driven around the city.

When the train reached Lewiston Lou got a great welcome from the railway and customs officials there, as well as from the number of tourists awaiting the boat.

Corona Was Crowded.

The Coronna presented a pretty spectacle as she approached the dock. The decks were alive with a gaily dressed crowd, flags and bunting waved and the Highlanders' band struck up the strain that everybody wanted to hear—"See, the Conquering Hero Comes." Lou, looking rather embarrassed at the friendly ordeal that he was to face, strode down the wharf stairway bearing the oars with which he had pulled to victory, and modestly bowed acknowledgment of the cheers.

Several hundred people had taken advantage of the special trip to welcome the home-comer, and E. F. Clarke, M.P., and J. J. Foy, K.C., also delighted to do honor. Lou also received the congratulations of his sisters, the Misses Scholes, and Mrs. Lewis, Mrs. Jack Scholes and of Miss Tozer, his charming betrothed. At Niagara-on-the-Lake a big crowd at the wharf cheered itself hoarse.

In Toronto Bay.

The aquatic feature of the civic reception was a success. Viewed from the Corona, the flotilla of steam craft, yachts and small boats of various kinds, decked with flags, had a fine appearance. The small gun on the Cruiser boomed out a salute, which was taken up on the steam whistles of the Chippewa, Lakeside and several other boats, while the occupants of all raised their voices in cheers and song. The band played patriotic airs, and then drifted softly into the strains of "Home Sweet Home," in which many joined in the singing.

When the Parade Started.

Nearly an hour was spent at the wharf while salutations were exchanged and congratulations given. The crowd meanwhile grew denser, and it was with difficulty that a narrow lane was preserved by the police.

By 6 o'clock the procession got under way, the official program being honored in the breach. Mr. Scholes and his father came first, and the champion was generally recognized, a storm of cheers greeting him all the way up to Queen street. Beyond this the cheering was gusty and fitful, bursting out from time to time, where men were more thickly gathered. The ladies were everywhere, and waved their good wishes in dainty lace and lawn.

In the Park.

Arrived at Queen's Park there was a demonstration round the pavilion. Fifteen or twenty thousand people surrounded the enclosure, and representative people of all classes mingled with the throng. Acting Mayor Ramsden made the presentation of a cabinet of silver on behalf of the city and read the address. Lou made a very modest reply. Ald. Jones, Coatsworth, Hay, Ned Hanlan, John F. Scholes, the champion's father, Mulqueen, his trainer, Ed. Durnan, and E. F. Clarke, M.P. This closed the speaking and the public functions, and then the champion and his family went home.

Still After Cordasco.

Montreal, July 26.—Judge Winchester took more evidence yesterday in the Italian cases. A letter was read addressed to Superintendent Burns of the C.P.R., showing that Mr. Cordasco had begged leave to exact fees from the men, giving as a reason that he did not receive a regular salary from the company. Other witnesses were examined, and testified that Cordasco had stated that he was ready to give work to any number of Italians at $1.50 a day.

Long, Bitter Fight.

Chicago, July 26.—With all peace negotiations broken off and with all the allied trades unions employed at the different plants, with the exception of the teamsters and the stationary engineers, out on strike in sympathy with the butcher workers, who quit work two weeks ago, the stock yards strike last night has settled down to what promises to be a long, bitter fight.

Railway Taxation Commission.

Toronto, July 26.—Secretary Wilkinson of the Railway Taxation Committee is in his office again. H. J. Pettypiece, M.P.P., is expected to-day. Prof. Adam Shortt went home direct to Kingston, and Judge Bell also returned home. The Commission will start out again next Monday for Augusta, Maine, Boston and New York.

Olive Kidd Drowned.

Peterboro, July 26.—The first drowning accident of the year occurred here last evening about ten o'clock. The Charlotte street Church Young Men's Guild ran a moonlight excursion down the river by the steamer North Star, and when about five miles from town Olive Kidd, the 15-year-old daughter of J. B. Kidd of this town, fell overboard and was drowned. She was the only child. Mr. Kidd is superintendent of the Sunday School and a prominent citizen. The body was not found up to midnight.

H. Kribs Scalded.

Hespeler, July 26.—Henry Kribs, brother to William A. Kribs, M.P.P., was badly scalded yesterday morning through the bursting of the six-inch pipe which conveys steam from the boilers to the engine at the R. Forbes Co.'s mills. Portions of his clothing were torn off so great was the force of the steam as the pipe carried a pressure of 115 pounds. As yet the extent of Mr. Kribs' injuries could not be ascertained.

On the Way to the Hague.

Clarens, Switzerland, July 26.—The body of the late President Kruger was placed on board a train yesterday, bound for The Hague. The funeral car was decorated with flags and flowers, and the coffin was covered with the flag of the late Transvaal Republic.

MEN'S DISEASES

There is seldom a day that we are not consulted in regard to a condition that, if we were to have seen it in its early stages, the sufferer would have been relieved, cured and saved considerable expense. This we consider is due to lack of knowledge on the part of the doctor who has previously treated the case; therefore, we say to you, if you are suffering from any disease or condition peculiar to men, or if you have been a victim and been disappointed in not getting a permanent cure elsewhere, we would ask that you come to our office for personal examination or write us for a Question Blank for Home Treatment. We will explain to you OUR SYSTEM OF TREATMENT, which we have originated and developed after our whole life's experience in the treatment of special diseases of men. We will give you, FREE OF CHARGE, an honest and scientific opinion of your case. If we find you are incurable we will honestly tell you so. If we find your case curable we will give you a written guarantee to cure you or refund your money.

Abandoned Children to Wolves.

Edmonton, N.W.T., July 27.—Sergeant McLeod, Fort Chippewan, arrived in town on Saturday in charge of an Indian prisoner, charged with abandoning his two children, a boy four year old, and a girl under two at Fond du Lack on Lake Athabasca. When the children were missed by neighbors a search was made, and they were found to have been devoured by wolves, only their clothing remaining. Sentence of two years' imprisonment was passed by the judge.

Crushed to Death.

Port Arthur, July 27.—A fatal accident took place here yesterday when McNulty, the well-known engineer of West Superior, was instantly killed. Yesterday afternoon he was engaged in braking a moving car at West Fort William. The brakes slipped and the deceased fell down in front of the car. Two trucks of the car passed over him almost cutting him in two. He leaves a family in Duluth.

LOOKS LIKE A CRISIS IN THE RUSSO-JAPANESE WAR.

Kuropatkin's Army Seems to be Caught in a Trap.

Russian Retreat to Haicheng Apparently Means That Czar's Men Must Face Japanese in Pitched Battle—Japs Aim to Cut Off Railway Above Liaoyang—Monday Evening at 6 o'clock the Japanese Occupied Newchwang.

St. Petersburg, July 27.—Despatches just received by the War Office announce that the Russians have retreated to Haicheng.

They decided to withdraw from Tatchekiao Sunday evening. Gen. Stakelberg senior resolved to take this step, as the Japanese were turning the flank.

The Japanese forces are believed to include the whole of the armies of Generals Oku and Nodzu. More than seven divisions of Japanese are engaged. The rear guard action between Datchapu and Tatchekiao continued until 11 at night, when the Japanese were within sight of the Russian entrenchments. The Russians withdrew in perfect order, favored by moonlight.

Gen. Kuropatkin reports that the Japanese column in the vicinity of Saimatzsa, which is believed to be two divisions strong, is marching along the Valley of the Tatitse with the obvious aim of cutting the railroad above Liaoyang.

The evacuation of Tatchekiao was prepared for long ago by the Russians. The retirement is not regarded as materially altering the situation. The Russians had strongly fortified Haicheng in view of this contingency.

Japs Occupy Newchwang.

Tientsin, July 27.—The Japanese occupied Newchwang at 5 o'clock Thursday evening.

Lloyd's agent at Newchwang wires that fifty Japanese cavalrymen have entered Newchwang. The French flag is flying from all the Russian buildings. The town is quiet.

It is reported here that heavy fighting has occurred between Liaoyang and Mukden.

Japs Repulsed.

The Japanese attack on the centre of the Russian position was repulsed, but the Russians were ordered to retire Monday and occupy the heights five miles north of Tatchekiao. This movement was carried out in good order.

Lost Several Hundred.

St. Petersburg, July 27.—Gen. Kuropatkin's telegram recording the withdrawal of the southern army from Tatchekiao to Haicheng, fails to give details of the continuous rear-guard action preceding the retreat, but the war office thinks the losses were several hundred, which would indicate severe fighting.

It is stated that the Vladivostock squadron is now eastward of the Island of Formosa.

At Point of Bayonet.

Tientsin, July 27.—It is reported here that the Japanese lost 380 in killed and wounded in the fighting, which has taken place outside of Newchweng during the last two days. It is reported that the Japanese took the Russian position at Tatchekiao Monday night at the point of the bayonet.

Left For the Field.

Tokio, July 27.—The military attaches assigned to the third Japanese army left yesterday for the field. They will board a transport at Moji on Friday. The British attaches are Col. Apsley-Smith, Major Crawford and Captains Yates and Bannerman. The American attache is First Lieutenant Granville R. Fortescué.

Accused of Poisoning.

Mitchell, July 27.—P. P. Hamilton of Stratford acted as commissioner in taking the evidence of the invalid mother of Mrs. Jennie Wilson in the attempted cattle poisoning case. Mrs. Wilson was charged with sprinkling Paris green mixed with salt on the roadway near her house where the cattle of her neighbors, Mrs. Hodge and Mrs. Vivian, where feeding. Mrs. Hodge testified to having seen Mrs. Wilson scattering the stuff, and some of it having been analyzed as containing Paris green, the magistrate committed the accused for trial. Discovery of the deed was made in time to prevent the cattle eating the poison. The trial comes off Saturday next.

Good Swimmer But Drowns.

Toronto Junction, July 27.—News reached town yesterday that William H. Ives, eldest son of W. E. Ives, of this town, had been drowned at Breezes Island in Stoney Lake, near Lakefield. Deceased was a traveler for Robert Taylor, wholesale millinery, Toronto, and left on his vacation Monday for Peterboro, and no word had been heard from him, until the sad news came that he had taken cramps while in bathing and was drowned. The body was recovered during the afternoon and will be brought home for interment. Deceased was a good swimmer, and was only 21 years of age.

Scene Not Very Impressive.

The Hague, July 27.—The train bearing the body of the late President Kruger arrived yesterday. Large crowds were at the station. The Court Chamberlain, in the names of the Queen and the Prince Consort, laid on the coffin a beautiful wreath by a ribbon inscribed with their initials. The scene was not very impressive. Spectators some times raised their hats, but they smoked and bore an air of idle curiosity. The only sign of genuine sorrow observed was among the women.

Band of 52 Annihilated.

Salonica, July 27.—On Sunday last a detachment of troops near Kumanoga surprised a Bulgarian band of fifty-two men who were setting fire to the granaries. The band was destroyed, only two of the men escaping.

FINKLE AND HALL.

Appointed in Connection With G.T.R. Telegraphers' Arbitration.

Woodstock, July 27.—His Honor Judge Finkle of Oxford County, has been invited to act as chairman of the Labor Commission now being formed to investigate the present difficulties between the Grand Trunk Railway Co. and the telegraphers of the company. He has consented to act and has accepted the invitation.

Harvey Hall Named.

Ottawa, July 27.—Harvey Hall, an ex-conductor and ex-alderman of Toronto, who is at present living in Ottawa, will be the representative of the Grand Trunk telegraphers in the arbitration between themselves and the company.

Shepley to Assist.

Ottawa, July 27.—George Shepley, K.C., of Toronto, will represent the Grand Trunk Railway Company in the arbitration of the telegraphers' strike. Harvey Hall is the representative of the telegraphers. These two will select the third arbitrator.

GOOD-BYE, DUNDONALD.

The Earl of Dundonald, the ablest G.O.C. the Canadian Militia force has ever had, is about to leave Canada. He goes because he is an honest man and refused to close his eyes to the fact that the money of this country is being squandered for political purposes, under the cloak of the Militia Department. But he has earned the admiration of those in both political parties, who have in their minds the best interests of the country. He has been acclaimed on all sides. He is to receive further tributes from Canadians ere he bids "good-bye" to the land whose sons he led to victory on the hard fought fields of South Africa. In contrast with his treatment is that of his bitter opponent, Hon. Sydney Fisher. Canada has not taken any particular pains to show its appreciation of the narrow and bigoted conduct of the Minister of Agriculture. He has reaped little but ridicule. The independent press of the whole of Canada has nothing but words of condemnation for the person who is responsible for the introduction of straight machine politics into our Militia. Fisher, the despised of honest men, stands silhouetted against the manly, brave and honest Dundonald. Men who admire the qualities abjured by the one, and possessed by the other, will see, that after Dundonald is gone, evenhanded justice is meted out to Mr. Fisher. The thanks of Canada will be due to the people of Brome, if, at the next election, Fisher is numbered among the slain.

TIMELY TOPICS.

Good evening. No, we didn't go to the picnic. Somebody had to stay in town to look after things, you know.

• • •

As the time draws near for consideration of the by-law to allow the Grand Trunk to obtain possession of certain land near the station, there seems to be little opposition to the project. The railway company is employing a large amount of labor and making many changes in that locality. It is hard to see how the privileges asked for by them could be anything but a benefit to Belleville. Taking that fact into consideration it is gratifying to note that little or no opposition is looked for to the company's requests.

• • •

It would be a blessed good thing if the proposed changes included some plan which would allow visitors to the city to come down town by some other route than that at present in use. The collection of dust, vacant houses and garbage piles is anything but edifying. Perhaps, after the Grand Trunk makes its improvements, things may improve. Let's hope so.

• • •

It is a regrettable fact that visitors both by rail and boat get anything but a favorable impression of the beauties of Belleville when they land here. If they stay here, and catch a few glimpses of the residential portions, they can, of course, form proper impressions, but they don't all do that, more's the pity.

• • •

Some day our people will have to form a Citizens' Improvement League, the object of which will be to transmogrify the avenues of approach to the heart of the city. No society could be formed with a more worthy object.

• • •

The Toronto Star, because 75,000 women turned out to welcome young Scholes home, sees in it the love of womankind for heroes and champion athletes, and deplores the alleged tendency of mankind nowadays to put away the romantic things of life and cling to the prosaic and practical. Being considerable of a romancer itself, The Star is qualified to speak its mind, perhaps, but it's all nonsense to say that, in the male mind, hero worship is dying and romanticism dead. Conditions change; that is all. In this swift age men cannot find time to enthuse like they did in the "good old days," but they experience the same feelings, and always will.

• • •

The Kingston Old Boys' Reunion was, according to the papers, a big success. There were 800 present from Toronto and 350 from Ottawa, besides, of course, large numbers from other places. Kingston now makes its Old Boys' Reunion an annual event, and finds it both pleasant and profitable. Why could not the same thing be done in Belleville? So it could if a start were only made. What about the Belleville Old Boys' Reunion of 1905? When will matters in regard to it begin to take definite shape?

• • •

THE GLOBE'S CONDESCENSION.

(Toronto News.)

It will gratify the friends of Lord Dundonald to learn to-day that The Globe is not opposed to demonstrations in his honor. Our aged but agile contemporary "has not the slightest desire to curb the enthusiasm" of those who wish to give him a cordial send-off. This is kindness, condescension and a concession to popular feeling. In spite of all that has come and gone The Globe is prepared to permit the people to do as they please. It will not throw a single cabbage at Lord Dundonald's departing form nor place a rock on the railway he goes over. Persons found at Dundonald meetings will not be put in the stocks. Let us rejoice at this spirit. The growth of such liberal views, even in the most unexpected quarters, is a source of much comfort to all lovers of true liberty.

• • •

Hamilton looks on with envy while Toronto claims two champions in the persons of Scholes and Perry. But the Ambitious Cityites need not despair. They have the champion political romancer in the person of the Hamilton Times man.

• • •

Hamilton Times: $50,000 for the Hamilton Drill Hall. The Government is entirely too kind.

No doubt. But how about the Belleville Drill Hall?

• • •

Hon. Doc. Borden, in the House of Commons, made it plain that, in his opinion, natives of the British Isles who settle in this country are in a different class to those who happen to be born here, so far as our pride in their prowess is concerned. In fact, the Minister of Militia seeks to drive home the "foreigner" wedge that Laurier inserted. And yet, it may pertinently be asked, what would this grand and growing country have been but for the "foreigners" who came to it and made it what it is?

• • •

What does this kind of talk mean? Is it the prelude to a campaign for Canadian independence, or is it merely the idle chatter of a few people who may be classed with those who "rush in where angels fear to tread?" Perhaps it would be charitable to take the latter view.

• • •

The irony of fate! The Hon. Jim Jeffries, champion feature-smasher of the world, is put out of business by a complaint classed as "Housemaid's Knee!"

• • •

Here's luck and smooth sailing to Mr. Corby's new yacht. May he have many pleasant siestas aboard the "Siesta."

• • •

Twenty thousand people cheered Dundonald when he left Ottawa, and their cheers must have been loud enough to reach the ears of Laurier and Fisher, who, no doubt, quite enjoyed the demonstration in honor of the man they have wronged and maligned. But wait a while. The cheers in honor of Dundonald will die away, but the resentment aroused by the dragooning of a brave and honorable man will not die away. There's a day of reckoning coming.

• • •

Party lines were broke in the Commons last night, and if the Grits keep on the country will be broke, too.

• • •

Lord Dundonald at Montreal: "MEN OF CANADA, I AM CERTAIN OF ONE THING — YOU HAVE GOT BOTH HANDS ON THE UNION JACK; AND IF ANY MAN TRIES TO CUT YOUR HANDS AWAY, THE MILITIA OF CANADA WILL STAND BY YOU."

• • •

Bravo! Dundonald. You're a braw chiel and a true Briton; even though Laurier and his crew did turn you out of Canada.

WITH CRICK IN THE BACK

You are up against a whole lot of trouble unless you have a strong remedy like Nerviline to settle pain and dislodge stiffness from the muscles and joints. Just rub Nerviline on the painful spot—not much rubbing, because Nerviline has more power than ordinary remedies. You won't suffer long after Nerviline is applied, for it relieves almost instantly. Mr. Philip Adams, of Oakland, says, "If I hadn't used Nerviline I guess my back would be stiff yet. A few applications of Nerviline took out all the soreness and stiffness. I can recommend Nerviline for any kind of muscular pain, also for rheumatism. Price 25c.

It does not seem as though there were as many as thirty-one days in any month, the way rent day rolls around.

"FOOT ELM."

Druggists all over Canada are writing us saying Foot Elm is giving customers better satisfaction than any other article they ever sold and most dealers have discontinued the sale of all substitutes, preferring to give their customers the best only. Foot Elm cures sweaty, tired, aching, tender feet, relieves aching corns and burning bunions.

A Step Downward.

(Montreal Gazette.)

A writer in the Toronto Mail and Empire has unearthed a letter of instructions sent out by Mr. John Sandfield Macdonald, in August, 1862, as a member of the Macdonald-Sicotte administration, to the commandants of the militia districts. United States naval officers had wrongfully boarded and taken from the British ship Trent two men who were regarded as enemies of the republic. The action was resented and it seemed for a time that war was a possibility. Then, as when President Cleveland issued his "shirtsleeves" message about Venezuela, it was deemed well to prepare for eventualities. New militia corps were organized and old ones were improved. Mr. Macdonald notified the officers of each battalion of the vacant commissions in their corps, and asked them to forward the names of men they could recommend for the positions, "at the same time mentioning "the age of each, and his aptitude "by education, judgment and activity to discharge the duties of any "superior grade in the service to "which he may afterwards attain." Mr. Macdonald added: "In doing "this I must ask you to bear in "mind not only the qualifications I "have suggested as requisite, but "that your recommendation shall "not be in any way affected by party or political or other undue considerations."

Mr. Macdonald was a Liberal, and a member of a Liberal administration. His letter is the severest condemnation of the state of affairs existing to-day, when commandants of corps have their recommendations set aside, not only on political grounds, but because of the family connections of the men selected by them for commissions. This is a great step downwards from John Sandfield Macdonald to Frederick W. Borden and Sydney Fisher.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

THE LAND OF REGRET.

There is a city whose gates are wide,
Its pavements pure and clean,
Where shadow forms flit side by side
On the road called "Might Have Been."
But folks walk there with their heads bowed low,
And heavy eyelids wet,
For ev'ry corner is haunted so
In this, "The Land of Regret."

They meet the ghosts of those other years
In dreams of memory sweet,
And wet with passionate, frenzied tears
The graves which lie at their feet;
But never, long as their lives shall last,
Can they ever again forget
Who once have walked with ghosts of the Past
In this, "The Land of Regret."

They feel the touch of a hand grown still,
Its fingers softly press,
The tender passion of kisses thrill
Their own in a fond caress.
Ah, me—but pity the folks who stray
Where long the sun hath set,
And walk with the ghosts who're laid away
In this, "The Land of Regret."

LAND LEAGUE ANECDOTES.

Some Original Letters Brought to Light in Mr. Davitt's Book.

An entertaining chapter in Michael Davitt's "The Fall of Feudalism in Ireland" (Harper's), is given up to "Some League Anecdotes." Among the numerous letters of an original kind which reached the Land League offices in 1881, was the following:

"Ballinrobe, Mayo, January 8, 1881.

"To The Honorable Land Lague,—Gintlemin, in a moment of wakeness i pade me rint. i did not no ther was a law against it or i wud not do it. the people pass by me dure as if the smal pox was in the hous, i heer ye do be givin pardons to min that do rong, and if ye will sind me a pardon to put in the windy for evry one to rede, as God is me judge i will never komit the crime agin. Misther Scrab Nally will give me a Karacthur if ye write to him at Bal.

"Yours thruly."

One of the most popular platform speakers in early League years was Thomas Brennan. He was replete with references to Stuart Mill and to the legislation of Stein and Hardenberg, and was eagerly listened to by the local aspirants to platform fame, who tried to imitate him.

One of these talked on one occasion very learnedly about "the laws which Shteel and Harly Burke had passed for the tinnents of Prussheea." On another occasion the same speaker denounced the landlords as "the Tyrant class who spint the rents of daycint people in Rotten Row and other disreputable places in London."

The Latin tag about the propriety of a shoemaker sticking to his last was made use of by a learned clergyman in a withering allusion to a local Demosthenes. At the next meeting the assailed reformer made the following triumphant rejoinder which was greeted with tremendous applause:

"I'm attacked by a larned scribbler, bekase I plade the cause of the people. The rint office and the backers of the landlords, the gintlemin who are invited to stretch the legs under the mahogany of the evicthors and exterminathors, are aginst me, and Latin has been used to squelch me. But here I am to proclaim to the world the great truth, 'fox poply, fox day!'" (Vox populi, vox Dei), and from this platform, I fling the Frinch in his face."

It was a local orator in Leinster County who, in lauding Mr. Parnell, delivered himself of the following Biblical eulogy:

"Mr. Parnell is the Moses of the lost children of Erin. He will, like Joshua, take them to the promised land of Home Rule, and then, with the Aaron's rod of peasant proprietary, he will strike the rock of landlordism, when plenty and peace will flow out of it like a shower of manna from the skies of justice."

The Youngest Bandmaster.

The honor of being the youngest bandmaster in the United Kingdom holding the King's commission belongs to Lieut. H. G. Amers of the Northumberland Hussars and the 1st Northumberland Garrison Artillery Volunteers. Lieut. Amers is a conductor of marked ability, and the performance of his band always bears testimony to his skill, his care, and his popularity among those who are under his direction. Although still in the "twenties," Lieut. Amers' musical experience is considerable. He took over the management of several bands at the age of nineteen, and has since wielded the baton in many places and before critical audiences. He is, of course, most widely known in Newcastle, but Glasgow and other towns in the north have had many opportunities of passing judgment on his performances. Some time ago he brought his band to London, where its performances won much praise. At Brussels his band caused such enthusiasm that the young conductor was seized by the crowd and carried shoulder high through the building; he was presented with the Palm of Honor, and the Administrative Council of the Brussels Exhibition bestowed upon him a jewelled decoration.—Daily Graphic.

No Joke to Entertain Royalty.

What a relief it must be to the hosts when a royal visit is satisfactorily ended! The preparations for it are wonderfully troublesome. Imagine having to furnish the royal apartments throughout, bedrooms and sitting-rooms—every royalty must have a private sitting-room—with everything new. One wonders how the "old furniture" mania fits in with this rule of etiquette. And the royal family in general are great Chippendale, Sheraton, etc., collectors themselves.—London Truth.

Motor-Car in India.

The motor-car has broken out in a new place. The Northwestern Railway in India has just purchased a steam motor coach for £2,000 to run over its branch lines, where a full train service does not pay. This motor coach will carry 66 passengers in all, and run 30 miles without replenishing coal and water. It thus suffices to make a connection with the main lines.

THE CANADIAN SEA.

"Probs," Mr. R. F. Stupart, Speaks to Toronto Club, on "Navigation of Hudson's Bay and Strait."

Mr. R. F. Stupart, of the weather office, delivered the other day before the Empire Club, Toronto, an address on "The Navigation of Hudson's Bay and Strait," which was to the following effect:

To the north of Ontario and Quebec there is, as you all know, a great inland sea, a vast expanse of salt water, 850 miles from north to south and 600 in breadth, and bounded wholly by lands which are part and parcel of our great Dominion, and connected with the broad Atlantic by a strait some 450 miles in length. We have as yet but a most imperfect knowledge of what wealth these waters contain. We know that they do contain the right whale, porpoise or white whale, walrus, narwhal, seal, salmon, trout, cod, and a variety of small fish, but the only fishing industries so far developed are the whale fishery by the Americans and the walrus, porpoise and salmon fisheries by the Hudson's Bay Company. The chief whaling ground is in the northwestern part of the bay, and here whalers from Massachusetts and Connecticut have been carrying on a profitable fishery for nearly half a century. I fancy I am not astray in surmising that these people have year by year been taking out oil and bone to the value of at least $100,000. Some years ago the Hudson's Bay Company made large profit out of the oil of the seal and white whale, and refined the oil at their northern ports; now, as the oil has a less commercial value, they have ceased this industry. The walrus is hunted not only by the native Eskimo, who roams the shore line of the bays and straits and kills this huge animal from kyak and ice floe, but also by the company's men, who seek it in small vessels out from Churchill.

The rivers which flow into Ungava Bay and doubtless others further west, abound in salmon—salmon equal in flavor to those of New Brunswick. The Hudson's Bay Company at one time found it worth while to send a ship to Ungava and George's River for salmon alone to be shipped in cold storage. I believe this ship has been discontinued, but I think it probable for reasons other than the failure of the fishery. We Canadians have very slowly awakened to the realization of the fact that in Manitoba and our Northwest Territories we have the best of wheat growing lands on the surface of the globe, sixty million acres, where wheat is as certain a crop as in any part of the world and more than twice sixty million acres where the wheat fields will in most years yield ample returns and where in every year other crops are so certain of success that the farmer will be able to regard with tolerable equanimity the possibility of partial failure of wheat. What wonder that the Manitoban and Northwest farmer have considered whether Hudson's Bay and Straits are not the natural and best outlet from the Northwest granary to the markets of Europe. Churchill is only 859 miles from Edmonton, 620 miles from Prince Albert and 640 miles from Winnipeg and the sea route from Churchill to Liverpool is but 3,368 miles.

The original charter of the Hudson's Bay Company was granted in 1668, in which Prince Rupert sent an expedition into the bay, and Fort Charles, the first English settlement, was established near the mouth of Rupert's River. For nearly 200 years the company's ships have been passing backwards and forwards through the Straits, and seem not to have been liable to any large percentage of disaster. It must, however, be borne in mind that the ships have until recent years been sailing vessels, and making but one trip per annum, have passed through the Straits when there has been very little ice. They leave Scotland so as to reach the entrance of the Straits about August 1st, and within less than two months they are again out of the Straits homeward bound.

Mr. Stupart then proceeded to give some particulars relating to the length of time navigation in the bay is impeded or actually suspended through the ice, then continued:

"I give the following as the season during which navigation may in ordinary years be regarded as practicable for the purpose of commerce; not indeed to the cheaply built freight steamer, commonly known as the 'ocean tramp,' but to vessels of about 2,000 tons gross, fortified for meeting ice, and of such construction as to enable them to be fair freight carriers. These vessels must be strengthened forward; should have wooden sheeting and be very full under the counter; the propeller should be of small diameter and be well down in the water. I place the limit of size at about 2,000 tons because a larger ship would be somewhat unwieldly, could not make such good way through the loose ice, and being unable to turn so sharply she would get many a heavy blow that the smaller ship would escape."

Wakeham's Experiences.

The speaker then went on to give some interesting details concerning the vicissitudes experienced by Captain Wakeham, the commander of a whaling vessel and concluded his remarks thus:

In judging of the suitability of Hudson's Straits as a commercial trade route we have not to consider during what period of each year a Dundee whaler or a specially constructed ice crusher can navigate the Straits, but rather during what period an ordinary well found iron ship with a master of usual experience can navigate them with an ordinary degree of safety. The result of investigation is not uncertain—such a ship may with safety enter the Straits early in July and should she have good luck she may get through to the bay with but a few delays in the ice, but delays of a week or ten days will not be infrequent. At the close of the season ships should not leave Churchill later than the middle of October, because at that date winter has set in.

A TIMELY SUGGESTION.

(New Orleans Picayune.)

"We will sing 'Awake Ye Saints' immediately before the sermon tomorrow," announced the minister at choir practise on Saturday afternoon. "Don't you think," inquired the observant tenor, "that it would be more appropriate to sing it immediately after the sermon?"

Eleven members of the G.G.F.G. Band in Ottawa refused to play at the Dundonald reception and the Band could not go. The eleven chaps who were out of harmony were civil servants. They knew how much their jobs would be worth if they tooted in honor of Dundonald. They are not, perhaps, so much to blame. A martyr's lot is not always a happy one. But think of the meanness of the cheap men in high places, who thus dragooned the wind-jammers! They would be dear at a dollar a dozen.

STAINED GLASS WORK.

An Art In Which Methods Have Not Changed Much In Centuries.

The twentieth century American stained glass maker follows without important variation the simple methods of the French monk of eight centuries ago. The first requisite is the design. The artist makes a small water color sketch to show the general design and color scheme, accompanying it with detailed studies. From this two large drawings or cartoons are made, the exact size of the desired window. One cartoon shows where the leads will be placed—the thin strips of lead, hollowed on both sides and looking in a transverse section like the letter H, which form the framework to bind the pieces of glass together. Another drawing gives the size and shape of each piece of glass. This cartoon is cut into its component pieces by a pair (or triplet) of three bladed scissors, which leave between their parallel blades a space sufficient for the leads. These cut out patterns are put together again on a large glass easel, to which they are attached by wax, and the spaces between are blacked in to give the effect of the leads.

The easel is then placed against a window where the light can stream through it. The artist or his substitute replaces each paper pattern on the easel by a piece of glass of exactly the same size, cut from a sheet of glass of the color called for by the color sketch. The sketch is not followed exactly; experiment with the actual glass will suggest improvements. To a greater or less extent this stained glass is supplemented by painted glass, on which the colors are fired as in china painting. When all the pieces have been cut they are transferred to the "leading" drawing, the flexible leads are twisted into shape and soldered at the joints and a special cement applied to make the whole water tight. The window is now complete, ready to be put in position, where it is made secure by copper wires fastened to the transverse bars of iron.

Mark Antony's Mistake.

At a performance of "Julius Caesar" at Hurst college, England, some time ago, Mark Antony made a mistake when the dead body of Caesar was brought in. He apostrophized the fallen hero with impassioned eloquence, and the audience felt acutely for the poor citizens, who were all presumably horror struck and overcome with grief, when Antony gently but firmly grasped, as he thought, the face cloth and slowly, very slowly, began to draw it back. Just then an excited whisper came from the other end of the corpse, "This end, you fool!" But Antony was inexorably wrapped in grief. He persevered and disclosed to the intently gazing audience Julius Caesar's boots.

Clever Smuggling Trick.

Smuggling from Geneva into France used to be carried on at a great rate. Alexandre Dumas tells how Beaute, a famous watchmaker of that city renowned for his skill in smuggling, got the better of the Count de Saint Cricq, King Louis Philippe's director of customs, who was traveling as a detective. The count bought 30,000 francs' worth of jewelry on condition that it should be delivered free of duty in Paris. When he went up to his bedroom on arriving at the French capital he found his purchases on the dressing table. Beaute had bribed the count's valet to stow them away among his luggage.

Hard on the Doctor.

Weel, Tam, are ye gaun hame wi' your work?" was the invariable greeting of a doctor to a tailor of his acquaintance when he met him carrying a bundle. Once the tailor saw the doctor walking in a funeral procession. "Weel, doctor, are ye gaun hame wi' your work?" he asked.—From Reminiscences," by Sir Archibald Geikie.

THE BRITISH SPEAKER.

His Position Is a Hard One, but Is Splendidly Rewarded.

It is doubtless because the position of speaker is so onerous that the rewards attached to it are so great. He is originally a member of parliament, like the rest, and is selected by the leader of the house, who is not necessarily the prime minister, from among his own followers for his personal character and dignity and his knowledge of parliamentary procedure. He is usually elected unanimously by vote of the house, and from that moment he ceases to be a party man, and his constituency is divided in its feelings between the honor of returning the speaker and the disadvantage of being for all practical purposes unrepresented in parliament.

The speaker of the house of commons is a person enjoying the greatest official dignity and social consideration. He is the first commoner in the realm; his invitations to dinner are almost equivalent to a royal command; court dress is worn by members who dine with him officially; in the house he is treated with extreme deference, and he receives a salary of £5,000 and the use of a magnificent house, which forms part of the palace of Westminster. He retains office though the politics of the ministry may change through successive administrations until his health fails or he deems himself to have earned retirement. Then the sovereign bestows a peerage upon him and the country a munificent pension.

The house of commons has been singularly fortunate in securing for speakers men of great dignity, unfailing judgment and unquestioned impartiality. It is a splendid position, and though its intellectual demands are unceasing and its merely physical demands exhausting it is splendidly rewarded.

The position is as exhausting as it is distinguished. During a large part of the session the speaker must be in the chair from 2 p. m. till after midnight except during the dinner hour, from half past 7 to 9, and even when the house is in committee and the chairman of committees is presiding he must be in official dress in his house, which communicates directly with the lobby behind his chair, ready to appear at a moment's notice if summoned. He must, of course, know every member by sight and be able to recall his name instantly. It is astounding sometimes when from a back bench there rises some member who is utterly unknown by sight to his fellow members, who seldom attends and hardly ever speaks and has nothing whatever distinctive in his manner or appearance, to hear the speaker say "Mr. Blank" as readily as if he were accustomed to address him every day.—Henry Norman in Century.

Wanted All of It.

"A stranger," said an old frontiersman, "was traveling once in a very cheerless section of the great west. Having pulled up at night at a cheap and unpromising tavern, he seated himself at the supper table. The waiter informed him what the cook had in the way of eatables. Among the viands enumerated was wild duck. 'Was that 'ere bird shot on the wing?' inquired the stranger. 'Yes,' replied the waiter. 'While trying to fly out of this forsaken country?' The obliging waiter thought that might have been the case. 'Well,' concluded the stranger, 'I sympathize with that bird's misfortune, but I admire his good judgment. Serve me all of him.'"

Irregularity In the Punishment.

There are two boys who manage to be rather unruly in school, and their teacher was so exasperated one day that she ordered them to remain after hours and write their names 1,000 times. She watched them plunge into the task. Some fifteen minutes later one of them grew uneasy and began to watch his companion in disgrace. Suddenly the first one burst out with a roar of despair and between his sobs said to the teacher:

"'Tain't fair, mum! His name's Bush and mine's Schluttermeyeir!"

The Uncertain World.

"This is the most uncertain worl' that ever I wuz in!" said the deacon.

"You think so?"

"I know it. Only the other day the parson sighted a harricane fur off an' run ter a storm pit an' pulled the lid on an'—what do you reckon happened?"

"The Lord knows."

"Harricane changed its mind—turned into a airthquake an' come mighty nigh swallered him whole!"

One Way.

Typewriter Agent—Here, my friend, your last payments on your machine are not due until next month. Why do you insist on paying now?

Typewriter Purchaser—Well, you see, the machine is going to pieces so rapidly that I saw I'd have to hurry up if I got it paid for before it was worn out, and that would never do, you know, to pay for a wornout machine! I couldn't afford it.

Leading a Double Life.

"Klymer has a farm a short distance out in the country, hasn't he?"

"Yes."

"Then what is he practicing medicine in town for?"

"He has to do it to make money enough to pay what he loses by his farming."

A healthy young man or young woman who can find excuses for ignorance or failure in the twentieth century would not attain to knowledge or success under any circumstances.—Success.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 60 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

THE CRIME OF THE CENTURY

BY RODRIGUES OTTOLENGUI,

"I say, my man, you're an original in your way. Yes, I'll stake you for awhile."

Slippery Sam led the way along the docks, keeping in the shadows from force of habit rather than from any necessity, since no member of the police force appeared in sight, until presently he darted quickly to the right, disappearing with his customary celerity. Mr. Mitchel awaited his return with patience and in a few minutes was attracted by a low whistle which seemed to come from beneath him. Looking down, he descried a small boat in the shadow of the dock, manned by two powerful oarsmen, and in the bow stood his late companion, beckoning to him. Comprehending that it was meant that he should enter the boat, he climbed down the rotten sides of the dock and dropped, the men, as soon as he was seated, rowing silently and quickly away.

No words were spoken as they picked their way out into the Hudson, the men avoiding the wash of the great ferryboats with a skill which indicated that they were experienced watermen. Turning down the river, they rowed for more than a mile between the shores of the two cities, the many lights of which make a beautiful stage picture and bewilder one unaccustomed to the night view of the shores so that it would be impossible to locate the spot where they finally stopped and boarded a small excursion steamboat, which itself was moving slowly down the river.

Slippery Sam stood up and threw a rope to a man standing near the rail of the steamboat, and they were hauled up close alongside. Mr. Mitchel and Sam were helped aboard, and the boat which had brought them dropped astern. A few minutes later the speed of the steamboat was greatly accelerated, indicating that no more passengers were expected, and within an hour she had passed out between the great guns of the two forts which guard the Narrows and was riding lazily on the ocean highway between Sandy Hook and Coney Island.

The Siren was one of the many small steam vessels licensed to take excursionists from the metropolis to the many resorts within two hours' sail of the Battery. The captain and owner, being himself a member of the sporting fraternity, had scented a good thing for himself when the sudden activity of the police, due to legislative investigation, had resulted in the closing of the city gambling rooms. He had therefore summoned a few of the professional gamesters and quickly interested them in his venture. They were to "run the games," while he would "run the boat," as one of the men tersely put it.

To this end the forward cabin had been elaborately fitted up with the necessary implements, all of which, however, were of the portable order, in case of emergency. There were two faro dealers, two roulette wheels and a number of tables for poker. As the boat already enjoyed the advantages of a bar license, liquor could be had on demand. There were many electric lights, but the windows were closely curtained, lest too much of an illumination should attract the suspicion of the harbor police.

Interference, however, was scarcely probable, for the captain had cunningly devised a plan whereby the nefarious traffic was concealed. He had early in the season abandoned all regular trips and advertised his boat to hire for private excursion parties, and so careful was he that in furtherance of his scheme he nominally entertained a different "society" or "club" each night, and admittance was strictly by ticket. By this means it was very difficult for any but the "elect" to get aboard, as the disposition of the "tickets" was solely in the charge of a chosen and trustworthy few.

On this occasion there was really a private excursion party on the Siren. The Burglars' Social union had chartered the boat, paying a round sum for the privilege of holding a meeting beyond the prying eyes of the police, a part of the agreement being that the gamblers might run their games as usual, the members of the B. S. U., however, being the only players. It was because of the suspicious characters of these gentlemen that the captain had preferred to pick them up in small parties as he slowly worked his way down the river rather than to allow so many crooks to get aboard from one dock, where a stray policeman might recognize too many of them.

When Mr. Mitchel ascended the stairway which led to the saloon and stood for a moment looking about him, he was a little surprised at the prospect. The faro and roulette games were well patronized, and several games of poker were in progress. Yet the quiet, gentlemanly behavior of all in the place made it difficult to believe that he was in the presence of the principal criminals out of prison. His entrance attracted scarcely any attention. Two or three turned and looked at him, but, failing to recognize him, reverted to their games.

"Quite a family party, ain't it?" said Slippery Sam in lowered tones.

"A most extraordinary group, I should say," responded Mr. Mitchel, "provided these men are really criminals."

"Well, we like the word 'crooks' better," said Sam suggestively, "an if you don't mind I'd rather you'd use it."

"Why, certainly, if you desire it," said Mr. Mitchel. "But what is the difference?"

This seemed to be a poser for Sam, who shifted uneasily a moment, searching for a satisfactory reply, which finally shaped itself thus:

"Well, you see, I ain't no scholar, so I ain't good at definitions. I've spent so much time in jail an the prison library, as a rule, is so meager that I might say my education's been neglected. But there's a point of difference that has weight here tonight, an that I can tell you. You see, 'criminals' is what the judges calls us, an 'crooks' is what we calls ourselves. Are you on?"

"Not fully. Make it plainer."

"Why, don't you see, if one of this crowd heard you talkin about 'criminals' he'd twig you in a minute? He'd know you wasn't a 'crook' yourself, an that'd be bad."

"Ah, yes, of course! Evidently the less I have to say the less likely I will be to get into trouble by making mistakes."

"Yes, but don't talk too little neither. If you're too still, they'll be on to you just as quick as if you open your trap too wide. But you was askin if these men are all crooks. Yes, sir, an a more skillfuller crowd in their way don't exist. Now, there's a man over there by the roulette, the chap with the long tailed coat an the choker. Size him up, an what do you make his total?"

"Do you mean what position in life would I accord to him? Well, that is not an easy problem at any time, and under present circumstances it becomes doubly difficult. Yet I must confess that he seems strangely out of place here, for do you know—it may make you laugh to hear it—I should take him for a Salvation Army man."

"Say, mister, you're a bird, you are, a regular eagle for seein into things. Looks like Salvation Army, does he? Well, that's precisely his lay. You ought to hear him leadin a meetin an takin lambs into the fold. Oh, dear, but he's saved more souls than we've got fingers an toes. But, then, for all that, he's got another business on the side. Give a guess at that. What would you say was his regular profession now? How does he live?"

"Judging by his earnestness at present, he might be a card sharp," ventured Mr. Mitchel.

"Sharp? You're right enough when you speak that word. But not cards. No, sir: he never touches 'em. He's just amusin himself at that wheel, but he'll leave it pretty soon. No, sir; he's a fence an the best known in the city an never been even suspected by the police, much less arrested. Oh, yes; he's sharp! Well, I guess!"

In this strain Sam rambled on, pointing out the various prominent criminals in the apartment and giving graphic details of their careers, so that Mr. Mitchel was enjoying himself hugely and at the same time obtaining quite an insight into the habits of a class which had always interested him —to wit, the uncaptured criminals. Surely among these were those with the greater share of brains.

But the more he saw and heard of the men around him the more impatient he grew to see Preacher Jim, the man who had announced that he would lecture to criminals upon crime.

The Siren had passed far beyond the lights of the city, and Coney Island's thousands of electric lamps made but a bright streak on the horizon, when at last there was a movement which promised the fulfillment of his desire. The card tables were taken away by attendants who seemed to have been drilled to the task, so rapidly did they accomplish it. Camp stools were arranged in rows, and the company found places facing one table which had been left at the farther end of the saloon.

In the inevitable confusion attendant upon this scramble for seats, orderly though it was, Mr. Mitchel was separated from Sam for a moment. Just then some one whispered near his ear:

"If you should need help, I'll be on hand."

Mr. Mitchel turned swiftly, but could not be sure of the identity of the speaker. The person nearest to him was one of the waiters, hurrying by with a trayful of empty glasses, while at a little distance back was a man who appeared to be watching him intently. Either of these might have spoken the whispered words, but which? Mr. Mitchel reasoned that it must be this one who was still eying him closely, yet he could not dismiss the idea that the voice, though disguised, was familiar to his ear.

"I wonder if Mr. Barnes is aboard," he thought, and this suspicion for a few moments occupied him so thoroughly that he forgot about the other man until aroused by Sam, who had regained his side, bringing two choice stools with backs to them.

"There he is," said that worthy, with suppressed excitement.

"There is who?" asked Mr. Mitchel.

"Why, Preacher Jim, of course," said Sam. "See! He's takin his place behind the table. He's goin to begin at once. Listen!"

Mr. Mitchel looked toward the opposite end of the room, and in Preacher Jim he recognized the man who had been watching him but a few moments before. Had he uttered the mysterious message?

A hush fell over the company as the man stood behind the table and gazed about him for several minutes in silence, affording Mr. Mitchel an excellent opportunity to scrutinize the general appearance. Here was one who might have baffled those students who have formulated a physical "type" of criminals. He was a type of nothing unless of perfect manhood. Of medium stature, his symmetrical frame seemed fashioned in the mold which would yield the greatest strength and endurance. A finely formed head, with great brain room, marvelously well balanced between his powerful shoulders, assured you of his masterful will power. No wonder that before such a man as this all the other crooks stood in awed admiration. Their silence and their attitudes of eager attention were a tacit admission of the fact that they were in the presence of recognized superiority. They bowed before their master.

"Has this man ever been in prison?" inquired Mr. Mitchel in a whisper.

"In prison? They'd have to catch him first, wouldn't they?" was Sam's scornful reply.

But now Preacher Jim began to speak.

"My friends," said he in a mellow voice of singular magnetic quality, "I have the pleasure of addressing you once more after a lapse of many months. I see around me the familiar faces of a number of friends, but I note others who are unknown to me.

Mr. Mitchel turned swiftly.

By way of introduction, therefore, I may speak of myself, giving a brief sketch of my past history.

"I am known to you all as Jim, and because of my fondness for speechmaking some call me Preacher Jim. Yet, preacher though I am, I am not one of the learned doctors of divinity, nor have I much in common with them, save the earnestness with which I follow the path which I have marked out for myself in this life.

"I was born about 30 years ago. In this matter, from the universal laws of nature which control us all, I was not consulted. I was brought into this world, being myself in no way responsible either for my coming or for the manner thereof. As trite and unnecessary a statement as this may seem to be, it has an important bearing upon what I may call my theme for tonight. Being born, some one decided that I should be known by the name of James, which has been abbreviated into Jim. This name was given to me in much the same manner and for the same purpose as a name is given to a dog—that I might come when called and be distinguished from others of my kind. And so I came to be Jim. Other name I have not, because my revered father overlooked the formality of marriage with my mother. Later he overlooked both my mother and myself, and we were left to drift on the tide of humanity, and it is a truth, which is strange in the presence of the vaunted civilization of this era, that such flotsam will ever be finally stranded on the barren shores of damnation.

"At the age of 5 I began to steal, not from necessity, but from imitation. I lived among thieves and did as they did. At 10 I was one of the most skillful pickpockets along the Bowery, and at 12 I was at the head of a band of 20 boys any one of whom was a past master in the art of breaking the eighth commandment. One of these, emboldened by success, attempted an operation beyond his power of accomplishment and was detected in the act. He fled and was followed. With a lack of comradeship, for which he has since been punished, he ran into my place and, depositing some of his plunder under my bed, succeeded in evading the officer who had followed him in. I was awakened from what the policeman declared was a sham sleep and taken to the station house, whence in due time I was sent to a reformatory.

"There I remained until I was of age, and during those seven years I received a double education. From the good and pious preacher who officiated in the chapel I first suspected the value of knowledge and then obtained the books from which to acquire it. Being my own teacher to a great extent and interested in my pupil, I absorbed knowledge as a sponge does water. But, on the other hand, from the vast variety of delinquents who were sent to the institution from time to time I also learned the true meaning of the words vice and crime.

"I entered the reformatory a little thief whose main object in stealing had been mischief. I left the place a professional crook endowed with such knowledge as made me self reliant. I felt myself equipped for the battle with the world to such a degree that I was ready to attack it rather than wait and defend myself, and I was eager for the fray.

"Nine years have passed, and I have lived, if not above suspicion, at least beyond conviction. I have never been in prison, and I never expect to be, yet I am a professional criminal.

"Having given you this short sketch of myself, I pass to the consideration of the criminal in general. My friends, we call ourselves 'crooks,' and the world calls us 'criminals.' As crooks we understand and sympathize with one another. As criminals, does the world understand or sympathize with us? Does the Christian, with his creed, 'Love thine enemies,' love us? Yet are we not counted as the enemies of society?

"Let us consider for a moment the true relation between the criminal and society at large. There seems to be but one doctrine of salvation for the delinquent, and that is punishment. Granting that this theory is a correct one, is it justly practiced? We find that for a given offense there is a specified number of years in prison set down as the proper punishment. Are all men who commit this crime equally amenable to punishment, that all should be treated with equal severity? Are all of these guilty persons equally responsible for their acts? Have all had the same heritage, the same environment, the same examples of conduct and the same opportunities for living without resorting to crime? The answer is so evident that it is amazing that civilization should tolerate such blindness in the Goddess of Justice."

He paused a moment, having delivered the final sentences with such earnest and intense force that his audience was carried away by his eloquence and applauded rapturously. Mr. Mitchel was astounded to find a man of this mental caliber openly admitting that he lived a life of crime. He was more interested than he had ever before been in any man and was impatient to hear more.

"My friends, society has made one egregious, irreparable blunder, and it has fallen into this error from sheer selfishness. The mistake lies in this—the criminal has been measured by the standards applicable to normal men, whereas crime ever has been and ever will be the result of abnormal development or of physical and psychical degeneration. To use a trite simile, 'crime is a disease,' and, as in other diseases, the sufferer is personally responsible for his condition in only a small proportion of cases.

"How differently does society treat physical and moral disease! For the afflicted of the first class we have colleges, physicians, nurseries, sanitariums, hospitals and lazarettos. For the latter we have lawyers, juries, judges, prisons, stripes and hanging.

"In the worst stages of physical disease the individual becomes a menace and a danger to the community. With perfect but nevertheless selfish justice the afflicted one is seized and incarcerated in a lazaretto. Such a fate is sad enough and bad enough, yet it is vastly different from the extreme example of the morally diseased. He endangers the life or takes the life of one of the community, and his life is taken in payment. Thus society as a whole commits the very act for which it dooms the poor wretch. If it be argued that society kills, but does not murder, the contention is easily shown to be sophistry, for if a man should kill a convicted and condemned murderer, thus committing the act which society has elected itself to commit, such a man would still be adjudged guilty of murder. Yet if all the facts were considered, including the most important one that all morally diseased are also physically imperfect and that the two afflictions are interdependent, the world would be aroused to the recognition of its great error, and society would be compelled to admit that it should no more slay the moral than the physical leper. The day will, the day must, come when crime, like disease, will be treated curatively rather than punitively, but that day is not yet, and we live in the present and must meet conditions as they are. How, then, shall we criminals, we 'crooks,' fashion our lives?

"I have pointed out to you the great error made by society; but, my friends, we ourselves have fallen into the same mistake, and it is of more importance to us than to society. We also overlook the fact that our criminal propensities are born and bred in us, that we are not solely responsible for what we are, that we are morally and ofttimes physically diseased and that we are congenitally so. Yet such is our deplorable condition. Moreover, no helping hand is outstretched toward us. The hand that beckons holds a scourge, and the index finger points the way to prison. The world will not help us. We must help ourselves. How?

"Why not by co-operation, as in this society? Thus we erect a community in sympathy with our position and condition, and by learning to live in true harmony with all the members of this smaller, diseased community we cannot but progress in ourselves and in our progeny toward a right to claim a place in that wider world which holds us now as enemies—enemies without claim on Christian love.

"In physical disease the most important step toward cure has been made when the presence of the disturbance is recognized and correctly diagnosticated. So it must be with crime. Once the individual 'crook' realizes his true condition and the danger he is in because of the unequal warfare which he wages with the world, then surely he is better armed for the fray.

"To make an end of my preaching, then, I will advise the individual as I have advised the whole society present. Let each man, as I have done, study out his own heritage. Let him analyze his birth and birthright and weigh the necessity of his leading a criminal life. Some will find the heritage so slight that it will be not difficult to effect a cure in themselves and to live honestly. These owe it to themselves, to society at large, but more particularly to their children, to strive toward that end.

"The other extreme will be the man whose heritage and whose youthful associations have been such that crime is inevitable. He is the moral leper. Let him remember that not the lazaretto, but the hangman, will be his fate if society should discover his condition.

"There is a law, however, that every man has the inherent right of self preservation. The rule applies to the moral leper as well as to the spotless virgin. The right being his, let him obtain the means. Let him first acquire knowledge, the wisdom of the world, the learning of books and, above all, the knowledge of himself. Let him beware how he commits a crime. If he must defy the law, and it will be inevitable that he must, let him plot and plan, be patient and cautious, cunning and wary, so that, having yielded to the impulse of crime when he can no longer resist, he may yet defy detection and that punishment which blind justice will mete out to him. Let him, in short, live as I live, a criminal by force of heritage and diseased moral centers, a born criminal, yet committing crime so seldom, so carefully and so cunningly that he may escape not alone punishment, but even suspicion. Above all things, let him obey the one greatest duty of his being. Let him not become the father of other criminals. Let his vice die with him. And may God pity such men, as men do not."

He ceased, and there was profound silence. There was no applause, yet it was evident that those present were much moved. They wore thoughtful countenances and seemed oblivious of their companions, as though all were preoccupied with introspective speculations.

Mr. Mitchel himself was deeply stirred. He had never met or heard of such a man as this. A born criminal he called himself, yet from all outward appearances a man of culture and refinement. He was a paradox. If he was truly the terrible criminal that he described himself to be, how wonderfully well he had benefited by the advice he had just given to others! He had truly acquired knowledge of the world and of himself, and in his great battle with the world he had armed himself with the best weapons with which to defend himself against suspicion.

Yet if a criminal, guilty of crimes yet unsuspected, what a problem to discover in what he had offended! On the other hand, if his pretense of criminality was merely assumed—if his association with the prison chaplain had made him in some sort a fanatical crank who preached for love of preaching and went among criminals because it pleased him to be one of themselves—then how skillfully he played his part and how well he deluded these men, all of whom undoubtedly would have scoffed at the idea that any man could dupe them.

From either point of view Mr. Mitchel thought that Preacher Jim would be a most interesting study, when he noticed that the man was apparently coming toward himself. He was very much astonished, however, when presently Preacher Jim stood before him and, extending his hand cordially, remarked quietly:

"Well, Mr. Mitchel, how did you enjoy the lecture?"

CHAPTER VI.

SET A THIEF TO CATCH A THIEF.

Mr. Mitchel quickly decided that it would be absurd to attempt to deny his identity. This was no ordinary man, and he had called him by his proper name with a confidence born of certainty. He thought it best even to conceal his surprise, and therefore, as though conversing with an old acquaintance, he answered quietly:

"I cannot recall ever having enjoyed a lecture so much. You have a wonderful grasp of your subject and marked ability in presenting it intelligibly. Indeed I am in your debt."

Mr. Mitchel was a man of great self control and had that mastery of manner which made it possible for him entirely to subdue his emotions and to conceal his thoughts when he so desired. It was therefore Preacher Jim who was now astonished, and he did not hide his feelings so well. He had prepared his little coup with much anticipatory satisfaction. He had hoped to see Mr. Mitchel start in alarm on learning that his identity was known—alarm that it should be known among such company and in such a place. He was therefore piqued at the nonchalant reply and for a moment lost his own customary self possession.

"You do not seem surprised at my knowing you!" he exclaimed irritably and in almost a threatening tone.

"I meet so many people and am so very poor at recalling faces," said Mr. Mitchel suavely, "that when one addresses me by name I take it as a matter of course that we have met before, even though the fact may have escaped my own memory. And this has happened to me so many times that it seldom surprises me."

"But we have never met before," said Preacher Jim, still in ominous tones.

Summer Clearing Sale of Odds & Ends In China.

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly—in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

Atfer The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices. Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen for, we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers of paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

EVER FELT THAT DEATH WOULD BE WELCOME?

Mrs. Margaret Smith often did until Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart gave her a new hope and cured her heart.

"I was for two years a great sufferer from heart trouble. At times I was confined to bed, at times my pain was so intense that I would have welcomed death with joy. I was attracted to Dr. Agnew's Cure for the Heart by reading of some wonderful cures wrought by it. One dose gave me relief in 30 minutes. After using four bottles I can truly say I never felt better in my life."—Margaret Smith, Brussels, Ont. 59

THE AUSTRALIAN BARS

BARMAIDS OF ADELAIDE LIKE A DROP OF FIZZ.

Prettier and More Stylish Than Young Women in Similar Occupations in West Australia—How a Jewess "Planted" the Wine and Spirit Circular's Sociologist and Investigator—Australians No Believers in Soft Drinks.

The expert investigator and indefatigable sociologist who illuminates the pages of Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular with accounts of the bars of many peoples has reached the land of the laughing jackass in his travels. Adelaide pleases him. American beers may be bought there, but the stronger waters familiar to all observers of dead walls and bill boards are not to be had. In Adelaide the sociologist reached the decision that the barmaids there are, as a class, prettier and more stylish than the young women in similar occupations in West Australia. In Adelaide the barmaids do not drink spirits, but "few will refuse a drop of fizz, for they not only like it, but to sell 'wine' redounds to the glory and profit of a barmaiden." The wages are low. The observer writes:

Their boys (to them every male human being from 17 to 70 is spoken of as a "boy") suffer in proportion to provide flowers, gloves, theatre tickets, silk blouses, shoes and occasionally coats, costumes or bits of jewelry for their particular fancies among those fascinating females.

Even the earnest student from abroad is lured to extravagance. The Circular's hero spent an hour or two each evening in one bar, "swapping tales with the barmaids." Hear his story:

Of these one was a Jewess of great beauty, who always called me "Doctor," because, she said, I resembled one who had cured her mother of some dreadful eye trouble. Well, Rene asked me to take her to the circus on her next night off, and said she would bring her mother, "who adored the circus." We consented, and at the time fixed met Rene "and her mother," and her father and married sister, and two brothers as well! Not bad for a plant, but we took our medicine smilingly, for cleverness ought always to be appreciated, even when it is displayed at one's expense.

The philosopher victimized keeps his temper. The circus was a great success. One evening the "largest Bengal tiger in existence" mouthed his trainer, "the great Mexican Lion King," a native of Jamaica.

The management reported the trainer's injuries as "slight," but he died before morning, and in twenty-four hours the circus management had an offer of £1,000 for the tiger, which previous to this incident had been held at £200. Advertising pays. The circus is not unduly prosperous, but the "earnings almost paid their gas bills." But the business situation demands attention. The brewers control most of the bars. Great inducements are necessary to obtain a foothold in the market. The outlook is by no means hopeless, however:

With a smooth, sound rye, not less than five years of age, a man versed in gentlemanly salesmanship (no "hustler" would succeed here), with tact and a little patience might pick his brewer—as he would have practically no competition from similar lines—and with some missionary work of his own, and conversion—by tips—of a few of the most popular of barmaids, a trade would be created in very short order, with profit to the exporter from this side whose whiskey could be made to net him at least $1.50 per gallon in bond, f.o.b., Atlantic or Pacific ports.

Given a sound, mature rye, a good man, a liberal allowance, capital and patience enough to wait a reasonable time for the adventure to become profitable, and we can get into that trade to stay; but success will be due mainly to eternal vigilance that no shipment be ever sent whose standard of quality, strength, color and flavor is not in all respects equal to that of the first shipment.

A pleasing future for the man versed in "gentlemanly salesmanship" to whom the Adelaide mission falls. "Adelaide, as to temperature, is delightful during the Antipodean autumn, winter and spring, say, from May to September; but during the other seven months it is what Gen. Sherman called war!" The barmaids are "deft and smiling, and at times even frivolous"—but not so the thrifty Rene. Adelaide is "the city of churches," and the best Scotch and brandy is sold at 12s a drink and pour your own poison.

There is a good band, the closing hours "are punctually observed," and Sundays are dry days, except in the big hotels. "Proprietors wax rich," for the "Australians are no believers in soft drinks."

He Did Not Bite.

There is a new London story about Charles Darwin.

"Two English boys," said Miss Leiter, "being friends of Darwin, thought one day that they would play a joke on him. They caught a butterfly, a grasshopper, a beetle and a centipede, and out of these creatures they made a strange, composite insect. They took the centipede's body, the butterfly's wings, the grasshopper's legs and the beetle's head, and they glued them together carefully. Then, with their new bug in a box, they knocked at Darwin's door.

"'We've caught this bug in a field,' they said. 'Can you tell us what kind of a bug it is, sir?'

"Darwin looked at the bug and then he looked at the boys. He smiled slightly.

"'Did it hum when you caught it?' he asked.

"'Yes,' they answered, nudging one another.

"'Then,' said Darwin, 'it is a humbug.'"

Mind is the beginning of civilization, but the ends and fruitage thereof are of the heart.

The Star Safety Razor

Has been on the market of the world for the last quarter of a century, it has always proved what it professed to be—" THE GENTLEMAN'S FRIEND."

It has given such absolute and general satisfaction, that it hardly seems necessary to call attention to the fact that it is that does not belie its name and is really a safety device, which renders shaving an easy and convenient luxury and pleasure, shaves clean, saves time, money and inconvenience.

The First Safety Razor

Municipal Matters.

A FEW THINGS THAT WILL PROVE OF INTEREST TO READERS OF THE INTELLIGENCER.

During a short conversation with Mayor Chown this morning The Intelligencer asked if it was true, as reported, that it was the intention of the Council to finish all the granolithic walks for which by-laws had been passed this year.

"I don't think so," said His Worship. "The motion passed was that $15,000 should be spent on walks. Of course, a motion might be made that another $5000 should be spent, but for my part I do not think it would be wise to do so this year."

"What walks have the committee decided to build this summer?" he was asked.

"The sidewalk men are now on Queen St.," was the reply, "both sides of which will be paved. Other walks to be paved this summer are: William St., from Victoria avenue to Forin St.; William St., from Queen St. to Bridge St., both sides; Front St., from Victoria avenue to Pinnacle St. That is all the walks the committee have so far decided on. I think there will be some money left after those walks are laid, and by that time we will have decided on further expenditures."

"Some people think," said the newspaper man, "that it is not wise to put granolithic walks on both sides of certain streets while others are allowed to do with the old board walks."

"I think myself," said the Mayor, "that it would be better, to do with single walks till the city has been more covered. It would certainly be more to the benefit of the citizens generally. However, the by-laws are passed, and people think the walks should be built."

So there you are.

THE BAPTIST CHURCH PROPERTY.

The committee appointed to confer with representatives from the Baptist church, in reference to purchasing from that body a portion of their property on the corner of Pinnacle St. and Victoria avenue, met last night. The Council's object is to secure, if possible, a slice of the property in order to obviate the abrupt turn which at present has to be made by vehicles driving up or down the hill which passes the Bank of Montreal. It is thought that the present condition of the street is dangerous. By acquiring a slice of the Baptist Church's property it would be possible to cut off the sharp corner, and make it a curve instead of a turn.

No decision was arrived at last night. The City Fathers, it appears, think the Baptists want too much, they demanding $400 and a granolithic sidewalk free, while the Aldermen think that $200, without any sidewalk, would be a fair price.

No conclusion was reached. Some of the Aldermen think that, if the city cannot acquire the slice of property at the figure named, the matter might well be dropped for this year, while the Baptists say they are not anxious to sell, anyhow, and, if they can't get their price, they won't sell at all.

So there you are, again.

MR. CORBY'S NEW YACHT.

HE HAS PURCHASED THE "SIESTA," OF SAULT STE. MARIE — PARTY LEAVES TO-NIGHT TO BRING HER HERE.

Mr. Henry Corby, ex-M.P., has just completed the purchase of the yacht "Siesta," of Sault Ste. Marie, from the Lake Superior Consolidated Copper Company, it being his intention to bring her to this port and use her for a pleasure yacht. Mr. Corby's new craft is 100 feet over all and 17 feet beam; fitted up luxuriantly and with fine accommodation for guests. A party in the employ of Mr. Corby will leave this evening for the "Soo," in order to bring the "Siesta" here. The time occupied in passage is expected to be two weeks.

The new yacht will be a welcome addition to Belleville's fleet of pleasure craft, which lately has been somewhat small.

PETERBORO PAPER POINTS A MORAL IN REGARD TO A RECENT DROWNING ACCIDENT.

The Peterboro Review, commenting on the recent drowning of a little girl named Olive Kidd there, has the following very timely and sensible remarks:

"It has always been a regrettable feature about our town, and the result of which was very noticeable at last night's accident on the steamer North Star, that a proper bathing and swimming place is not provided for our boys and girls to learn to swim, and indulge in the healthful pastime during the long summer months, and thus learn to protect themselves in times of necessity. Last night several young men were on board, and only one swam to the unfortunate child's rescue, and his attempt was futile. While perhaps there was not much chance of reaching her, there was also a possible chance of saving her, and a few good swimmers might have produced different results. In Toronto last week no less than 18,134 children took advantage of the different free baths there, and there is no reason in the world why Peterboro should not have similar places for bathing purposes. Quite a number of the young boys run a great risk and go bathing in Little Lake and other dangerous places, and this state of things should not be. While we may boast of our pretty parks, our great manufacturing institutions, etc., we must reproach ourselves when we think of our poor accommodation for the helpful exercises of our younger populace.

YACHTSMAN DROWNED NEAR ADOLPHUSTOWN.

SAD FATALITY LAST SATURDAY EVENING — WATERTOWN GENTLEMAN THE VICTIM.

Picton Gazette: A mile below Adolphustown on Saturday evening, about 8 o'clock, Mr. R. H. Gifford, a druggist of Watertown, N.Y., aged 36 years, met death by drowning. He was a member of the Crescent Yacht Club, of Watertown, N.Y., which was on a week's cruise of the Bay of Quinte, and was then heading for Picton where a grand reception was to have been tendered them by the Picton Yacht Club and citizens in general.

The party, consisting of some 25 yachts, with 70 or 80 people on board, had taken up positions along the shore to fish and otherwise enjoy themselves until Monday evening. The sailing yacht Neola, upon which Mr. Gifford was cruising, came up near Adolphustown and anchored for the night. Later in the evening the wind freshened and she began dragging her anchor, so Gifford and another man left in a small boat to get a stone off shore. They placed the stone in the bottom of the boat, and when throwing it over the rope attached is supposed to have caught in the oarlock, capsizing the boat and throwing the occupants into the water. Both had on oil skin coats, which dragged them down. Gifford's companion clung to the capsized boat. Gifford started to swim to shore, but sank almost immediately before help could reach him. They were about fifteen yards from shore and in about eight feet of water.

The body was recovered about 11 o'clock and taken to Bath, where it was embalmed and shipped on to Watertown. The funeral taking place to-day, and the entire fleet was ordered home in order to be present. Thus the beginning was the sad end of what promised to be a most enjoyable week's outing.

Telegrams of sympathy were sent to the Crescent Yacht Club, and family of deceased by His Worship, Mayor H. C. McMullen, Commodore H. S. Miller and other members of the Picton Yacht Club.

Cutting the Seats.

The water on Queen Victoria Park has gone down considerably during the past few days, but a portion of the roadway on the eastern side cannot yet be used for driving. In conversation with the caretaker The Intelligencer learned that a number of seats were being disfigured by parties cutting them with knives. An effort is being made to detect the guilty parties, who, if found out, will be severely dealt with.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

(The Globe.)

Ominous of a catastrophe to come were the bulletins sent out by Kuropatkin on Monday. Newchwang evacuated, Tatchekiao evacuated, a retreat by moonlight to Haicheng, the movement of over 30,000 Japanese north of Liaoyang with the evident purpose of cutting the railroad. After that, silence, save for an unconfirmed despatch in The Matin of Paris to the effect that the railroad had been cut and Kuropatkin isolated.

The Russians must fight their way through the foes, who now practically surround them, or surrender. Kuropatkin is a brave man and a tried leader. With his back to the wall he will fight stubbornly. What are his chances? There are lacking material facts, without which an opinion as to the probability of the Russians extricating themselves becomes mere guesswork. Even correspondents on the ground admit that they have no accurate knowledge as to the strength of the opposing armies. The most recent estimate of The Times' critic placed Kuroki's army at 80,000, Nodzu's Takushan army at 65,000 and Oku's Liaotung army at 60,000 men. The Russian commander-in-chief believes that more than seven divisions—a Japanese division at war strength being 16,000 men—were included in the army that drove him out of Tatchekiao. The best information to which the writer has access, leads to the belief that there are between 225,000 and 230,000 Japanese engaged in the movement against Kuropatkin, who has not more than 160,000 men between Haicheng and Mukden. Can an attacking force successfully encircle a defending force two-thirds as strong and compel it to surrender? Under ordinary conditions it would be a hazardous task, especially where the circle of defence, as in this case, is almost forty miles in diameter. The Japanese seem, however, to have no doubt as to the ultimate success of their campaign. They have better artillery than the Russians. They have the advantage of a vastly better intelligence service. They come to their task with the prestige of unbroken success. The Russians they are now pressing were beaten at the Yalu, at Telissu, at Kaichow, at Newchwang and again at Tatchekiao. There must be among the rank and file of Kuropatkin's army a lack of confidence in the leaders who have so often sent them into action under conditions that could only result in disaster. Taking all these factors into consideration, it would appear that Japan's great strategical movement is destined to succeed, and that the Czar's forces inn Manchuria will either be crushed in battle or forced to surrender.

BROKEN PARTY LINES

Over Mr. Maclean's Amendments to the Railway Act.

Several Members on Both Sides of the New Questions—Mr. R. L. Borden Voted Against Two of Mr. Maclean's Amendments—Three Division Lists Which Show Just How Members Stood With Regard to Proposed Changes.

Ottawa, July 27.—In the House yesterday morning, Dr. Sproule, as a question of privilege, inquired of the Premier whether it was the intention of the Government to adjourn the House from 6 until 9 o'clock last night, instead of meeting at eight o'clock, as usual, in order to enable the members to attend the farewell demonstration to Lord Dundonald. The Premier replied that at this late date of the session he thought the best way for members to serve the country was to attend to the business of the House.

Railway Act Amendment.

Upon the motion for the third reading of Mr. Fitzpatrick's bill amending the Railway Act Mr. Maclean again brought up the numerous amendments which he offered in committee. As he could not under the rules, however, speak more than once, he handed various amendments to other members of the Opposition, who moved them.

The first amendment, in the name of Mr. Blain, had for its object the subjection of express companies to the control of the Railway Commission. The amendment was lost on a vote of 33 yeas and 72 nays, on the following division:

Express Amendment Division.

Yeas—Armstrong, Avery, Bell, Bennett, Blain, Boyd, Broder, Clancy, Cochrane, Culbert, Earle, Ganong, Gilmour, Gourley, Halliday, Henderson, Ingram, Kaulbach, Lancaster, Maclean, McGowan, Morin, Porter, Puttee, Reid (Grenville), Richardson, Robinson (Elgin), Schell, Scott, Sproule, Thomson (Grey), Tolton, Wilson. Total—33.

Nays—Angers, Barker, Bazinet, Beith, Blanchet, Borden (Halifax), Borden (Sir Frederick), Bourbonnais, Brodeur, Brown, Bruce, Bruneau, Bureau, Champagne, Christie, Copp, Costigan, Cowan, Delisle, Demers (Levis), Erb, Fielding, Fitzpatrick, Fortier, Gauvreau, Gervais, Gibson, Grant, Harty, Heyd, Holmes, Hughes (Kings, P.E.I.), Hyman, Johnston (Cape Breton), Kendall, Lang, Laurier (Sir Wilfrid), Lavergne (Drummond and Arthabaska), Leblanc, Lennox, Loy, MacDonald, MacLaren (Huntingdon), McCarthy, McCool, McGugan, McIsaac, McLennan, Marcil (Bagot), Matheson, Mignault, Morrison, Murray, Oliver, Paterson, Prefontaine, Pringle, Riley, Rosamond, Ross (Ontario), Ross (Victoria, N.S.), Ross (Yukon), Russell, Stephens, Stewart, Talbot, Thompson (Haldimand and Monck), Tobin, Tolmie, Turgeon, Wade, Wright. Total—72.

Where Parties Split.

Messrs. Scott, Wallace, Schell and Puttee, on the Government benches, voted for, and Messrs. R. L. Borden, Lennox, Barker, Bruce, Pringle and Rosamond of the Opposition voted against the amendment.

Mr. Borden Against.

Mr. Maclean's amendment providing for a graded scale of passenger rates from two cents a mile upwards, according to the earnings of the railway, was also voted down. Mr. R. L. Borden opposed this as well as the preceding amendment. While not yielding to anyone in his desire to obtain reduced rates, he thought the amendment was undesirable and might result in the postponement of the desired end and in retarding railway development in Canada. There was nothing to show the conditions in the Dominion were similar to those in Michigan, the legislation of which State was the foundation upon which the amendment was based. Within six months of the establishment of the Railway Commission for the especial purpose of dealing with this matter, it would be unwise to pass this legislation before the Commission had an opportunity of dealing with it. The question of freight rates was in any event more important than passenger rates. He could see that if the amendment carried the G. T. R. might by operating their branches under the names of different companies impose a higher scale of rates than are now charged.

Passenger Rates Vote.

The vote on the amendment was 17 yeas, 95 nays, as follows:

Yeas—Armstrong, Bennett, Blain, Clancy, Cochrane, Halliday, Ingram, Kidd, Lennox, Maclean, McGowan, Monk, Robinson (Elgin), Sproule, Thomson (Grey), Ward, Wilson. Total, 17.

Nays—Barker, Bazinet, Beith, Blanchet, Borden (Halifax), Borden (Sir Frederick), Bourbonnais, Boyd, Broder, Brodeur, Brown, Bruce, Bruneau, Bureau, Calvert, Carbonneau, Champagne, Christie, Copp, Costigan, Cowan, Delisle, Demers (Levis), Erb, Fielding, Fitzpatrick, Fortier, Gallery, Ganong, Gauvreau, Gervais, Gibson, Gilmour, Girard, Harty, Henderson, Heyd, Holmes, Hughes (Kings, P.E.I.), Hyman, Johnston (Cape Breton), Johnston (Lambton), Kaulbach, Kendall, Lancaster, Lang, Lapointe, Laurier (Sir Wilfrid), Lavergne (Drummond and Arthabaska), Leblanc, Loy, Macdonald, Maclaren (Huntingdon), MacPherson, McCarthy, McColl, McCool, McGugan, McIsaac, McLennan, Marcil (Bagot), Matheson, Mignault, Morin, Morrison, Oliver, Paterson, Porter, Prefontaine, Pringle, Puttee, Reid (Grenville), Richardson, Riley, Rivet, Roche (Halifax), Rosamond, Ross (Ontario), Ross (Victoria, N. S.), Ross (Yukon), Russell, Schell, Scott, Smith (Vancouver), Stephens, Stewart, Talbot, Taylor, Thompson (Haldimand and Monck), Tobin, Tolton, Tucker, Turgeon, Wade, Wright, Total, 95.

Conservative Votes Against.

Independent Telephone Companies.

The amendment limiting compensation to be paid by independent telephone companies for connection with railway stations to the actual damage to the property was voted down by 25 yeas to 74 nays, on the following division:

Yeas—Armstrong, Beith, Bennett, Blain, Cochrane, Halliday, Heyd, Ingram, Kidd, Lang, Lennox, Maclean, McGowan, Oliver, Porter, Puttee, Reid (Grenville), Robinson (Elgin), Ross (Ontario), Scott, Smith (Vancouver), Sproule, Tolton, Ward, Wilson. Total, 25.

Nays—Barker, Bazinet, Blanchet, Borden (Sir Frederick), Bourbonnais, Brodeur, Brown, Bruce, Bruneau, Bureau, Calvert, Carbonneau, Champagne, Christie, Clancy, Copp, Costigan, Cowan, Delisle, Demers (Levis), Erb, Ethier, Fielding, Fitzpatrick, Fortier, Gallery, Ganong, Gauvreau, Gervais, Gibson, Girard, Harty, Henderson, Holmes, Hyman, Johnston (Cape Breton), Johnston (Lambton), Kaulbach, Laurier (Sir Wilfrid), Lavergne (Drummond and Arthabaska), Lavergne (Montmagny), Leblanc, Loy, Macdonald, Maclaren, (Huntingdon), McCarthy, McColl, McCool, McGugan, McIsaac, McLennan, Marcil (Bagot), Matheson, Mignault, Monk, Morin, Morrison, Paterson, Prefontaine, Riley, Rivet, Ross (Victoria, N. S.), Ross (Yukon), Russell, Schell, Stephens, Stewart, Talbot, Thompson (Haldimand and Monck), Tobin, Tucker, Turgeon, Wade, Wright. Total, 74.

Parties Split Again.

Messrs. Heyd, Lang, Ross of Ontario; Beith, W. Scott, Ralph Smith and Oliver on the Government side voted yea, and Messrs. Monk, Kaulbach, Clancy, Barker, Bruce, Henderson, Ganong and Morin of the Opposition voted against the amendment.

To the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick announced that as far as the Government was concerned it had been decided that judgment by the Railway Commission upon the question of the agreement between the Bell Telephone Co. and the C.P.R. Company would have to go to the Supreme Court for confirmation.

The Sunday Laws.

There was a discussion on the clause relating to the running of railways on Sunday. Mr. Fitzpatrick explained that the bill would simply remove a possible anomaly in this respect by declaring that all local railways as regards Sunday observances, would still be under Provincial jurisdiction. As to validating future legislation of the Provinces, that was done now in regard to the Federal franchise.

The bill was then read a third time and passed, and the House went into Committee of Supply.

The estimates of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries were taken up.

Mr. Prefontaine stated the question of division of jurisdiction as between the Dominion and the Provinces in the protection of the fisheries was being referred to the Supreme Court.

Village Wiped Out.

London, July 27.—The Daily Mail publishes a despatch from Taurus, Asia Minor, saying that on July 13 the well-known chief, Cheikh Salan, attacked and destroyed the village of Dotchkilissa. Twenty-five persons were killed, including a priest and servants attached to a convent. Women were violated and taken into slavery. The despatch says that massacres are expected in the Sandjak of Bayazid and immediate help is urgently called for.

BALFOUR IS RETICENT

Cabinet Reviews the Sinking of the Knight Commander.

Premier, in the House, Said He Was Not Yet in a Position to Make An Authoritative Statement—Believes, However, That the Declaration of Paris in 1856 Contemplated the Abolition of Privateering.

London, July 27.—Premier Balfour, replying to a question in the House of Commons yesterday in regard to the sinking of the British steamer Knight Commander by the Russians off the coast of Japan, said enquiries were being made on the subject, but he was not yet in a position to make a statement. Replying to another question, the Premier said the Government was not aware of any convention concluded in 1901 between Turkey and Russia providing special conditions for the passage of the Dardanelles by Russian ships.

Abolition of Privateering.

Mr. Balfour, while disclaiming that he was giving an authoritative decision, said that he believed the declaration of Paris in 1856, contemplated the abolition of privateering, and that a neutral flag covers an enemy's merchandise, except when contraband of war. Dealing with the question of whether the Russian volunteer vessels being private ships commissioned by the State were different materially from privateers, the Premier said that the whole question of the status of the volunteer ships was now under discussion between Great Britain and Russia, and that it would not be desirable to discuss that point in the House of Commons at present.

Meeting of Cabinet.

London, July 27.—The sinking of the British steamer Knight Commander by the Russian cruisers off Japan was discussed at a meeting of the Cabinet yesterday, held at the Foreign Office. Before the meeting Count Benckendorff, the Russian Ambassador, was closeted with Foreign Secretary Lansdowne, and discussed in detail the operations of the Russian cruisers in connection with neutral shipping, but as the Russian Embassy had not been officially informed by the Russian Government of the destruction of the Knight Commander, the Ambassador was unable to make any statement to the Foreign Secretary. The Knight Commander incident is attracting close official and public interest.

Notice Not Delivered.

London, July 27.—The Foreign Office had not heard of the seizure of the steamer Formosa yesterday afternoon, and while expressing regret, it says the only possible explanation consists in the fact that the Russian Government's orders to cease interfering with neutral vessels, have not yet reached the commanders of the volunteer fleet steamers, as the Russian Government has given the most explicit pledge that there shall be no more Red Sea seizures. The Formosa left Suez July 23, bound for Yokohama.

Stiff Notice Sent.

London, July 27.—While the negotiations between Great Britain and Russia, respecting the Red Sea seizures, have been carried on in the most conciliatory manner the Associated Press learns that in the representations to the St. Petersburg Government, Foreign Secretary Lansdowne declared that Great Britain could not, in view of her treaty alliance with Japan, allow any interpretation to be placed on treaties relating to the Dardanelles, which would permit of the free passage of vessels of the Russian volunteer fleet from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean, with the view of their subsequent employment for war purposes.

Caught in Red Sea.

Suez, July 27.—The Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Company's steamer Formosa has just arrived here flying the Russian naval flag, and with a prize crew on board. She was captured in the Red Sea by one of the vessels of the Russian volunteer fleet.

Another Ship Seized.

Liverpool, July 27.—The owners of the British steamer Catchas, bound from Puget Sound to Japan, have received a telegram from Hong Kong, reporting that the Catchas has been seized by the Vladivostock squadron. The steamer Catchas, belonging to the Alfred Holt fleet of Liverpool, sailed from Tacoma, Wash., July 9, and was due to arrive at Yokohama Wednesday or Thursday. She carried a considerable quantity of flour, consigned to Japanese firm, and also had on board much other general freight.

British Government Acts.

London, July 27.—The British Government is taking energetic action in the case of the sinking of the British steamer Knight Commander by the Vladivostock squadron. All information received by the Government tends to establish in the official mind that an outrage has been committed for which no excuse exists in international law. Those aware of the feelings of the ministry said last night that all the members of the Cabinet are in accord regarding the principle of the inviolability of innocent neutral shipping, as well as upon the principle that a neutral ship cannot be destroyed even if carrying contraband of war.

Will Include Compensation.

The demands which will be made upon the Russian Government will include compensation to the owners of the ship and to the owners of the goods on board the Knight Commander, an apology for the action of the Russian cruisers and an agreement that instructions be given, which will prevent a repetition of such action. British ship-owners are up in arms over the dangers which shipping is now running, and are bombarding the Government with representations looking to the thorough protection of their interests.

Papers Grow Angry.

A majority of the morning papers, however, print editorials in an angry strain on the further reported seizures by the Russians and the delay in the release of the Malacca.

The Daily Mail's Suez correspondent says that the steamer Formosa will be released this morning.

It is rumored that Japanese warships have arrived in the Red Sea.

OTTAWA TO DUNDONALD.

20,000 Citizens See the Soldier Go—Presented With Address He Replies With Much Feeling.

Ottawa, July 27.—With the cheers of ten thousand people ringing in his ears and ten thousand more choking the avenues of approach to the central station, Lord Dundonald drew out of Ottawa last night. A few hundred yards below the station beneath the Laurier bridge, where the clamor of the crowds was faintly audible, the train stopped and Lord Dundonald bade a last farwell to the city of Ottawa. Mayor Ellis and a number of leading citizens of Ottawa had accompanied His Lordship as far as the Laurier bridge.

Mayor Ellis' Address.

Before leaving the car Mayor Ellis addressed His Lordship as follows: "On behalf of, I think I may safely say, the great majority of the citizens of Ottawa, I have to bid you good-by. It is with the deepest feeling of sorrow and regret that I do so. When you were appointed G.O.C. of the Canadian militia, the people of Canada felt that the British Government had honored them by nominating an officer who had earned a great reputation on the field of battle. During your two years' residence in the Dominion we have all felt, and particularly the rank and file of the militia, that at last we had a general at the head of affairs who would put the organization of the militia on a sound and substantial basis. We regret that you have to leave this work unfinished. We are sorry that circumstances have arisen to occasion the severance of your connection with the force. We would have liked you to have stayed with us to carry to a successful completion the work which you have so well inaugurated. But it was not to be, and to our great regret you are leaving us. In so doing, allow me to wish you every success in your future career and to assure you that you carry with you the good wishes and the esteem of the vast majority of the people of Canada."

Dundonald in Reply.

Lord Dundonald in relpy said: "Mr. Mayor, ladies and gentlemen: I thank you, and through you all those who are beyond my voice, for the testimony of friendship. It is more than I had any right to expect. I can only say that I leave Ottawa and its people with the deepest regret. What more can I say of the people of Ottawa, and, indeed, of the people of Canada, then they were friends to me in my so-called prosperity and in my adversity, for every friend that I previously had, a thousand others came forward. I would not have been human if under these circumstances I did not look with love and affection upon Canada and its people, and wherever in future my lot may be cast, my thoughts and my actions will be guided by this feeling which they will not be able to efface, and with these words, gentlemen, I bid you farewell."

The mayor and other gentlemen then said "good by," and amid the cheers of the crowd on the bridge and those assembled at the car, the special car pulled out for Montreal.

People's Demonstration.

It was essentially a people's demonstration. There was no dearth of music, despite the refusal of the Guards' band to turn out. The pipe band of the Fifth Royal Scots, the Ottawa Pipers and the Glengarry Pipers, accompanied His Lordship from Crichton Lodge. They played "Cock o' the North," "The Campbells are Coming" and other Scotch airs. Brass bands from Perth, Arnprior, Almonte, Renfrew, Smith's Falls and Hull also took part.

Reaches Montreal.

Montreal, July 27.—The arrival of the Earl of Dundonald in Montreal last evening will long be remembered. The train was greeted with tremendous cheering, and when the general stepped on the platform the applause was deafening, and the pipers played "The Campbells Are Coming." Lord Dundonald was escorted to the Windsor, where he made a speech, receiving another ovation as he concluded.

Rear Admiral Taylor Dead.

Sudbury, July 27.—Rear-Admiral H. G. Taylor, U.S.N., who commanded the Indiana at the battle of Santiago, died at Copper Cliff General Hospital at 8.15 o'clock last night of peritonitis. Admiral Taylor arrived at Sudbury the 16th of this month on a visit to his son, Roger Taylor, superintendent of smelters at the Canadian Copper Company's works at Copper Cliff, and took suddenly ill at the Balmoral Hotel. The body left by the C.P.R. train last night en route for Washington, accompanied by Mrs. Taylor, her two sons and daughter.

Investigation Closes.

Montreal, July 27.—Some lively evidence came out at yesterday morning's session of the Judge Winchester investigation into the Italian immigration troubles. Cordasca, the famous Italian labor agent, again came in for a severe scoring as to his modes. Despite the events of the last few days, it appeared that he was still charging the Italians $2 apiece to get them jobs, notwithstanding the fact that this was forbidden in the contract with the C.P.R. Another foreman named Braine was examined. The investigation closed yesterday.

"BEST MAN" IS SCOTCH

GROOMSMAN'S DUTIES IN THE OLDEN TIMES WERE ONEROUS.

He Gave the Bride Away After Having Lifted the Bride Over the Threshold—Ancient and Widespread Custom Which Has Caused Much Shedding of Ink—He Also Passed the Cake and Cups.

It may be a surprise to some people to know, says The London Globe, that the phrase "best man"—the bridegroom's nearest attendant—is of Scottish origin. In the North, also, the principal bridesmaid used to be called the "best maid." Neither expression has much to recommend it. It is a great pity, indeed, that "best man," an inelegant and in itself meaningless phrase, should have so completely ousted from our common everyday speech the good old English name of "brideman" or "bridesman." Another old name is "groomsman," and in days gone by the bridegroom was attended, not by one friend, but by several, who were known as the bridemen or groomsmen.

The term "best man" came into use, presumably, to indicate the one of these who took the lead in performing their various duties and was in closest attendance on the bridegroom. In recent years the custom of having groomsmen has been occasionally revived, but it has not become general. At a fashionable wedding, four or five years ago, the bride was content with five bridesmaids and two pages, whereas the bridegrooms was supported by no fewer than nine groomsmen.

But at the present time such an array has by no means the same meaning, nor are those attendant friends of so much use, as in days of old. The forerunner of the brideman was the brideleader, whose duty it was to bring the bride to the bridegroom. In most countries where the real or pretended capture of the bride was an essential part of the ceremony, and wherever traces of the very ancient custom of bride capture existed, the friend or friends of the bridegroom had the important office of capturing the lady and bringing her to her lord.

In one of Dryden's plays there is the line: "Betwixt her guards she seemed by bridemen led," and Brand tells us that at many old English weddings the bridegroom was led to the church between two maids, and the bride by two young men, holding her by the arms as if unwilling. This was evidently a survival of the idea of capture.

The same idea, somewhat more disguised, can be traced in the custom which was not unknown at old-fashioned weddings less than a century ago, in the North of England, and in the West of Scotland, of the bridegroom's "best man" escorting the bride to the church. It has been disputed, naturally, whether the groom's nearest friend was chosen as escort with the idea of protecting the lady from seizure by others, or whether he might be regarded as the leader in the act of capture.

But whichever idea lay at the back of the practice, it was clearly a survival connected with the custom of marriage by capture. Later, the bridemen had various functions to perform which have now become obsolete. There was still a trace of the capture idea in the old duty at one time assigned to the brideman of giving the bride away. He led her to the church and then acted the part now filled by the lady's father or other near male relative.

In the old seventeenth century ballad of the "Golden Glove," which used to be a great favorite at rural gatherings in all parts of the country in the old, unsophisticated days, before the melancholy monstrosities of the modern music hall had driven the genuine old English ballads and songs out of use and memory—in this ballad there are the lines which allude to the custom named:

"I thought you had been at the wedding," she cried,
"To wait on the squire and give him his bride."

And it has been pointed out that the same custom may be hinted at in the marriage service rubric—"The minister receiving the woman at her father's or friend's hands."

Among the Shropshire peasantry in quite recent years something of the old custom seems to have prevailed. Miss Burne, in her delightful book on "Shropshire Folklore," says that at weddings in humble life the bride's father is seldom and her mother never present. As a rule the only companions to church of the bride and groom are the best man and the bridesmaid. In such circumstances it is obvious that the lady must be given away by her lover's friend, on whose arm she has walked to church.

A still more curious thing is that it is considered lucky, Miss Burke tells us, for either the best man or the bridesmaid to be already married. "I have really seen," she writes, "a married woman acting as 'bridesmaid!'" Less than twenty years ago a Newport newspaper, describing a village wedding, said that Mr. and Mrs. So-and-so, of ——, "accompanied the happy couple and performed the offices of best man and bridesmaid, respectively."

Another old function of the bridemen, or bridesquires, as they were sometimes called, was to carry round the cake and the bridebowl. The bridebowl, or cup, was handed round at a wedding, so that the friends might drink the health of the newly married pair—a kind of loving-cup ceremony.

But before the proceedings had reached this pleasant point, it had been the duty of the bridemen to lift the bride over the threshold. This is an ancient and widespread custom, the meaning of which has caused much shedding of ink. In the west of Scotland, of old, says Mr. Napier, in his book on the folklore of that region, "the threhold of the house was disenchanted by charms, and by anointing it with certain unctuous perfumes, but as it was considered unlucky for the wife to tread upon the threshold on first entering her house, she was lifted over it and seated upon a piece of wood, a symbol of domestic industry."

The custom is not confined to European peoples, for a somewhat analogous practice exists in China, where the bride is carried into the house by a matron, and at the door is lifted over a pan of charcoal. Apart from marriage, even in this country, there are folk who are careful on entering a house to step over and not on the threshold. There is a world of lore, indeed, surrounding the subject of the threshold into which we cannot here enter.

The modern best man may feel thankful that his duties are not so onerous as those of his predecessors of long ago; nor need he trouble to be on his guard against unlucky omens, or on the watch to propitiate the uncertain goddess, Fate.

THE DEAR CHILDREN.

Some of the Funny Things They Do and Say in British Schools.

Of an equally unexpected nature was an answer which a teacher received from a lad during a lesson on "Moses and the burning bush."

The master asked:

"What was it that Moses had to do when standing before the burning bush?"

"Take off his shoes," replied one scholar.

"And after that?"

"Oh," replied the next lad, "take off his stockings and warm his feet!"

In a lesson on the prodigal son, a schoolmistress got a very amusing answer in connection with the surly conduct of the righteous brother who had never gone astray.

"How did the envious brother behave whilst the prodigal was being feasted inside their father's house?" the lady asked.

"He wouldn't go into the party," replied one mite of a girl, "but stopped outside and peeped through the letterbox to see what was going on."

The following anecdotes seem to show that teachers nowadays have special difficulties with Bible subjects. A diocesan inspector in the course of his examination asked the question:

"How is the date of Good Friday determined?"

Presently one boy answered:

"It is the date when Christmas day happens to fall on a Friday."

"No; next boy," said the inspector.

"It is the day when Jesus was born and children are good," was the reply.

In connection with this same day, too, another inspector had occasion to ask the question:

"Why do bakers place a cross on the buns that are to be eaten on Good Friday?"

And one business-like lad replied:

"So that he'll know his own buns again if any boy steals them!"

During a lesson on the origin of Palm Sunday, a lady teacher asked her class of boys and girls:

"What was the people's idea in scattering palm branches in the road?"

And one lad, who evidently considered the question quite easy, replied:

"So as to trip the donkey up, ma'am!"

Another inspector got a still more extraordinary piece of information from a Board school lad during an examination in French grammar.

"How is it that the French have not a possessive case?" he asked.

"The French would have possession if they could, sir," answered the lad, jumbling up his grammar and history together, "but the Germans won't let them!"

Had Greatness Thrust Upon Him.

A recent issue of The London Star had the following: Capt. E. T. Troubridge, R.N., late Naval Attache at Tokio, a relative of Sir T. H. C. Troubridge, and a descendant of the gallant admiral who distinguished himself so highly at the battle of St. Vincent, is in the category of those who have greatness thrust upon them. In the morning paper of the 4th June, a report from the New York correspondent of a London paper was telegraphed from St. Petersburg, in which it was stated that:

"Capt. Troubridge is responsible for Admiral Togo's successes, having planned the night attack on Port Arthur, and being present at it in person."

In view of the possibility that misunderstanding may be caused were this statement to remain uncontradicted, Capt. Troubridge writes to The Times from an address no further east that Chelsea, to say: "I was not responsible for Admiral Togo's successes; I did not plan the night attack on Port Arthur, and I was not present at it in person." This is fairly categorical and conclusive.

Destructive Ivy.

A striking lesson as to the destructive effects of the unchecked growth of ivy can now be seen a few miles to the north of London. A fine old parish church has been wrecked by this green parasite, which has been too long encouraged from a false idea of picturesque beauty—the old Essex Church of All Saints, Chingford. Last February, in the midst of bleak, windy weather, the crash came; the whole roof of the nave and south aisle collapsed in a complete wreck, shaking and imperilling the walls, which are bound speedily to follow.—Athenaeum.

Necessary.

A young Scotch minister, with an exalted opinion of his forensic powers, said one morning to his man in the kirk: "I don't think, John, I need put the gown on. It's only an incumbrance, though some folk seem to think it makes a preacher more impressive."

Verger John—Aye, aye, sir. That's just it. It makes ye mair impressive, an' ye need it, sir; ye need it.—London Sporting Times.

Colonies and the Motherland.

London, July 28.—(C.A.P.)—In the House of Commons yesterday, replying to Mr. Buchanan, Hon. Mr. Lyttelton said that none of the self-governing colonies had ever offered the open home market of such colony to British manufacturers on equal terms with colonial manufacturers or on terms better relatively to colonial manufacturers than those now existing. The general attitude of the self-governing colonies in respect to this matter was defined by the resolution passed at the Colonial Conference. Steps had been taken by some of the self-governing colonies to give effect to the resolution, but without any consultation or bargaining with the mother country.

British Government Demands That Russia Salute Our Flag.

Note of Protest Sent to St. Petersburg Demanding Reparation and An Apology for the Sinking of the Knight Commander—Based Upon Report of Sir Claude Macdonald That Ship Had No Contraband of War on Board.

London, July 28.—The British Government sent instructions to Sir Charles Hardinge, the British Ambassador to Russia, yesterday to energetically protest against the sinking of the British steamer Knight Commander by the Russian Vladivostock squadron. Until the presentation of the note to the Russian Government the greatest secrecy will be maintained regarding its contents, but it is known that Premier Balfour and his colleagues have decided to demand that the fullest reparation shall be made by Russia or measures will be taken to follow up the diplomatic demands.

Indemnity and Apology.

The British note, as Sir Charles Hardinge will submit it, will not mention the amount of indemnity Russia may pay the owners of the ship and British subjects having goods on board the vessel, but all that will be sought will be the establishment of the principle of indemnity and apology. A salute of the British flag must also be conceded, and the future protection of neutral shipping assured.

No Justification For Sinking.

The attitude of the British Government is the result of the thorough consideration given to the reports received from Sir Claude Macdonald, the British Minister at Tokio, and the examination of international law authorities by legal experts. The despatches from Sir Claude Macdonald confirm the reports that the Knight Commander had no contraband of war on board for Japan. The Government and all the British authorities, it is asserted, unite on the point that there was no justification for the sinking of the vessel.

It is felt in Government circles that the Knight Commander incident overshadows the Red Sea seizures, which practically have been adjusted, but which have failed to settle the question of the rights of neutral commerce.

The Russian Contentions.

No representations have been made by Count Benckendorff, the Russian Ambassador to Great Britain, to Foreign Secretary Lansdowne regarding the Knight Commander, the Ambassador not having received advices from St. Petersburg on the subject, nor is it seen by the Russian diplomats how it is possible for their Government to make a prompt answer to the British demands. It is not known when the Vladivostock squadron will return to port. The commander of the squadron, it is pointed out, unquestionably seized the papers of the vessel, including her manifest, and therefore will be able to present reasons to show why they sank the ship, and the Russian authorities thus will be able to answer the British representations. In the opinion of these diplomats the cargo of the Knight Commander included contraband of war, under the Russian declaration. The bridge work is said to have been destined for the Fusan-Seoul railroad, which the Japanese are building for military purposes. The Russian declaration also announces that rice and other foodstuffs are contraband if sent at the enemy's cost or order. Attention is specifically called to the feature of the declaration saying that "neutral ships with contraband of war of any sort can be not only seized, but also confiscated." If the ship can be confiscated it is contended she can be sunk as well. While Russia holds that her declaration has never been seriously questioned, the British authorities claim that the British Ambassador at St. Petersburg first specifically reserved the rights of his Government in case of an emergency arising and, later, filed objections against the various provisions of the declaration. The United States also reserved her rights when acknowledging the receipt of the Russian declaration. The British authorities are persistent in their desire to induce the United States to make a declaration of its policy in the protection of commerce, but nothing has yet been done, so far as known here.

Prepared to Act.

Washington, July 28.—The State Department has finally received a formal protest against the action of the Russian navy in seizing American goods, and as a result of its preliminary study of the law and precedents governing the subject, it is prepared to act energetically and promptly. This protest relates to the seizure of an American steamer Arabia, bound from Portland, Ore., for Hong Kong, China.

Two Others Released.

Suez, July 28.—The Peninsula & Oriental Steamship Co.'s steamer Formosa, which was captured in the Red Sea by the volunteer fleet steamer Smolensk, and which arrived here Tuesday flying the Russian naval flag and with a prize crew on board, has been released. The Hamburg-American liner steamer Holsatia, which arrived here yesterday morning, also having on board a prize crew, has likewise been released.

Malacca Surrendered.

Algiers, July 28.—After a protracted conference on board the Malacca between the British and Russian Consuls and Captain Schwartz, commanding the prize crew, it was announced that the Russian flag would be replaced by the British at 6 o'clock last evening.

Without Colors.

Perim, Red Sea, July 28.—Two Russian vessels, supposed to be the volunteer fleet steamers St. Petersburg and Smolensk, passed here yesterday morning, bound for Jibutil, French Somaliland. They showed no colors.

Delayed By Russians.

Island of Perim, Straits of Bab-el-Mandeb, July 28.—The British steamer City of Agra (last reported at Liverpool for Kurrachee), passed here yesterday, and signalled that she had been delayed by a Russian warship in the Red Sea.

Breach of International Law.

London, July 28.—That the British Government regards the sinking of the steamer Knight Commander as a breach of international law was confirmed by Premier Balfour in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon. Answering questions regarding the destruction of the Knight Commander and the seizure of the Malacca and other vessels, the Premier said he hoped to be in a position to make a brief statement regarding the Malacca to-day. As to the sinking of the Knight Commander, he "regretted that information which reached me this morning confirmed this regrettable occurrence." Mr. Balfour added: "There is no question of loss of life, but I am afraid there is a question of a breach of international law."

Questions at Issue Discussed.

A lengthy meeting of the Defence Committee took place yesterday under the Presidency of Premier Balfour, at which the Attorney-General, Sir Robert Finlay, was present. The Attorney-General does not usually attend these meetings, but it was stated that the questions at issue between Russia and Great Britain were under discussion and that Sir Robert was called in to advise as to the question of international law involved.

Navy Getting Ready.

London, July 28.—It was reported yesterday that all orders for the British naval manoeuvres have been countermanded, that the various squadrons have been ordered not to move, that all leave of absences have been cancelled, and that officers and men on furlough have been recalled. The home and channel fleets had already been moved into a position to undertake important manoeuvres. This report was later denied on Government authority.

RUSSIAN VESSEL COALED.

She Then Stopped Twice and Seized [illegible] Ships.

London, July 28.—Thomas G [illegible] Bowles (Conservative) will ask Premier Balfour in the House of Commons to-day if the Government is aware that the Russian armored cruiser Dmitri Donskoi, after being allowed to take five hundred tons of coal at Port Said, and after her captain had given his word of honor that he would proceed at once and by the direct route to Cadiz, remained off Port Said and stopped and examined six vessels which were about to enter the canal, and a few days later repeated the stoppage off Alexandria. Mr. Bowles also wants to know what steps the Government will take to prevent belligerent ships securing at British ports "coal to be used in operations of war."

THE CONSERVATIVE RAILWAY POLICY.

The electors of Canada must not forget that one of the most distinctive features of Mr. Borden's railway policy is that any railways owned by the Government must be operated under non-political and non-partizan management. The Intercolonial, under political and partizan management, has not been a success. The logical and rational reform in such a case is to abolish the political and partizan management, and to place the operation of the railway in the hands of railway experts, "free from political, partizan control or interference." These are the words by which the required reform was described in Mr. Borden's well known amendment in the House, and this is the sort of management which he proposes for the publicly owned and publicly operated railways of Canada. The Grit Government is running the Intercolonial in the worst possible way, and they point to their own bad work and say: "That is the sort of railway management that Mr. Borden would extend all the way across the continent." This is simply a Grit partizan lie. Mr. Borden and the Conservative party proposes no such thing as the extension of the political operation of railways in Canada; what they do propose is the abolition of that system out and out, and the substitution therefor of expert, non-partizan management.

As an instance of how that kind of management works in other countries, it is only necessary to look at the case of the railways of Australia. Formerly they were under political management, showing each year a deficit of from one to two million dollars. About a year ago they were placed under the management of a non-partizan commission, and the satisfactory results already flowing from the change are thus described by the London Railway Gazette:

> "The recent report of the Victorian railways in Australia for the month of January, 1904, shows that they are rapidly approaching a dividend-paying basis. For several years past they have had to exact a subsidy of from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000 a year from the general revenue, to make good their perennial state of deficit. The improvement shown is largely due to the efforts of the Board of Railroad Commissioners, who were appointed to take charge of the affairs of the Victorian railways in June, 1903. The report for January shows that although 33,287 less train miles were run during that month than in the corresponding month in 1903, gross earnings increased from $1,470,035 to $1,801,545. Operating expenses, on the other hand, increased only $4,700, leaving a handsome gain in net earnings of $326,180. The percentage of operating expenses to gross earnings during January, 1904, was $50.02, as against $60.98 in January, 1903. This report is all the more creditable when we consider that the commission has only been working for six months, and is a feather in the cap of Mr. Tait, the new manager from Canada."

There, in a nutshell, is the sort of railway management that Mr. Borden and the Conservative party proposes for Canada, and that is the sort of railway management which the Laurier Government is opposing with all its might, and endeavoring to prevent in this country for fifty or a hundred years to come. No country, outside of disastrous war, was ever threatened with greater evil than Canada now is by the Government's vicious railway deal; and no effort and alertness on the part of the people to defend their rights and liberties can be greater than the circumstances demand.

TIMELY TOPICS.

The Ottawa Journal, an independent paper with a decided liking for the Liberal side of politics, thus expressed itself on the last day Lord Dundonald spent in Ottawa:

> "The best answer the people of Ottawa and its neighborhood can give to the scurrilities with which Lord Dundonald has been assailed here is a big turn-out to-night in honor of the general.
>
> "Let him depart with the cheers of many thousand people ringing in his ears.
>
> "And let us hope that he will come back some day with public honor."

Amen! to that.

The moon is now full, but the honeymoon of the June bride has probably reached its last quarter.

• • •

People who are camping out in this vicinity must have enjoyed those "gentle showers" last night.

• • •

Some people are asking when the Public Works department is going to take away those unsightly piles of dirt which have been left on certain streets where granolithic walks have been laid.

• • •

Who says plank sidewalks are short-lived affairs? A party on the west side alleges that there is a plank sidewalk there which was laid 26 years ago and has had no repairs to it since. People who walk on it now, though, are liable to need a few repairs.

• • •

Have those grave and reverend seigniors, the members of the Board of Health, any intention of following up the bluff they made a day or two ago in reference to people who, it is alleged, drain into that ravine on Church St.? Or is that thing to be allowed to continue and breed malarial fever, as it surely will unless the nuisance is abated before long. People who passed through the High School yard yesterday say the stench was "something awful."

• • •

Somebody should take our esteemed Medical Health Officer by the hand and lead him to the spot in question. Perhaps, after he sees the green, stagnant water, and smells the miasmatic stench which arises from it he may deem it expedient to stick a pin in the Board of Health, causing that venerable body to wake up with a start and exercise some of the authority which is vested in it by law.

• • •

It is alleged that certain people drain into the ravine in question, and that the sewage which goes into the said ravine has no outlet. That state of affairs might be allowed to exist in Turkey or Timbuctoo, but surely in a beautiful and highly civilized place like Belleville, where every prospect pleases and only the Church St. ravine is vile; where the Medical Health Officer sits up half the night testing milk and performing other labors for the benefit of his fellow-citizens, and where we have a Board of Health—a bright, brilliant, scintillating collection of philanthropists who willingly give up about twenty minutes of their time each year, free, gratis, for nothing, in order to help people to sidestep the undertaker—surely, we say, in a place like this beautiful city, a nuisance like the one alleged will not be allowed to continue. We sincerely hope not, at all events.

• • •

It is alleged that automobiles are run in this city without their lamps being lit. How much license do the authorities propose to give these machines? Why do they not enforce the statutory regulations?

It is now up to the Russian Bear to eat humble pie, or there will be sixteen different kinds of trouble before you can wink the other eye. The British Government has sent an energetic note of protest to Russia regarding the sinking of the Knight Commander. Sir Claude Macdonald, the Ambassador at Tokio, has reported that the vessel carried no contraband of war whatever, and in consequence it is said that Britain demands a full reparation for the destruction of the ship, as well as a humble apology, and that Russia must salute the British flag on the high seas. The situation is extremely grave and much will depend on the tone of the Russian answer. The British note says that if the demands are not acceded to steps will be taken in another direction.

• • •

The question of war or peace for Britain is hanging in the balance these days. One thing appears to be sure—Russia must move quickly and move in the right direction, or her Armageddon is in sight.

• • •

Lord Dundonald, out of his own pocket, paid for instruments which were needed by the G.G.F.G. Band, of Ottawa. When he went away the Band refused to play, because eleven of its members were civil servants and afraid of losing their jobs. Poor fellows, they deserve pity, in more ways than one, for they must have felt their position. It's pretty tough when any man is called upon to choose between principle and bread and butter. But the pusillanimous people in high places, who dragooned the Band, deserve the contempt of every honorable man.

Brockville Times: G.T.R. conductor Laughlin, who resides on Buell street, has a slightly disfigured face, as the result of a recent accident. Whilst in the discharge of his duties as conductor during a run between Brockville and Belleville, the train broke in two and the sudden application of the air brakes on the rear end, pitched Mr. Laughlin from his chair in the cupola. His face was badly bruised but fortunately no bones were broken.

The fact that no old stock is offered at Gorman's 25 per cent. discount sale makes the bargains much more desirable. All goods in the store are reduced, no reserve. Excellent bargains for all the family.

HE WAS A "FOREIGNER."

KINGSTON BANK CLERK TAXED $2 ON GOING TO THE STATES.

Kingston, July 28.—It cost a young Kingston bank clerk two dollars for being a Scotchman. That was the charge levied upon him by the United States alien inspector at Cape Vincent on Wednesday afternoon, when he arrived there en route to the Old Country for a vacation. Of course, the bank clerk uttered a strong protest in having to pay the money to enter that miscalled country, the land of the "free," but declared that he wouldn't change his nationality even if it enabled him to escape payment of the paltry sum of two dollars. He was only passing through the "land of liberty," but came to the conclusion it was worth the money to gaze upon such a strange place. It seems that the party in question had been in Canada only thirteen months. Under the United States laws, people residing in Britain are foreigners and must pay a tax like Chinamen to enter the sacred limits over which the Stars and Stripes float. The law seems to be most barbarous.

A HOUSE OF TREASURES.

Anglesey House Contains Many Rich and and Costly Jewels.

Anglesey Castle, which was recently taken possession of by bailiffs as a consequence of an action taken by the creditors of the Marquis of Anglesey, is declared to be a treasure house full of astounding surprises. A report was current the other day to the effect that gems to the value of $125,000 had been found lying "higgledy piggledy" in a drawer, and it is now stated that the castle contains property affirmed to be in the aggregate worth more than $5,000,000. Experts have been allowed to see some of the jewellery so far discovered.

"For two hours," says a despatch to hand this morning, "one expert gazed at box after box of glittering gems, till his eyes positively ached with the brilliant galaxy. He valued one boxful alone at $300,000.

"Scores of objects of the richest art have been found just as they arrived from Paris—simply opened and put aside unpacked. The carriage alone of a comparatively small quantity of these things cost $3,000.

"There are several hundreds of superb suits of clothes absolutely untouched, and walking sticks ranging in price from $25 to $2,500."

Unfortunately no description of one of the canes worth the latter figure is forthcoming, but the despatch adds that the sight of this almost incalculable wealth lying idle has led some of the parties most nearly concerned to condemn in strong terms the action of those who precipitated matters and convened a meeting of creditors and obtained a deed of assignment, for in viewing the enormous mass of unrealized wealth at Anglesey Castle they are of the opinion that another method of settlement might have been devised.

At the meeting of the Marquis' creditors it was stated that he had expended on jewellery the sum of $1,065,000. Some of the family jewels are heirlooms, on which there was a charge of $90,000. In six years the Marquis had incurred liabilities amounting to more than $2,720,000. His income is $550,000, and the unsecured liabilities were put at $1,250,000.

Lord Rosebery's Son-in-Law.

The Earl of Crewe, who has been telling the British Farmers' Association that an Imperial race cannot exist on stewed tea and white bread, is a great agriculturist, and a keen farmer. Before he became Lord Crewe he was, as Lord Houghton, assistant private secretary to Earl Granville at the Foreign Office, and from 1892 to 1895 he held the Vice-Royalty of Ireland with great success. The Earl has also been a Lord-in-Waiting to Queen Victoria.

Lord Crewe's father, the famous Richard Monckton Milnes, by which name he was known to his dying day, collected a very fine library, which has been considerably added to by the Earl, who has a happy knack of writing verse. There is a good story told of the late Lord Houghton, who, when Crewe Hall was burned to the ground in 1866, ordered a table, pencil and telegraph form to be brought to him on the lawn, and there, with his home blazing fiercely before him, wired to his architect: "Dear ——, Crewe is burning. Come and build it up again."

Lady Peggy Primrose, Lord Rosebery's daughter, is now Lady Crewe and the Earl's second wife. She was a great favorite of Queen Victoria's, and Queen Alexandra and she are close friends. In politics Lord Crewe is a Liberal, and personally a rather shy, reserved man, with a great love for his books.

Carlyle and Disraeli.

Carlyle was once offered a baronetcy by Lord Beaconsfield. To his brother he wrote: "The enclosed letter and copy of my answer ought to go to you as a family curiosity and secret—nobody whatever yet knows of it beyond our two selves, except Lady Derby, whom I believe to be the contriver of the whole affair. You would have been surprised, all of you, to have found unexpectedly your poor old brother Tom converted into Sir Tom, Bart., but, alas, there was no danger at any moment of such a catastrophe. I do, however, truly admire the magnanimity of Dizzy in regard to me. He is the only man I almost never spoke of except with contempt, and if there is anything of scurrility anywhere chargeable against me I am sorry to own he is the subject of it; and yet see, here he comes with a pan of hot coals for my guilty head! I am, on the whole, gratified a little within my own dark heart at this mark of the good will of high people."

What Mrs. Stanley Wrote.

The death of Stanley recalls many anecdotes not only of the great explorer, but of his beautiful widow, who was Miss Dorothy Tennant. She and her sister were brought into some unenviable notoriety by E. F. Benson's "Dodo," which one of them is said to have inspired. While the novel was the rage the author wrote to Miss Tennant:

> Dear Miss Tennant—The whole world is talking about you and about my book. When may I call?

For reply he was told:

> Dear Mr. Benson—Have you really written a book? How sweet of you! Call any time.

But she was never at home.

Bula Matari.

It is very fitting that the native name for Stanley, "Bula Matari," should form part of the inscription on his coffin. It means, we believe, "The Rock Breaker," and expresses the African conception of the highest kind of physical power. To the great majority of the natives with whom he came in contact Stanley was an entirely superhuman being, and yet he was not, physically speaking, a particularly strong man. It was his extraordinary will power which made him appear of gigantic strength to men who could easily have picked him up and carried him in their arms.—London Globe.

DRESS FITNESS.

A Potent Factor In Making the Well Gowned Woman.

The definition of a uniformly well gowned woman is she who dresses with a strict regard to appropriateness—in other words, one who adapts her mode of attire to the character and form of each and every occasion. In this simple conformity the keynote and secret of the art of dressing is sounded and revealed. Appropriateness, with a large, a very large, capital, should be the guiding motto of every woman's dress inclinations. Along with the aptitude for designing, planning and even creating, there should be assiduously cultivated by every woman a taste for the fitness of attire. This with practice may be acquired and will serve as a more valuable gift than all the other lore relating to this distinctively feminine branch of science.

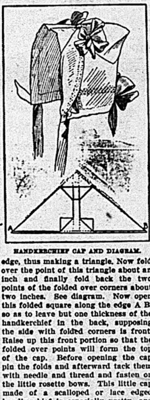
The woman who is fortunate in the possession of this valued trait and its evincement is often credited with being better attired than she is in reality, for her appearance at any time and upon all occasions is characterized by a distinctive and appropriate individuality, which bears an impress of refined taste and singles her out of a group of gayly, ill appropriately attired women as the best gowned among them. A simple though significant rule, which, if regarded, would assist in accomplishing more than even rigid observance to the powerful factors of "style" and "detail," is to dress with unfaltering regard to the time, place and character and form of the occasion, and never for an instant swerve from this path of dress fitness, for it is a far more potent feature than is ever considered in the determining of a well gowned woman.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

DAINTY BABY CAP.

How to Make One With a Handkerchief In Five Minutes.

A little baby lies for the most part while in his carriage, and as a result bonnets are quickly rumpled. They are not particularly easy to launder, and it is expensive to have them cleaned. A pretty handkerchief can be made into a dainty little cap in five minutes.

To make the handkerchief cap proceed very much as children do to make a "soldier cap." Fold the handkerchief exactly in half; then fold the two upper or folded corners over to the lower edge, thus making a triangle. Now fold over the point of this triangle about an inch and finally fold back the two points of the folded over corners about two inches. See diagram. Now open this folded square along the edge A B, so as to leave but one thickness of the handkerchief in the back, supposing the side with folded corners is front. Raise up this front portion so that the folded over points will form the top of the cap. Before opening the cap pin the folds and afterward tack them with needle and thread and fasten on the little rosette bows. This little cap made of a scalloped or lace edged handkerchief is especially pretty, and it fits the little head perfectly. By this ingenious device baby can have a fresh cap every day or two. Quilted silk linings come for muslin caps, or, if desired, one can make them.—Woman's Home Companion.



HANDKERCHIEF CAP AND DIAGRAM.

Repose of Manner.

The air of distinguished repose so sought after by our nervous society woman may be acquired by any one if she will remember that the secret of a reposeful manner simply means the power to totally relax. Much of your nervous energy is lost in nervous fighting. One beauty specialist goes so far as to declare that nothing will make wrinkles quicker than the habit of moving and jerking and that nothing is so fatal to beauty as coughing and wheezing. All such habits are really nervous complaints. To cure all these fidgety movements cultivate the habit of sitting perfectly still, keeping the hands and fingers motionless as long as possible, and relax.

How Babies Cry When They Are Ill.

Mothers are often worried as to what the cries of their infants mean when they seem to be sick or in pain and frequently are apt to diagnose the case wrongfully. As a matter of fact, when an infant is dangerously ill it seldom cries, so that when it begins to cry a great deal during a severe illness it is usually a sign of amendment.

When a child suffers from inflammation of the lungs it moans, but rarely cries. When suffering from bronchitis the cry is gruff and rattling. When suffering from croup the cry is sharp and fretful. When hungry it is fretful and wailing.—New York Press.

HE OF THE BULLET-HEAD.

M. Belloc's Brilliant Sketch of What the Norman Conquest Did for England —Strong in Isolation.

The Speaker, the British Liberal review, in a recent issue contained the following brilliant sketch by Monsieur Belloc of the result of the Norman conquest of England:

I had known the Ouse—(how many years ago!)—I had looked up at those towers of Ely from my boat; but a town from a river and a town from the street are different things. Moreover, in that time I speak of, the day years ago, it was blowing very hard from the south, and I was anxious to be away before it, and away I went to Lynn at one stretch; for in those days the wind and the water seemed of more moment than old stones. Now (after how many years!) it was my business to go up by land, and as I went the weight and domination of the cathedral filled the way before me.

Impressions of this sort are explained by every man in his own way—for my part I felt the Norman.

I know not by what accident it was, but never had I come so nearly into the presence of the men who founded England. The isolation of the hill, the absence of clamor and false noise and everything modern, the smallness of the village, the solidity and amplitude of the home and their security, all recalled an origin.

The little bullet-head men, vivacious, orderly, splendidly brave, we know that they awoke all Europe, that they first provided settled financial systems and settled Governments of land, and that everywhere, from the Grampians to Mesopotamia, they were like steel when all other races were like wood or iron. We know that they were a flash. They were not formed or remarkable at all before the year 1000; by the year 1200 they were gone. Some odd transitory phenomenon of cross-breeding, a very lucky freak in the history of the European family produced the only body of men who all were lords and who in their collective action showed continually nothing but genius.

We know that they were the spear-head, as it were, of the Gallic spirit; the vanguard of that one of the Gallic expansions which we associate with the opening of the Middle Ages and with the Crusades. . . . We know all this and write about it; nevertheless, we do not make enough of the Normans in England. * * *

Yet it is in England that the Norman can be studied as he can be studied nowhere else. He did not write here (as in Sicily) upon a palimpsest. He was not merged here (as in the Orient) with the rest of the French. He was segregated here; he can be studied in isolation, for, though so many that crossed the sea on that October night with William, the big leader of them, held no Norman tenure, yet the spirit of the whole thing was Norman; the regularity, the suddenness, the achievement, and when the short fighting was over the creation of a new society. It was the Norman who began everything over again—the first fresh influence since Rome.

The riot of building has not been seized. The place was conquered in 1070. It was a place of heavy foolish men with random laws, pale eyes, and a slow manner; their houses were of wood; sometimes they built (but how painfully and how childishly!) with stone. There was no height, there was no dignity, there was no sense of permanence. The Norman Government was established. At once rapidity, energy, the clear object of a united and organized power followed. And see what followed in architecture alone, and in what a little space of the earth, and in what a little stretch of time—less than the time that separates us from the year of Disraeli's death or the occupation of Egypt.

The Conquest was achieved in 1070. In that same year they pulled down the wooden shed of Bury St. Edmunds, "unworthy," they said, "of a great saint," and began the great shrine of stone. Next year it was the Castle at Oxford, in 1075 Monkswearmouth, Jarrow, and the Church at Chester, in 1077 Rochester and St. Alban's; in 1079 Winchester; Ely, Worcester, Thorney, Hurley, Lincoln, followed with the years; by 1089 they had tackled Gloucester, by 1092 Carlisle, by 1903 Lindisfarne, Christchurch—tall Durham. . . . And this is but a short and random list of some of their greatest works in these few years; some, though recorded, are not mentioned here. Hundreds of castles, houses, village churches are unrecorded. Were they not indeed a people? . . . . And all their effort realized itself before Pope Urban had made the speech which launched the armies against the Holy Land. The Norman had created and founded all this before the Mass of Europe was urged against the flame of the Arab, to grow fruitful and to be transformed.

One may say of the Norman and of the Gothic what Dante said of Virgil and the Faith: Would that they had been born in a time when they could have known it!

Owner of Stonehenge.

Sir E. Antrobus, who claims the right as owner of the land on which Stonehenge stands, has asked £50,000 for his rights, and the Commons and Footpath Preservation Society had offered what they considered a reasonable price—£10,000. The Attorney-General's fiat has been obtained, and the case is likely to come before the High Court in the course of the next few months. Mr. Bryce, M.P., said the case would have a bearing on rights of way throughout the country.—London Chronicle.

Fatal June 3.

The tragedy of a day is revealed in the following notice published by The London Morning Post on June 3, 1904:

TIMELY TOPICS.

These are the days when the Sunday School teachers shake hands with themselves and return thanks because the picnic season doesn't last all the year round.

• • •

Several accidents, caused by loose and broken planks in sidewalks, have happened lately. It might be well for the authorities to either repair the walks or put up signs: "Keep in the middle of the road."

• • •

Prof. Denys, whose bright letter appears in another column, seems rather skittish at the idea of a tax on bachelors, advanced by an Ottawa alderman. It has long been a mystery to us why the fair ladies of this city have allowed the gallant and urbane professor to so long remain a bachelor. Can it be that he, knowing this to be leap year, has fled to his mountain home in Quebec to avoid the blandishments and bright eyes of our Belleville fair ones? Perish the thought. Our brave and polished friend would never run, e'en though he had to play the part of a modern St. Anthony.

• • •

• • •

It is alleged in a Picton paper that four men in West Lake, near Wellington, recently caught 160 pounds of fish in one day. Probably weighed the fish in their own scales.

• • •

The weather sharps keep right on prophecying a cool summer, while we keep right on getting fairly hot weather, just the same. Those prophets would be without honor in any country.

ALIEN LABOR LAW.

James H. Bacon Proceeded Against For Alleged Violation.

Port Arthur, July 28.—R. G. Chamberlain, secret service agent of the Dominion of Canada, served warrants Tuesday on James H. Bacon, calling for the arrest and deportation of that gentleman on the ground that he has violated the alien labor law of Canada in coming into this country within a year from this date from the United States under contract with J. R. Stephens, chief engineer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. The warrant is signed by the Attorney-General of Canada and is dated July 18, 1904. Mr. Bacon at once retained the services of Mr. Keefer to fight the case in the courts, and also requested the U.S. Vice-Consul at Fort William to wire the State Department at Washington through the proper channels to take the necessary steps to secure a proper trial of the case in the Canadian courts.

Mr. Keefer, acting for Mr. Bacon, has applied to the courts in Toronto for a writ of habeas corpus and requested the Attorney-General to grant a stay of proceedings until his application can be heard, and it is said the stay has been granted. Mr. Bacon is a graduate of Harvard University, a member of the American Society of Civil Engineers and was an officer of the 3rd U. S. Volunteer Regiment during the Spanish-American war.

Coastwise Law in Alaska.

Washington, D. C., July 28.—Through the settlement of a case that has recently been brought before the Treasury Department and the Department of Commerce and Labor it is likely that there will be a clearing up of some of the vexed questions relating to the United States coastwise law. The case in question has special reference to shipping between the United States and Alaska, but the settlement of the point at issue may be found to have a bearing in other places. There is great confusion in the official mind as to the construction to be placed on certain provisions of the coastwise law.

Troublous Coal Region.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., July 28.—Yesterday afternoon Carroll D. Wright, umpire of the Anthracite Conciliation Board, decided that the coal companies would have to deduct from the wages of employes when a majority so decided an amount sufficient to pay the wages of checkmen and docking bosses. The companies protested against the decision, contending that they could not deduct legally from employes' wages.

To Codify Statutes.

Montreal, July 28.—Sir Louis Cazault of Quebec and J. S. Buchan and Wilfrid Mercier, Montreal, have been appointed commissioners to codify the provincial statutes.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

Chicago, July 27.—Cattle—Receipts, 5500; market strong to 10c higher; good to prime steers, $5.50 to $6.50; poor to medium, $4.25 to $5.40; stockers and feeders, $2 to $3.80; cows, $1.50 to $4.25; heifers, $2.25 to $5; canners, $1.50 to $2.60; bulls, $2 to $4.25; calves, $2.50 to $7; Texas fed steers, $3 to $5.35.

Hogs—Receipts, 10,000; mixed and butchers', $5.25 to $5.75; good to choice heavy, $5.55 to $5.75; rough heavy, $4.90 to $5.30; light, $5.20 to $5.65; bulk of sales, $5.40 to $5.65; opened slow and closed strong.

Sheep—Receipts, 10,000; good to choice wethers, $4 to $4.25; fair to choice mixed, $3 to $4; native lambs, $4 to $5.50.

CHEESE MARKETS.

Stirling, July 27.—At the Stirling cheese board to-day 1000 cheese were boarded. Sales: Magrath, 1000 at 7⅝c.

Woodstock, July 27.—There was no change in last week's prices at the meeting of the cheese market here to-day. In all 2080 boxes were boarded, all the make of July. The highest bid on the board was 7⅝c. At this figure 200 boxes were sold to Booth. On the street 1000 boxes sold at 7 9-16c.

Picton, July 27.—At our cheese board today 13 factories boarded 1305 boxes, all colored. Highest bid, 7⅝c; 1275 sold. Buyers, Sexsmith and Baillie.

Another Steamer Ashore.

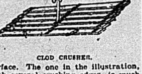
Quebec, July 28.—The agent of the Marine and Fisheries Department in this city has received a telegram stating that the steamer Rockcliffe, which had landed a cargo of lumber at Campbellton, N.B., for Liverpool, is ashore in Baie de Chaleurs, and the Government steamer Aberdeen had attempted to haul her off without success.

Bowlers Go to Ireland.

London, July 28.—The Canadian bowlers concluded their series of matches at Moffat Tuesday prior to starting on their program on Irish soil. The result was Dumfriesshire 125, Canadians 78.

Improved Clod Crusher.

In many sections the preparing of ground for planting is a difficult problem. If a clod crusher is used do not have it with a flat crushing surface. The one in the illustration, with several crushing edges, is much more effective. It is made of 2-inch hard lumber 8 inches wide, and about 7 feet long. The boards are held in place by three strips of iron ½ inch thick and 3 inches wide, bent into notches 2 inches deep and 6 inches long, except the last one behind, which is to be 8 inches long. Any blacksmith can do this work. The boards are bolted fast to the iron strips with the heads underneath. As the boards are wider than the notches, they will overlap 2 inches. Two pieces of iron with rings in the and are bolted to the front board 3 or 4 feet apart, for the purpose of hitching with a chain. Comfort may be added by attaching a seat from some old machinery.—American Agriculturist.



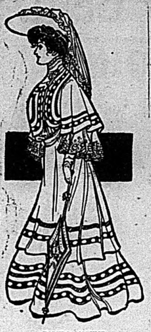
CLOD CRUSHER.

THE WORLD OF FASHION.

Loose Bolero Costumes—Some Black and White Check Materials.

Among the spring styles for street wear the loose bolero certainly leads. It is made with or without sleeve seams, and in the former fashion it gives the effect of a loose cape partly tacked to form the sleeves. These loose boleros are decorated with strap trimmings and tiny buttons. They are worn with very full skirts either laid in box plaits or inch wide tucks. In both cases these flare from the knees downward.

Black and white checked materials in wool, linen and silk are among the smartest suit materials. They are trimmed with buttons either in green or steel, and they are worn with ecru straw hats trimmed with black and white or with grass green toque plumes. The parasol matches.



BOLERO COSTUME.

Pongee coats are ultra smart, especially when shirred in quite full and trimmed with touches of green.

Changeable taffeta in opalescent shades is charming under artificial light. Many of these changeable silks are made into evening wraps, and a favorite model has a circular yoke trimmed with the old fashioned pinked out ruches. Others have shawl effects of fine lace and the ever fashionable lining of accordion plaited chiffon.

The picture shows one of the latest street costumes. It is made of red mohair trimmed with bands of passementerie and tiny black velvet ribbon. The hat is of ecru straw trimmed with lace. JUDIC CHOLLET.

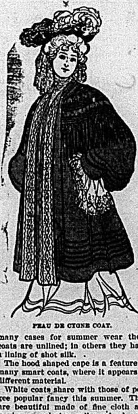
COATS FOR SUMMER.

All the Pale Shades Used—White Cloths and Pongee Lead.

A well known Parisian has in her wardrobe a three-quarter length coat of oyster gray. It is cut circular shape and gauged with a cape effect of silver gray chiffon velours. This is lined with a still paler shade of gray chiffon and edged with festoons of brussels point.

Many race coats are in cloth in shades of zinc, ivory and apricot. These are much braided with light flat silk braid and silk ornaments to correspond.

The kimono shape is the most useful and universally becoming for coats. In many cases for summer wear these coats are unlined; in others they have a lining of shot silk.



PEAU DE CYGNE COAT.

The hood shaped cape is a feature of many smart coats, where it appears of different material.

White coats share with those of pongee popular fancy this summer. They are beautiful made of fine cloth and having a pelerine collar edged with bold braid and hanging tassels. Shantung silk is trimmed with black velvet and quantities of gold and silver braid.

Parisians this season are curiously devoted to bronze and to black and white effects for street wear.

The cut shows a black peau de cygne coat trimmed with fringe and Persian [illegible] JUDIC CHOLLET.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more prone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 68 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter, Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed) T. S. McINTEE.

THE CRIME OF THE CENTURY

"Indeed!"

"Indeed!"

Mr. Mitchel made no further remark, but merely gazed intently into his companion's face and awaited his next words. The criminal, finding himself thus compelled to speak again, paused, reflecting how to proceed. Thus during a few critical moments the two men stood face to face in silence.

"Do you mean that Mr. Barnes set a spy upon me?"

It was possible for this man to turn to his friends and announce that a spy was among them, and Mr. Mitchel's career of usefulness might thus be ended. He appreciated fully the danger of his position, but he was one of those men who are calmest in such supreme crises, and it was this entire absence of fear which must have appealed to the other man, himself afraid of nothing living. Presently, with an altered accent which showed that all antagonism had been laid aside for the time being, Preacher Jim extended his hand and said:

"Mr. Mitchel, I am pleased to make your acquaintance and glad that you have come here tonight."

Mr. Mitchel took the proffered hand and shook it cordially as he replied:

"I am equally pleased to know you and to be here."

"I wish to talk with you. Will you come with me where we will not be disturbed and have a chat and a cigar?"

Preacher Jim led the way and Mr. Mitchel followed until they entered a small private cabin in which were a table and a few chairs. The two men sat opposite each other, and the criminal summoned a waiter and ordered a bottle of wine. Then he began by saying:

"Mr. Mitchel, in spite of your well feigned calmness, confess that you did not expect me to call you by your name."

"I certainly was astonished, but you will admit that it would not have been wise to allow you to see that too plainly."

"It would have been very unwise. I was in a bad humor, and there are times, as you may judge by my lecture, when I might commit acts not strictly in accord with the laws of our country."

"You mean that you might have done me an injury. I realized that and acted in the manner which seemed best calculated to prevent any trouble."

"Again, I say you are a wise man. You are more than that—you are a brave one, for only courage could have carried you safely through. Now that my anger has passed I am harmless, I assure you."

"Perhaps, then, you would be willing to enlighten me as to how you chanced to know my name."

Mr. Mitchel, quick to read character, thought that he had detected a large share of vanity in this man, and he hoped to mollify him further by affording him an opportunity to boast a little. In this he was entirely successful, for the reply came with a touch of eagerness.

"Ah!" said Preacher Jim. "You should have thought twice before trying to steal a march on me. Do you suppose that I could have evaded the law officers and the laws as successfully as I have if the two eyes in my head were both half blind, as in the case of 90 per cent of men? No, sir. I have hundreds of eyes keeping watch. I knew that you were coming here tonight long before you came, and had I chosen to prevent it you could never have boarded this boat. But I considered the matter and decided to allow you to hear my lecture."

"Again I find that I am in your debt."

"But you wish to learn how I knew this. To explain thoroughly I must tell you something more of our organization. We 'crooks,' as the boys call themselves, are banded together for mutual protection. We are at eternal warfare with the police force. We are constantly spied upon by detectives. So much, of course, you know. We have therefore arranged a more or less perfect system of defense. When one of our members sees a detective, it becomes his business to spy upon that spy and report to officers of our society. In this way we often obtain valuable information, which frequently makes it possible for us to aid in the escape of the special prey for which the detective might be searching. Now, you will remember that when you were talking with Slippery Sam this morning that cunning young man recognized a detective and led you off in another direction. Very good. But it so chanced that another of our members was in the neighborhood, and he also saw the detective and at once began to shadow him. Can you guess what business called that detective into the neighborhood of Apollo hall this morning?"

"No."

"Yet he is employed by your friend, Mr. Barnes." Preacher Jim chuckled as Mr. Mitchel this time manifested his surprise when, by way of response, he asked quickly:

"Do you mean that Mr. Barnes set a spy upon me?"

"Just so. Friendly, wasn't it?"

"But with what object?"

Mr. Mitchel felt assured that he could answer his own question, but he wished to learn how much this man knew or suspected. His object was not attained, for the answer was:

"Ah! That's no affair of mine. You are not one of our members, and therefore our man would not have pursued the matter further had you not been in company with Slippery Sam."

"And why because of that fact?"

"It is always important to know whether there be among us any who would betray a friend for ready cash. You comprehend? So in this instance Mr. Barnes' man, who is a clever fellow, seeing that Slippery Sam had suspicions, kept in the background until you were around the corner, and then he began to shadow you most scientifically. But our man is skillful also, and he easily kept the whole party in sight until you parted with Sam. Then he tracked you to your home and obtained much information about you, all of which in due time reached me. It was not difficult to discover that Sam meant to bring you with him, and so we were forewarned."

"You do not mean that you could get that information from Sam himself? He seems too shrewd."

"He is sharp, but our system was too much for him. It was very easy, as you will perceive. He could not bring you with him without obtaining a pass for two. In applying for it he was obliged to give a full account of the person whom he wished to introduce. He did so, and with the information which we already had it was not difficult to take the true measurement of his imaginary 'crook' who worked at 'engraving bank notes' and who 'did not desire any new acquaintances.' It was really quite amusing to hear him expatiating upon the wonderful talents of his new found friend who was 'staking him for the present.'"

Preacher Jim imitated Slippery Sam so well that Mr. Mitchel laughed heartily. Then he asked:

Lame Back. David Hart, blacksmith, Havelock, Ont., says: O.R. Kidney Cure is a safe and sure remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. I have used it for lame back, it acts like magic. Each bottle of O. R. Kidney Cure contains a ten day's treatment. 50c all druggist, or by mail.

"But why did you allow me to come on board?"

"I will tell you candidly. I had as much curiosity to learn your object in coming among us as you possibly had in seeing me and my friends. Why did you come?"

"I will be equally frank with you. I had no special object. The proposal was made by Sam, and it seemed to be attractive. I therefore accepted. I have always taken an interest in the so called criminal class and would not miss the chance of seeing them when free from restraint."

"Then you came merely as one goes to the park to see the wild animals?"

"With absolutely no other definite purpose."

There was a pause during which it was evident to Mr. Mitchel that his companion was still somewhat in doubt as to the wisdom of trusting him, and of this he was assured by the next question, which was asked suddenly, that he might be taken off his guard, or at least have no chance for preparing an untruthful reply.

"Why was that detective spying upon you?" asked Preacher Jim. Mr. Mitchel realized that it would be necessary to answer unhesitatingly, but he was accustomed to determine upon a line of conduct quickly, and now he decided upon a bold and possibly hazardous course.

"I have no objection to telling you what I think of that," said he, "though, of course, I may be wrong. Mr. Barnes is working upon a mysterious case and has asked me to assist him. He values my assistance in an investigation, but at the same time he dislikes to admit that I could accomplish what would baffle him. I imagine that in this instance he has sent a man after me that I may not make discoveries which would be unknown to him. Thus he would hope to keep pace with me in any advance that I might make."

"If he is as clever a detective as his reputation declares him to be, he should be above such methods. Were I a detective I would use my brains and not rely upon this petty system of spies."

This was even better than Mr. Mitchel had hoped for, and he hastened now to lead the conversation into the channel which he had chosen to enter.

"I concur with you heartily, and I think your opinion upon a crime would be most interesting. I wonder if I would be going too far were I to ask you to discuss the one in question."

"You may do so if you wish. It will depend upon what crime it is and how much I may really know about it whether I would care to talk it over with you. You must not forget that I am a crook and that I am acquainted with the greatest criminals in this country. Any one of my friends might be the guilty man in this instance. Indeed I might be the criminal myself."

"Even in a case of murder?" asked Mr. Mitchel quickly, eying his companion closely.

"Why not?" was the calm reply. "It is natural for you to suppose that the degree of the crime matters, but with the born criminal, such as I am, there are no degrees, no limits, except those created by the exigencies of circumstances. For example, I might decide to steal a pocket handkerchief, and a chain of events might ensue which would lead to the necessity of killing a man. That would not—nay, could not—make me pause. It would be just as natural and just as unavoidable, with my heritage and character, as that one congenitally phthisical should take a slight cold which would lead to a cough and thence to consumption and possibly to death. You see, even the final event, death, is the same in each."

Mr. Mitchel had asked his question hoping to see this man show some sign of emotion which would indicate whether or not one of his secret and unsuspected crimes might be the killing of a fellow being, for already he had grown so interested in this criminal that the discovery of one of his unlawful acts would seem of more consequence than the unraveling of the Mora murder. Now he found that the man was so deeply in earnest in his theories of crime that he could not be surprised into showing any emotions which would inculpate himself. Nevertheless he still thought that the conversation could be continued to advantage along the lines which he was following and so proceeded:

"Of course I have no wish to induce you to betray either your friends or yourself, and it is scarcely possible that you have any connection with the Mora murder, which is the case in which I am interested."

"Ah, yes! You mean the rich man, who was killed with one of his own weapons? I have not the slightest objection to giving you my views on that subject. Ask me what you please."

"I hardly know where to begin. It just occurred to me that it is a crime the details of which had been skillfully managed and that as you are not only a criminal, for which assertion I have only your own authority, but also a student of criminology, your opinion would be interesting to me. Therefore I ventured to ask for it. You might tell me, to begin with, whether you would look for the murderer among the so called criminal class or elsewhere?"

"Ah, but you forget that, even though the man who has done this has never before been detected in crime, this act places him at once among what you term the criminal class. You could not seek a murderer elsewhere."

"You seem to be evading my question," said Mr. Mitchel boldly. "I will put it more plainly. Would you look for a man who has been guilty of other crimes, or would you say that this is an initial crime, the act of a man who has never sinned before?"

"Unquestionably the guilty man was far from innocent of other crimes. It was deliberately planned and studiously executed. Only a murder committed in the heat of passion could be a first offense. A premeditated killing proves the guilty party to be a regular criminal, though of course it does not follow that he has been previously recognized as such."

"Then you do not believe that the son is guilty?" asked Mr. Mitchel.

"What I believe on that score must have little weight, because I do not know the accused. He is not known to be a criminal. Therefore the presumption is in his favor. If he has never committed a crime before, I would stake my life on his innocence. But, if he has, then it is possible that he is the man. I only say it is possible."

"There seem to be many facts which point to his guilt. For example, the weapon used was part of a collection owned by the deceased. The son of course knew where to obtain it."

"That would be very poor evidence upon which to hang a man. What need had the murderer to know where the bludgeon was usually kept, since the old man had taken it to bed with him?"

Mr. Mitchel started at hearing this. The words gave him a new and important idea. He remembered Mr. Barnes' argument that the murdered man had not taken the weapon from the cabinet himself, as the door was found open. Preacher Jim advanced just the contrary view, and Mr. Mitchel determined to probe deeper in order to learn his reasons for his opinion.

"Ah, of course!" said he, with no outward exhibition of the increased interest which he felt. "If Mr. Mora took the weapon up stairs, any man might have found and used it. But the old man was very methodical, and I am assured that if he had done as you suggest he would again have locked the cabinet door, which, on the contrary, was found open in the morning, as though the weapon had been abstracted hurriedly by some one laboring under excitement. Does not this conflict with your idea?"

"Why, not at all. You are probably repeating to me one of the arguments of your friend Mr. Barnes, which only shows how detectives always work to substantiate a theory, instead of allowing an investigation to lead where it will. Of course it is all guesswork about the movements of the man who was killed, but my solution of the mystery is that he expected trouble that night, and in that case, anticipating the approach of an enemy, he would have been sufficiently disturbed to have forgotten to lock the door of the cabinet again."

"I could readily agree with that if I could see any reason for thinking that he was expecting a disagreeable visitor. What evidence have you of that?"

"Oh, very good, I think. In one of the newspaper accounts I read that the watchman in his statement said that he saw young Mora enter the house, because he had been warned by his master to be doubly watchful. In fact, he had asked permission to take the night for himself, sending a substitute in his place, but his request was refused, and then it was that he was cautioned to be doubly on his guard."

"That is very significant and quite new to me. I wonder that Mr. Barnes omitted it from his report of the facts."

"Oh, you can't expect a detective to think of everything, you know!"

Here Preacher Jim laughed heartily, while Mr. Mitchel eyed him thoughtfully, wondering at his apparent unconcern and his seemingly genuine good humor. The man's manner did not agree with a half formulated idea which Mr. Mitchel was mentally considering, and therefore he carefully selected his words in continuing the conversation.

"Then if this watchman was so wide awake," said Mr. Mitchel, "surely it must count against young Mora when he swears that he saw him enter and leave the house at about the time of the murder?"

"Oh, no! The watchman only swears that a plaid suit of clothes went in and came out again. From that he concludes that he saw young Mora, but he might be mistaken."

"Oh, then you do not accept Mora's theory that the murderer put on the plaid suit in the house after committing the crime?"

"No, I do not. None but stupid officials would have accepted that trumped up story. Why, how can you say that the watchman was correct in identifying the clothing of the man when he came out of the house and dismiss his equally positive assertion as to what he saw going in? Mark my word, the watchman is both truthful and accurate. That plaid suit went in and came out again."

"And the man who wore it killed old man Mora?"

"Beyond all question of doubt."

"Then the discovery of that suit of clothes should be the first care of the police."

"It should, but the police will never find it. Some one else may and probably will. Do not forget that the police are often credited with more than they deserve. The publication of all the facts places all people on the scent. The guilty party is somewhere and necessarily comes into contact with persons any one of whom may read his fear in his face and report it to the police. So those clothes are hidden, and at any moment they may reach the central office because some one finds them and thinks it is his duty to take them to headquarters. After that it ought to be plain sailing."

"Why should not the murderer have burned the clothing or at least have destroyed them in some way?"

"Perhaps he has, but it is often risky. The smell of burnt cloth will rouse a whole tenement house full of people. Ashes found may excite suspicion, perhaps more so than the clothing itself, especially if the murderer was disguised. On the whole, and judging by what I should have done myself, I conclude that the plaid suit is still in existence. Another man, though, might act differently. When theorizing about human actions, we are all apt to measure them by our personal standards."

"And you say that if you had killed Mr. Mora, having worn these clothes as a disguise, you would not have destroyed them afterward?"

"I think not. Of course circumstances alter cases, and it might be that, having actually killed the man, my views would be altered. It is so easy to theorize, eh, Mr. Mitchel?"

"Yes, yes! You are right," said Mr. Mitchel abstractedly, and then he paused a moment, presently continuing: "There is another point which tells against young Mora—the theft of the will. It makes him nine millions richer and would be valueless to any other man."

"You mean that the murderer of Mr. Mora may be on this boat?"

"Would it?" asked Preacher Jim.

Something in his intonation attracted Mr. Mitchel, and he quickly asked:

"Can you imagine any use another man might make of it?"

"I can."

"Will you tell me?"

"Mr. Mitchel, if I refuse you might be insane enough to think that I know more than I care to disclose, that I am endeavoring to shield some one, and you might even get it into your head that that person is myself. Therefore I will reply to your question, although I think it should not have been asked. It compels me to show you how much more useful property is to the criminal than to the rest of the world."

"Oh, pardon me! It was understood that I should not insist upon going any further than you chose. You need not answer if you prefer not."

"No. I can understand that it would interest you to hear my opinion, and I will give it. This will leaves half of the fortune to charity. By its suppression the son inherits all. Now, let us imagine that an enterprising crook, with a long head, conceives the plan of stealing the will and of killing Mr. Mora, so that the will should acquire immediate value. Can't you see now how that document might be useful to the thief?"

"I would prefer not to guess, but to have you tell me."

"Very good. Young Mora inherits. Then the crook turns up some fine night with a copy of the will which he might claim to have found in an ash barrel. He might ask what Mr. Mora would give for the continued suppression of the will—how much per year, let us say. Would it not be fair, in exchange for the nine millions, for the heir to pay over to the crook at least the annual interest? At even 1 per cent that would be $90,000. Don't you think that a document which would yield that sum per year would be worth the stealing?"

"By heavens, you are right! But it would require a man of brains and courage to concoct and carry out such a scheme."

"There are several such men on this boat."

"You mean that the murderer of Mr. Mora may be on this boat?"

"He may be, of course. Stranger things have happened, one of which is your own presence here, as well as that of the man who promised to help you if you should need aid."

"Ah! You heard that?"

"I did."

"Then perhaps you recognized the man?"

"I did."

"Who was he?"

"I think you must excuse my not answering you this time. I prefer to let you discover for yourself. I never spoil sport."

"Oh, very well! As you will! And now, since you have been so kind as to discuss one crime with me, there is another in which I am even more deeply interested. Perhaps you might express your views upon that."

"Again I say it depends upon what crime it is and how much I may know."

"I am alluding to the child who was found in the graveyard."

"Yes. What of that?"

"I believe that I have obtained a clew which will unravel that mystery. I think I shall soon know who the child's mother is, though it was not she who placed the infant in the cemetery."

"You are sure of that?"

"Yes. It was a man and probably the father. Now I would like to ask you"—

"You must excuse me. I prefer not to discuss it. In fact, I have talked with you too much already. Good night."

With this abrupt speech Preacher Jim suddenly left the room. Mr. Mitchel looked after him a moment, with a smile of satisfaction, and then went on deck, whistling softly.

Summer Clearing Sale of Odds & Ends In China.

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly—in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

Atfer The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices. Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen for, we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

WITH CRICK IN THE BACK

You are up against a whole lot of trouble unless you have a strong remedy like Nerviline to settle pain and dislodge stiffness from the muscles and joints. Just rub Nerviline on the painful spot—not much rubbing, because Nerviline has more power than ordinary remedies. You won't suffer long after Nerviline is applied, for it relieves almost instantly. Mr. Philip Adams, of Oakland, says, "If I hadn't used Nerviline I guess my back would be stiff yet. A few applications of Nerviline took out all the soreness and stiffness. I can recommend Nerviline for any kind of muscular pain, also for rheumatism. Price 25c.

"OH, THE AGONY OF IT!"

Has been many a poor Rheumatic's wail until he does as Mr. Eades did, gives South American Rheumatic Cure a "faithful trial"—it never fails.

Fred E. Eades, 424 Sully Street, Toronto, says: "I think South American Rheumatic Cure is the greatest God-send that sufferers from rheumatism have ever had put within their reach. I suffered so in my wrists and ankles that in two years I was only able to do three months' work. I took hospital treatment for nine months without relief, but a faithful trial of South American Rheumatic Cure permanently cured me." Relief at once. 60

SOUTH AFRICAN CENSUS.

Some Humorous Incidents That the Enumerators Met With in Their Work —Some Speaking Figures.

The mail brings details of the South African census returns, most of which have already been received in summary form by cable.

In 1891 the colony was divided for census purposes into three areas; the first section, the colony proper, did not include Griqualand West, which had been annexed after the date of the previous census in 1875. Griqualand West was, therefore, the second section, and the native territories were the third section. The first section of the present census includes Griqualand West, the second section being the native territories, excluding Pondoland, and the third section comprises the territories annexed since 1891—Pondoland and Bechuanaland. It will take about a year or so for a final report to be got out. The census supervisors and enumerators worked remarkably well; and especially was this the case in the native territories. The enumerators were received cordially; the natives responded promptly to the wishes of the Government, and there were instances in which natives had gone back home from long distances to see that their families were properly enumerated. The figures for the Cape proper, which are unaudited, but may generally be taken to be correct, are: Total population, 1,485,634; European or white, 548,926; other than European or white, 936,708. Percentage of total population, European or white, 36.95; others, 63.05. In 1891 the figures were 1,039,860, 366,608, 673,252, 35.26, and 64.74 respectively. The figures for the native territories (excluding Pondoland) are: Total population, 632,239; European or white, 15,770; other than European or white, 616,460. Percentage of total population—European or white, 2.49; others, 97.51. In 1891 the figures were 487,364, 10,379, 476,985, 2.13 and 97.87 respectively. The figures for the territories annexed (Pondoland and Bechuanaland) since the previous census, 1891, are: Total population, 287,005; European or white, 10,406; other than European or white, 276,599. Percentage of total population: European or white, 23.91; others, 96.37. The grand total for 1904 is: Total population, 2,404,878; European or white, 575,102; other than European or white, 1,829,776. Percentage of total population: European or white, 13.91; others, 76.09. In 1891 the figures were: Total population, 1,527,224; European or white, 376,957; other than European or white, 1,150,237. Percentage of total population was: European or white, 24.68; others, 75.32. The population of the Cape district on April 17, 1904, was 212,319, of which 119,965 were Europeans or whites, and 92,354 other than Europeans or whites; 56.5 of the total population was white, and 43.5 other than white.

The population of the whole division is 49,353, of which 19,703 are Europeans, and the remainder natives and colored. At the last census the population of the division was 21,538, of which 7,197 were Europeans. The present population of the town alone is 24,054, of which 14,039 are Europeans and 10,015 natives and colored. Cambridge, a young and rising suburb of East London, has at present a population of 3,486, of which 2,083 are Europeans.

Port Elizabeth (urban), all races: Males, 18,286; females, 13,980; total, 32,248, made up as follows: European, males, 13,041; females, 9,463; total, 21,504; colored, males, 4,640; females, 3,865; total, 8,505; natives, males, 1,587; females, 652; total, 2,239.

Walmer (all races): Males 1,090, females 830; total 1,920, made up of: Europeans, males 467, females 417; colored, males 188, females 194; natives, male 435, females 219.

Including the town and district and the port, the total population of Port Elizabeth is 46,626.

Total of all races in the Kimberley district is 60,045. At the last census it was 48,306, an increase of 11,739. The town population is 34,260; at the last census it was 28,718, an increase of 5,542. Beaconsfield town population is 9,374; at the last census it was 10,478, a decrease of 1,104.

The returns for the City of Grahamstown are just completed, showing a total population of 8,710, made up of 3,449 males and 3,647 females. There are 1,614 natives living in the city. There are 1,346 males under 15 years of age, and 1,284 females ditto, while there are 3,000 males and 3,068 females over that age. There are 1,608 buildings occupied and 54 unoccupied, and 13 in course of erection. The total for the city proper at the last census in 1891 was 7,278, showing an increase this year of 1,423. The city was divided into eight areas, and every area shows an increase. The returns do not include the native locations.

In most of the centres of population increases are also noticeable as under: Kingwilliamstown, 1901, 86,983; 1904, 103,552. Oudtshoorn, 1901, 23,879; 1904, 30,325. Paarl, 1901, 21,863; 1904, 30,849. Uitenhage, 1901, 20,947; 1904, 31,900. In some districts what are apparently decreases are not really so, the explanation being that new fiscal divisions have been created.

To some colored persons, natives particularly, London would appear to stand for the whole of the British Empire, or at least of England, in the matter of religion, for the entry constantly appearing by way of reply to the enumerator's query as to religion of the inmates was: "Church of London." Moreover, this appellation was found to include, in addition to members of the Church of England, Presbyterians, Lutherans, etc.

By certain of the natives the visit of the enumerator was apparently regarded as portending some dire evil, many places being found with all doors and windows nailed up.

THE LAND OF REGRET.

There is a city whose gates are wide,
  Its pavements pure and clean,
Where shadow forms flit side by side
  On the road called "Might Have Been."
But folks walk there with their heads bowed low,
  And heavy eyelids wet,
For ev'ry corner is haunted so
  In this, "The Land of Regret."

They meet the ghosts of those other years
  In dreams of memory sweet,
And wet with passionate, frenzied tears
  The graves which lie at their feet;
But never, long as their lives shall last,
  Can they ever again forget
Who once have walked with ghosts of the Past
  In this, "The Land of Regret."

They feel the touch of a hand grown still,
  Its fingers softly press,
The tender passion of kisses thrill
  Their own in a fond caress.
Ah, me—but pity the folks who stray
  Where long the sun hath set,
And walk with the ghosts who're laid away
  In this, "The Land of Regret."

—Pall Mall Gazette.

LAND LEAGUE ANECDOTES.

Some Original Letters Brought to Light in Mr. Davitt's Book.

An entertaining chapter in Michael Davitt's "The Fall of Feudalism in Ireland" (Harper's), is given up to "Some League Anecdotes." Among the numerous letters of an original kind which reached the Land League offices in 1881, was the following:

"Ballinrobe, Mayo, January 8, 1881.

"To The Honorable Land Lague,—Gintlemin, in a moment of wakeness i pade me rint. i did not no ther was a law against it or i wud not do it. the people pass by me duro as if the smal pox was in the hous, i heer ye do be givin pardons to min that do rong, and if ye will sind me a pardon to put in the windy for every one to rede, as God is me judge i will never komit the crime agin. Misther Scrab Nally will give me a Karacthur if ye write to him at Bal.

"Yours thruly."

One of the most popular platform speakers in early League years was Thomas Brennan. He was replete with references to Stuart Mill and to the legislation of Stein and Hardenberg, and was eagerly listened to by the local aspirants to platform fame, who tried to imitate him.

One of these talked on one occasion very learnedly about "the laws which Shteel and Harly Burke had passed for the tinnents of Prussheea." On another occasion the same speaker denounced the landlords as "the Tyrant class who spint the rents of daycint people in Rotten Row and other disreputable places in London."

The Latin tag about the propriety of a shoemaker sticking to his last was made use of by a learned clergyman in a withering allusion to a local Demosthenes. At the next meeting the assailed reformer made the following triumphant rejoinder which was greeted with tremendous applause:

"I'm attacked by a larned scribbler, bekase I plade the cause of the people. The rint office and the backers of the landlords, the gintlemin who are invited to stretch the legs under the mahogany of the evicthors and exterminathors, are aginst me, and Latin has been used to squelch me. But here I am to proclaim to the world the great truth, 'fox poply, fox day!'" (Vox populi, vox Dei), and from this platform, I fling the Frinch in his face."

It was a local orator in Leinster County who, in lauding Mr. Parnell, delivered himself of the following Biblical eulogy:

"Mr. Parnell is the Moses of the lost children of Erin. He will, like Joshua, take them to the promised land of Home Rule, and then, with the Aaron's rod of peasant proprietary, he will strike the rock of landlordism, when plenty and peace will flow out of it like a shower of manna from the skies of justice."

The Youngest Bandmaster.

The honor of being the youngest bandmaster in the United Kingdom holding the King's commission belongs to Lieut. H. G. Amers of the Northumberland Hussars and the 1st Northumberland Garrison Artillery Volunteers. Lieut. Amers is a conductor of marked ability, and the performance of his band always bears testimony to his skill, his care, and his popularity among those who are under his direction. Although still in the "twenties," Lieut. Amers' musical experience is considerable. He took over the management of several bands at the age of nineteen, and has since wielded the baton in many places and before critical audiences. He is, of course, most widely known in Newcastle, but Glasgow and other towns in the north have had many opportunities of passing judgment on his performances. Some time ago he brought his band to London, where its performances won much praise. At Brussels his band caused such enthusiasm that the young conductor was seized by the crowd and carried shoulder high through the building; he was presented with the Palm of Honor, and the Administrative Council of the Brussels Exhibition bestowed upon him a jewelled decoration.—Daily Graphic.

No Joke to Entertain Royalty.

What a relief it must be to the hosts when a royal visit is satisfactorily ended! The preparations for it are wonderfully troublesome. Imagine having to furnish the royal apartments throughout, bedrooms and sitting-rooms—every royalty must have a private sitting-room—with everything new. One wonders how the "old furniture" mania fits in with this rule of etiquette. And the royal family in general are great Chippendale, Sheraton, etc., collectors themselves.—London Truth.

Motor-Car in India.

The motor-car has broken out in a new place. The Northwestern Railway in India has just purchased a steam motor coach for £2,000 to run over its branch lines, where a full train service does not pay. This motor coach will carry 66 passengers in all, and run 30 miles without replenishing coal and water. It thus suffices to make a connection with the main lines.

"CLOSE TO THE GREAT HEART OF NATURE."

IN A LETTER BRIGHT WITH EPIGRAM AND SPARKLING WITH IMAGERY, PROF. DENYS INDITES US FROM THE WILDS OF "OLD QUEBEC."

St. Julienne, Montcalm Co., Que.,
July 25th, 1904.

Dear Mr. Editor,—From this remote and quiet portion of King Edward's mighty realm I indite you. If beauty of scene and charm of solitude be among one's dreams, it were difficult to have fuller content and still remain a mortal. Land of lake and mountain, of valley and cascade, few spots would seem better designed for a life of "splendid isolation" and restful enjoyment. How quickly, too, will thoughts of a meditative kind steal upon you as you get closer to the great heart of nature and behold in their captivating magnificence the work and elements of Omnipotence. Here no discord, no strife or strike; only order, harmony and peace. And why should man, to whom so much was given—reason, freedom, strength, conscience—be first to covet, rebel and infringe? Let wiser ones answer.

But if the panoramic grandeur of this northern zone be inspiring, equally delightful and appreciated is the fresh, fragrant woodland, midst which the most refractory appetite is bound to revive, the mental and nervous powers improve and longevity itself lengthen. Our lady cake-maker, at least, is quite pleased so far with the progress achieved, and that, despite the ever climbing prices of alimentary products The Sage of Lu, who once pronounced poverty an incomparable blessing, may have been right, but when you are asked a dollar for the tiniest tin pail full of ill-picked blue berries, the problem assumes a phase that would confuse Confucius himself. At such a moment even the man of force feels like repining and querying if he has labored all these years that the fruit thereof might vanish with the price of one small mouthful of indispensable sustenance! I own I almost felt an anarchic idea sprouting in my bosom. What was the use of being true to your task and time if your purse would not cope with modern conditions. These irritating thoughts, coupled with the news just out of the insane intention in some quarter of levying contributions on gentlemen of single purpose—not so much to swell the treasury as to steer them into broader social channels—added fuel to the flame. Fortunately, John, my companion, who always views mildly what ever may happen, and to whom we refer everything, counselled fortitude and moderation. John is an expert at clearing mists and rekindling content where all before was darkness and ennui. So we surrendered to his words. There is a silver lining, we remembered, to every cloud, if not to every pocket, and the hopeful light in this case was the conviction that bright Belleville would never imitate the retrograde move of the Bytown Alderman. It was not a gallant proceeding. Henceforth the fair maid to whom a proposal was addressed might well ask herself if the aspirant came through a tender sentiment or dread of the tax! I am ashamed of you, my compatriot, and may, from this forward, sign "Dennis" and be an out-and-out Hibernian.

To this enthusiastic race belonged, I believed, the valiant youth of whom I read the other day. While out sailing with two young lady friends, one asked which he would save, Emma or herself, should they upset, and it were impossible to rescue both. "Oh!" was the prompt response, "I would save Emma, and sink with you."

An Ideal Picnic.

One of the most successful excursions of the season was that held yesterday under the auspices of Christ Church Sunday School to Twelve O'Clock Point. A large number were in attendance and the day was thoroughly enjoyed by all, both youngsters and grown-ups. In the evening a moonlight sale was held to Deseronto. The I.O.O.F. band was on board and discoursed a pleasing programme. Nothing occurred to mar the proceedings.

Hurt on the Sidewalk.

Mrs. George Skinner, who sustained severe injuries through a fall on a Great St. James street defective sidewalk last Friday, is still in a very serious condition. She was injured internally, and has been under the doctor's care ever since. It was at one time thought that fatal results would follow. Another party, we are told, was hurt the next day on the same piece of sidewalk.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Te Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

Minister of the Interior Assassinated at St. Petersburg This Morning.

Bomb Thrown Under His Carraige, and He Died, the Body Being Terribly Mangled

St. Petersburg, July 28.—Minister of the Interior von Plehve was assassinated at 10 o'clock this morning, while driving to the Baltic Station to visit the Peterhof.

A bomb was thrown under the Minister's carriage, completely shattering it. M. Von Plehve was terribly mangled. The coachman was killed and the wounded and maddened horses dashed wildly away with the front wheels of the carriage, the only portion of the vehicle remaining intact.

Immediately there ensued a scene of wildest confusion. Police and gendarmes hurried up from every direction, and vast crowds gathered about the spot where the body of the Minister lay.

The tragedy occurred on the Salakonski Prospect, a broad thoroughfare leading up to the Warsaw depot.

The Minister of the Interior and his coachman were so mutilated that fragments of their bodies had to be collected and carried to the Minister's residence in a [illegible] not.

The assassin was captured. He is said to be a Jew, who, thus far, has declined to give his name.

Sailing Races Yesterday Afternoon.

Owing to the fact that a number of the local sailing craft are at present on a cruise, there were not many entries in the events which took place on the bay yesterday afternoon. The wind was light, but some of the boats showed remarkable speed.

Skiff Race.

There were but two entries, namely, the Viva and Lillie. It was an easy win for the former skiff, which finished some 15 minutes ahead of her competitor. The winner's time over the course was 1.47.

The Yacht Race.

Pando and Angeline were the two competitors in this event. The race was close and exciting, both boats keeping very close to each other all over the course and rounding the buoys together. The Pando won, crossing the line but five seconds ahead of the Angeline.

The Punt Race.

This event was keenly contested and caused much sport. There were five entries, namely, King of the Waters, Bluebird, Imp, Sigma and Redbird. The race for supremacy was between the two former punts, who pressed each other very closely, the King of the Waters winning by 3 seconds.

SPORTING NOTES.

A large number yesterday afternoon spent the holiday fishing. Some very fair catches of bass were made, two parties securing 8 and 5 respectively. About the piers of the bay bridge appears to be the favorite spot.

St. Catharines beat Tecumsehs at lacrosse by 3 to 2 yesterday.

Lou Dillon trotted a mile in 2.04 at Detroit yesterday.

DELICATE BOYS AND GIRLS

Are altogether too numerous. Our schools are full of them. Chances are your own children are weaklings. It's a shame so many children grow up without health when they could be made strong by Ferrozone, the best tonic growing boys and girls can take. Ferrozone invigorates the whole body, helps digestion, makes the blood pure and rich. It supplies more nourishment than children can get in any other way and soon establishes a reserve of force and energy. Give your children Ferrozone and watch them grow strong. Price 50c per box.

WELCOME THE COMING, SPEED PARTING PASTOR.

GRACEFUL TRIBUTE TO TWO GENTLEMEN IN WHOM BELLEVILLE IS INTERESTED.

(R.S., in Christian Guardian.)

Peterboro, George Street.—Rev. W. J. Crothers, M.A., D.D., pastor. The going away of a pastor who, for four years has ministered to us with much acceptance is an event which would not have been graciously acceded to were it not the law of the church. George Street Church, Peterboro, has for many pastorates been singularly favored, but the Rev. J. P. Wilson is a born clergyman, and during his ministry here he simply captured the people, not of his own church alone, but of all denominations, and all regret his removal. Mr. Wilson is blessed with natural graces—a good presence, a good voice. Charming, simple and natural, he was always interesting and effective as a preacher and leader of devotional services, and so faithful in every-day pastoral duties that it was hard to part with him, for he seemed to belong to us. At Christmas of his second year old Santa Claus found his stocking and bulged it with $100. In the third year his stipend was increased by a like sum, and on his going away at a crowded lecture room, his people extended to him a farewell service and the brethren, besides expressions of their appreciation and good will, placed in his hands a purse containing $100. George Street has not heretofore indulged much in extras but in this case they simply could not help it. They congratulate Bridge Street, Belleville, in their good fortune in securing so desirable a supply. But the king never dies—the day that took Rev. Wilson to Belleville brought from Belleville to Peterboro Dr. Crothers. He was met at the early morning train by his officials and escorted to the parsonage, where the ladies had thoughtfully set the table for breakfast, and now the Doctor is comfortably settled and at work, which he drops into as if to the manner born. Our people have cultivated the art of sympathetic co-operation with the pastor, and so continuous happy results are looked for under the pastorate of Dr. Crothers, and indeed, if first impressions do not miscarry, dear old George Street will continue her record of peace and prosperity under the new regime.

SUMMONED TO PAY FOR IMITATION BOW-WOW.

RATHER A GOOD JOKE TOLD ON ONE OF THE CITY OFFICIALS.

A resident of Bridge street west is the possessor of a plaster of paris dog, of the pug model, which really is an excellent imitation. The inanimate canine occupies a place at the front door of his owner's residence, and many passers-by have to take a second look at the image before they see that it is not the "real thing." Yesterday an official of the city passed the house and saw the dog in the door. He followed Cap'n Cuttle's advice and "made a note of it," with the result that the owner of the barkless bow-wow was summoned to appear before the Cadi, charged with keeping a dog without a license. The said owner says he will obey the summons, and take the plaster of paris dog with him, marked "Exhibit A."

If he does, it is to be feared the gravity of the court will be much upset.

CHARGED WITH SELLING LIQUOR ILLEGALLY.

PROPRIETOR OF INTERNATIONAL HOTEL BEFORE THE MAGISTRATE THIS MORNING.

Thos. Sager, who conducts the International Hotel, was charged with selling liquor during prohibited hours, namely, on Saturday night and Sunday last. Mr. Smith, the bartender, swore positively that he had not sold any liquor during the time named. The proprietor, in his evidence, stated that on Sunday last he gave two parties liquor, but produced a doctor's certificate, under which he gave the liquor. He also swore positively that he had not given liquor to any other persons on Saturday night or Sunday.

The case was enlarged until Monday next to hear further evidence.

Selling to Minors.

John Hurt, of Stoco, hotel-keeper, was charged with and pleaded guilty to selling to minors on the 15th inst. He was fined $20 and costs. The defendant was also charged with selling liquor to minors upon another date, which he denied. This case was enlarged after some evidence had been taken.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and has especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

LATEST WAR NEWS

Kuropotkin Reported Wounded--Decisive Battle Near Which Will Terminate the Campaign.

Tokio, July 27.—The Tien-Tsin correspondent of the Jiji Shimpo reports that Gen. Kuropatkin was wounded in the left shoulder in the Battle of Tashichao, and that another Russian general was killed. The Russian casualties are stated to have been over 10,000. It is reported that the Takushan army is pressing Hai-Cheng strongly, compelling the Russians to evacuate, and that the latter are now retreating north. Thus the Russian army has been bisected.

The Japanese captured a number of guns at Tashichao. Their losses were less than was at first supposed, not exceeding 800. They did not pursue the Russians because of a desire to co-operate with the first army in a decisive battle between Hai-Cheng and Liao-Yang, which even Russian officers think will result in a Russian defeat and terminate the campaign.

Official details of the fighting show that Gen. Oku's army faced a superior force of Russians south of Tashichao, on July 24. The Russian artillery checking the advance of the Japanese, it was decided to make a surprise attack at night. The entire Japanese right was hurled against the Russians at 10 p.m., resulting in the easy capture of their first position at Taipingling. Their second position was attacked at midnight, and by dawn the Russians were retreating from Tash'chao, the Japanese pursuing them. The Takushan army did not co-operate. This army is to the eastward of Gen. Oku's army, moving northwestward. It won a separate action at Pauling on July 22.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN.

(The Globe.)

The latest authentic news from the Far East is contained in a short despatch from General Kuropatkin, stating that the Japanese are marching on Haicheng. That they intend to press the Russians back to Liaoyang for a final stand is quite evident. Kuroki in the north has not been heard from, and has assuredly not yet cut the railway and telegraph lines or there would be an end of Kuropatkin's bulletins from the front. London seems to think that Kuroki is not in a position to isolate Kuropatkin from Mukden, and that his mission is to wait until Oku and Nodzu in the south have soundly beaten the Russians and do for his colleagues what Blucher did for Wellington at Waterloo, change the retreat to a rout by sending fresh men after a tired and dispirited foe. The plan of completely surrounding the Russians is the more thorough one, and we still believe that, is the campaign mapped out by the Japanese.

There is no official statement of the casualties at Tatchekiao, and unofficial estimates differ very widely. It is asserted by a French correspondent that the Russians lost 2,000 men and the Japanese 3,000, while a Tokio despatch puts the Japanese loss at 800 killed and wounded.

Refugees from Port Arthur say the Japanese are making very slow progress in the siege. They were driven out of the advanced positions captured early in July, and are now carefully approaching by means of trenches. Russians arriving at Chefoo are responsible for the statement that three Russian torpedo boat destroyers were sunk by the Japanese on Monday night as the result of a torpedo attack.

The operations of the Russian volunteer cruisers and of the Vladivostok squadron are of more interest at the moment than those of the armies in Manchuria. The indiscriminate seizure of neutral shipping really menaces the peace of the world. British public opinion is becoming greatly inflamed, and there is usually some fellow around with a lighted match where powder is stored.

Apple Barrels Plentiful.

The Canadian Horticulturist in its August issue will announce that as a result of careful investigations made throughout the province, it finds there is not likely to be any shortage of apple barrels this season. Last year it will be remembered, thousands of bushels of apples rotted under the trees owing to the scarcity of apple barrels. Coopers this year have been able to obtain more supplies and are prepared for the demand. In some sections the apple crop is going to be a little lighter than last year, which will tend to increase the supply of barrels. The average price this year for barrels will be 40 to 50 cents each.

McINTOSH BROS.

CASE OF COL. GREGORY

More of Inside History of Trouble in St. Kitts Dragoons.

Sir Fred. Borden Accuses Col. Gregory, and Mr. R. L. Borden Criticises Col. Otter—Politics and the Militia As Revealed in House of Commons—Mr. Fitzpatrick's Election Act Amendment Bill Discussed in Committee.

Ottawa, July 28.—The House had no preliminaries yesterday morning, but plunged at once into the orders of the day.

On again going into committee on Mr. Fitzpatrick's bill to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1900, Mr. R. L. Borden led in objections to holding elections at a subsequent date to the general elections in a number of ridings which were designated because of their inaccessibility. He specially mentioned Kootenay as having better facilities than others.

In reply to Mr. Blain's assurance that Nipissing was now much better opened up, the Minister of Justice said he would drop that riding from the provision.

Mr. W. L. Galliher (Yale-Cariboo) said Kootenay comprised a territory of nine ridings for the Local Legislature, and it was a physical impossibility for the returning officer to cover the territory in the time at his disposal.

Mr. R. G. Macpherson pointed out that Comox-Atlin was even worse, being 1,500 miles in length.

Mr. W. H. Bennett asked that there be no provision for delay in the Algomas, and Mr. Clancy pointing out that Manitoulin Island in the east riding was the part most difficult of access at certain seasons, Mr. Fitzpatrick agreed to drop West Algoma from this provision also.

Mr. Galliher added that to cover Kootenay in time a man would need wings.

Mr. W. R. Brock said commercial men find no difficulty in getting through the riding.

"In a Pullman car," observed Mr. Galliher.

Mr. Brock urged that all the elections be held on one day.

After some further discussion the committee reported progress and will sit again to get further information on the British Columbia constituencies.

Mr. Fitzpatrick's bill to amend the Representation Act, 1903, by making several minor amendments, which have been previously explained, was passed through the committee stage and reported.

The House then went into committee on the bill giving further powers to the arbitrators who are adjudicating a dispute between His Majesty and the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada respecting a portion of track east of Quebec. The bill was still under consideration when the House rose at 1 o'clock.

Col. Gregory's Case.

More of the inside history of the trouble between Col. Gregory of the 2nd St. Catharines Dragoons and the Government was revealed in the House yesterday. The features of the debate were accusations made by Sir Frederick Borden against Col. Gregory and the strictures that were passed on the official conduct of Col. Otter. E. A. Lancaster, Col. Sam Hughes and R. L. Borden charged on the one hand that Col. Gregory was refused an extension of his command because he would not co-operate with the Militia Department in promoting an unqualified officer to the position of second in command in the room and stead of Major Ferguson.

Sir Frederick Borden energetically denied this charge and accused Col. Gregory of keeping Major Ferguson in a position which he was physically unable to fill so that he would have an excuse for demanding an extension of time as colonel of the regiment. Sir Frederick was very bitter in his references to Col. Gregory, whom he accused of malicious hostility to Major Glasgow. The correspondence read to the House by Mr. Lancaster showed that Col. Otter had persistently urged Col. Gregory to recommend Major Glasgow for promotion and gave him to distinctly understand that in no other way could he obtain the extension of his command.

It was alleged that there was political influence behind Col. Otter in his efforts to wring the desired recommendation from Col. Gregory. Touching this phase of the case R. L. Borden severely criticized the conduct of Col. Otter. "If," said Mr. Borden, "I had anything to do with Col. Otter and he could not give me any explanation to show that political intrigue was not affecting his judgment, I would consider that he was worthy to be dismissed within 48 hours."

Canada's Preparedness.

Ottawa, July 28.—Senator Perley asked in the Upper House yesterday for a statement showing the military strength of the Government of Canada in so far as it relates to ammunition, rifles and other weapons of warfare, where and in what proportions are such stored. Hon. W. R. Scott replied that it had been held improper to give information. There are 32,000 Lee-Enfield rifles in the hands of the regiments and rifle clubs and 456 rifles and 815 carbines in reserve.

Rocked the Boat.

Jamestown, N.Y., July 28.—Dr. B. H. Whitely, health officer of Corry, Pa., was drowned in Findley Lake yesterday. Dr. Whitely, his son and daughter were out rowing. Some one of the party began to rock the boat and it was upset. Dr. Whitely became entangled in a trolling line, and was drowned.

Succumbed to Burns.

Toronto, July 28.—Mrs. Susan Malone, who was so badly burned in the fire at her house at 72 Kensington avenue on Friday last, died in St. Michael's Hospital yesterday at 3 p.m.

FOUND IN A POOL.

Mrs. Robert Logan's Body Discovered Near Georgetown and Case Is Now Being Investigated.

Georgetown, Ont., July 28.—There died near Glen Williams, a village a short distance north of here, about two months ago, a Mrs. Margaret Logan under circumstances which have been causing considerable gossip in the neighborhood since. It was said at the time that it was suicide. Her body was found one morning lying in a small pool of water formed by an excavation beside the railway track, not far from her home, and the presumption was that she drowned herself, probably during a temporary fit of insanity. No inquest was held.

Yesterday, however, Mr. John Murray, chief detective of the Ontario Department, is in the vicinity, and it is understood that he is making inquiries into the circumstances. Mrs. Logan became the wife of Mr. Robert Logan some four or five years ago, and she is survived by him and by some stepsons. It is said that she had some money. Her family are well-to-do people, and Mr. Logan is one of the prominent farmers of the neighborhood, so that the affair has been creating quite a stir.

Dr. Caven made a post-mortem examination yesterday, but has not yet made his report.

THEY GOT FRESH MEAT.

How Friends of the Strikers Secured a Supply in Chicago.

Chicago, July 28.—A rain and hailstorm yesterday caused confusion in the live stock pens. The frightened animals ran about the yards, completely beyond the control of the inexperienced drivers. During the excitement several persons were seen to escape from the yards with live sheep in their arms. These men were said to be friends of the strikers, who took advantage of the opportunity to secure fresh meat.

Packers Won't Arbitrate.

Chicago, July 28.—"We had an agreement with Mr. Donnelly's organization and the allied trades, which they have failed to live up to, and under the circumstances, we do not care to make any further agreements with them." This is the statement handed by the packers to the State Board of Arbitration last night, after a conference, in an endeavor to bring about another meeting between the packers and the butchers.

Cement Hog Houses.

We are on the eve of a cement age. The first winter's experience with a cement hog house offers nothing new, according to the experience of H. E. Cook, related in Stockman and Farmer. Pens must be kept as clean as a cow stable, with plenty of dry straw bedding. But how you can make manure on a concrete floor! It is a pleasure to note each year the increased acreage covered since concrete was used over former times when we had only plank. Do not fear concrete for any form of live stock if it is dry and covered with some nonconducting material like straw or shavings, not sawdust unless kiln dried.

A Remarkable Tree.

In the public square of Nassau, the capital of the Bahama Islands, there is only one tree, but that tree literally fills the square and spreads its shade over all the public buildings in the neighborhood, for it is the largest tree in the world at its base, although it is hardly taller than a three-storey house. It is usually known as a ceibra or a silk-cotton tree, but the people of the Low Islands of the West Indies call it the hurricane tree. Even the oldest negro in the island cannot remember when it was a bit smaller than it is at present.

DESTROYERS BLOWN UP

Three More Russian Vessels Torpedoed By the Japs.

Japanese Lost 800 at the Tatchekiao Fight—Kuropatkin Reports Confirms News of Occupation By the Japs of Tatchekiao, and Says Enemy Is Moving on Haicheng—Vladivostock Squadron Sixty Miles Off Tokio Bay.

Che Foo, July 28.—Russian refugees who have arrived here report that the Lieut. Burakoff and two other Russian torpedo destroyers were torpedoed and destroyed by the Japanese on the night of July 25.

Japs Lost 800.

Tokio, July 28.—The Japanese casualties before Tatchekiao were eight hundred.

On to Haicheng.

St. Petersburg, July 28.—A telegram from Gen. Kuropatkin was received yesterday confirming the occupation of Tatchekiao by the Japanese, July 25, and adding that a Japanese division had moved on Haicheng.

Captured the Keys.

Tokio, July 28.—The army of Gen. Oku combined with what is known as the Takushan forces, attacked Tatchekiao Sunday night and on Monday captured all the important topographical keys. The Russian forces consisted of five divisions. The losses are unknown.

60 Miles From Tokio.

Tokio, July 28.—The Russian Vladivostock squadron was seen sixty miles off Tokio Bay at dawn yesterday morning. It then moved to the south.

DARING NIGHT ATTACK.

How the Japanese Troops Hustled Russian Troops Into Retreat.

Tokio, July 28.—In a daring night attack against a Russian force estimated at five divisions, with 100 guns, Gen. Oku drove the enemy from their strong line of defence south of Tatchekiao. Advancing on Sunday, Gen. Oku found a superior force confronting him, and that a heavy artillery fire from the enemy was checking his men. He thereupon decided to attempt a night surprise. This was successful, the Japanese troops hustling the Russians into retreat to Tatchekiao. The Japanese had 800 casualties.

The Takushan army fought and won a separate action on Friday, July 22, at Pauling, losing 31 men. The Russians left 14 dead. The Japanese began the advance against the Russian positions south of Tatchekiao on Saturday, July 23. On this date the vanguard occupied positions in the vicinity of Chuichiatun, to the southeast of Tatchekiao, developing the position and strength of the enemy.

The Russian line was through the hills south of Tatchekiao, extending almost due east and west of the railroad. The position of the enemy was fortified. The strongest point was at Taiping Mountain, to the southeast of Tatchekiao, and here the heaviest force had assembled. The Russians had two battalions of artillery posted near Chatenganen, due south of Tatchekiao, and ahead of the main line.

The Japanese deployed to the westward from Chuhiatun, and, confronting the Russian line east of the railroad, advanced early Sunday morning. At 9 o'clock the Japanese right had reached a bluff less than two miles from Taiping Mountain. In the afternoon the Russian batteries, posted on the heights, shelled the advancing line. The strength of the Russians gradually developed, Gen. Oku estimating it at five divisions and 100 guns. The Russians prevented a general advance, and Gen. Oku decided on a night assault.

Two divisions of Russians occupied the Saicheng road, and Gen. Oku took the precaution to engage this force with artillery. The Russians replied similarly, the duel lasting until darkness. At 10 o'clock Sunday night the entire Japanese right was hurled against the first Russian position, east and west of Taiping Mountain, and easily captured it. At midnight the second position was attacked, and by daylight the Japanese occupied the eminence east of Shanchiatun, the Russians retreating towards Tatchekiao. At 7 o'clock Monday morning the Japanese seized Chenyshishhan without resistance and pursued the Russians towards Tatchekiao.

To Change Motive Power.

Port Huron, Mich., July 28.—The management of the Grand Trunk Railway system and of the St. Clair tunnel have at last determined upon a change of motive power in the tunnel to electricity. Work will at once commence for the installation of the plant, which will mean an investment of $400,000. The third rail system is to be used.

Mrs. House Badly Burned.

Hamilton, July 28.—While Mrs. Louis House, who resides near Bartonville, was preparing breakfast yesterday morning her clothing caught fire. Before the fire could be extinguished her face, arms and the upper part of her body were terribly burned. Mr. House extinguished the flames and was severely burned while doing so.

Injunction Restrains Sale.

Toronto, July 28.—Justice Britton yesterday granted a temporary injunction, returnable on Thursday next, restraining the Cramp Steel Company from making a sale of certain assets to the Northern Iron & Steel Company.

Dundonald Dined.

Montreal, July 28.—Lord Dundonald passed a quiet day yesterday. The banquet to the general at St. James' Club, which was attended by one hundred gentlemen, was absolutely formal.

The Acute Stage Is Now Passed.

Russia and Britain Not Yet Agreed on General Principles.

Premier Balfour Makes a Statement and is Cheered, But He Sees a Serious Situation Yet Remaining From the Sinking of the British Ship, the Knight Commander—Russian Captain Ignorant of International Practice.

London, July 29.—In the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, Premier Balfour said the acute stage of the Red Sea incidents had passed, and that the Russian volunteer fleet vessels would be withdrawn. He laid down the British view that no belligerent warship could issue from the Black Sea, and that the volunteer fleet vessels in issuing therefrom, if they took belligerent action either had no right to issue or no right to take such action.

The strongest possible exception had been taken to the seizure of the Malacca on the above grounds, the Premier added. The Russian Government had met the British contention in regard to this particular incident. As to the Knight Commander case, the Government had earnestly protested that the sinking of that vessel was contrary to the accepted practice of nations.

In Particular Instance.

Mr. Balfour said regarding the Russian assurances on the subject of of the seizure of the Malacca and other vessels were as follows: The Russian Government have met us in this matter. I will not say on general principles, but in regard to this particular instance. The Malacca could not be stopped before she left Port Said, but she has now been released at Algiers. The Russian Government at the same time gave us assurances that if the vessels of the volunteer fleet made further captures before instructions could reach them that, pending the discussion of the general principle involved, no action should be taken. and that those captures should be regarded as not having occurred. In accordance with that arrangement the Ardova and Formosa have been released. We have received assurances that the volunteer fleet vessels are to be withdrawn from the Red Sea, and we have little doubt that there will be no further desire on the part of Russian Government to employ them as cruisers. So far, therefore, as those ships go, the controversy has passed out of the acute stage. I will not say that the Government of this country and Russia have reached an agreement on the general principle; but I think we need not anticipate any practical violation of the view which we very strongly hold is likely to occur."

More Serious Situation.

Mr. Balfour assumed a more serious tone as he referred to the Knight Commander. "There are, I am sorry to say," said the Premier, "other questions not connected with the incident at all which must cause some discussion between the two Governments, and like all discussions between Governments there may be legitimate cause for anxiety. We hold that it is not proper that on the authority of the captain of a cruiser that goods alleged to be contraband of war should be taken from a merchant ship without trial."

This statement of the Premier was greeted with an outburst of cheers.

"The proper course," continued Mr. Balfour, "according to international practice, is that any ship reasonably suspected of carrying contraband of war should be taken by the belligerent to one of its own ports, and its trial should there occur before a prize court, by which the case is to be determined. Evidently, if it is left to the captain of a cruiser to decide on his own initiative and authority, whether particular articles carried on a ship are or are not contraband, what is not merely a practice of nations, but what is a necessary foundation of equitable relations between belligerents and neutrals, would be cut down to the root."

Contrary to Practice.

This statement of the Premier was also cheered. He continued: "More serious than the others is the case of the Knight Commander. If, as our information leads us to fear, she was sunk by a cruiser of the Vladivostock squadron, on the ground that she carries contraband of war, in our view it is entirely contrary to the practice of nations in war time, and we have earnestly pressed our view on the Russian Government. We are under a strong impression that when the case is brought, as it has been brought to us, before the Russian Government, that they will give such orders as to prevent a recurrence of unfortunate incidents of that character. I feel confident that will be the case."

Row Boat Upset.

St. John's, Que., July 29.—Eugene Laroque, painter, and a member of the Philharmonic Band, was drowned by the upsetting of a rowboat above the C. P. R. bridge yesterday afternoon. A brother-in-law named Leger arrived from Montreal to spend the day with his wife and family, who were on a visit to the Laroques. Laroque and Leger went out for a boat ride. Leger says Laroque stood up in the boat when near the drawbridge, and losing his balance upset the boat, and both were precipitated into the river.

He May Die.

Niagara Falls, July 29.—Thomas Parker, resident of Stamford, and employed as hoist runner at the Queenston quarry, while on his way home on the Grand Trunk tracks, about a mile west of the station, was run over by the 8 p. m. eastbound express, and his right arm was cut off near the shoulder and face badly cut. His chances of recovery are slight. He has a wife and four children.

Two of Five Drowned.

Winnipeg, Man., July 29.—At Long Lake, Assiniboia, yesterday, a canoe containing five young men of Regina upset, and Robert Pell and Ernest Peart were drowned. Both are prominent in lacrosse circles at Regina.

John Smith and Frank Humphrey, both mechanics of Birtle, were drowned Wednesday night while bathing in the river near that town. They were not missed until the discovery of their clothes on the river bank yesterday morning.

Current Swept Four to Death.

Winnipeg, July 29.—A sad drowning fatality occurred at MacLeod on Tuesday night when sisters, Nellie and Katie Higgins, aged 20 and 26, their brother, Eddie, aged six, and their girl friend, Mary Robinson, aged 21, all met death while attempting to make the ford here of the Old Man River. The current, swollen by heavy rains, was too strong for them and they were swept down stream. John Stewart, 16 years old, was drowned Wednesday while bathing.

Belz Meets With Accident.

Toronto, July 29.—While performing the leap-the-gap feat at Crytsal Beach, near Buffalo, on Wednesday, Oliver Belz, the young man who did the performance at the island two weeks ago, lost control of his wheel and plunged over the trestle to the ground, 40 feet below. His skull was fractured, but he is expected to recover.

New Chief Justice.

Montreal, July 29.—Sir L. N. Cassault, recently appointed commissioner for the codification of the revised statutes of the Province of Quebec, will resign his chief justiceship in consequence. He will be succeeded as chief justice of Quebec by Hon. F. Langelier, one of the most brilliant of the French-Canadian judges.

Drowned in Canal.

Cornwall, July 29.—Arthur Lally, the 13-year-old son of John Lally, lockmaster at the foot of the Cornwall Canal, was drowned at noon yesterday. He was crossing the old locks and fell into the water. Some one saw his cap and in a few minutes the body was recovered, but life was extinct.

Doctor Settles.

Toronto, July 29.—Dr. Charles Stansbury will pay his wife $200, releasing him from all claims for five years. He was yesterday allowed his freedom by the police.

Member Proulx Dead.

Plantagenet, July 29.—Isidore Proulx, M.P. for the County of Prescott, died at half-past three o'clock yesterday afternoon of inflammation of the bowels. He was taken ill last Saturday evening. He was born in 1810. He was a farmer and a general merchant. He was first elected to the Commons in 1891, but was unseated. He stood again in 1892 and was elected, and has been in the House ever since. He was a Liberal.

NEARLY A MILLION DOLLARS GIVEN AWAY.

It seems improbable that the Government intends to take up the challenge of the Auditor-General and bring the notorious Davis contract for lighting the Cornwall canal before the Public Accounts Committee. Therefore it is interesting to read what the Auditor-General says of their action in altering the terms of the agreement on the eve of the elections of 1900 in such a way as to give the contractor an added profit of between half a million and a million dollars. In a letter which he wrote to the Ottawa Journal challenging the Government to an investigation, Mr. McDougall, referring to a complaint Mr. Fitzpatrick had made to the tone of some of his letters when he was fighting the payment of certain accounts which the Government afterwards acknowledged should not have been paid, asked his readers to recollect:

> That in the many interviews I had with Mr. Fitzpatrick in connection with the Davis matter he never indicated to me, in my recollection, that the letters to the Government from me were at all improper, except in regard to the nearness of the elections when the transactions were concluded under the separate Governments. He knew that I considered the contract of 1900 to have nothing for the people of Canada and, therefore, that it was an unadulterated give-away to Mr. Davis and that, therefore, the more years the more give-away.

Mr. McDougall then proceeds to ask Mr. Fitzpatrick this significant question:

> Will Mr. Fitzpatrick explain why when he had in his possession these letters which, as he maintains, are so improper, he made a settlement of a great part of the matter with me on the basis of its having been a pure give-away, and put off making strictures until the subject came up for discussion in the House?

Here is a direct charge against the Government of having misused the powers entrusted to them by the people. Mr. McDougall has asked that the whole matter be brought up before the Public Accounts Committee, where all the facts could be brought out, but the Government does not intend to take such action. They would rather by refusing to do as the Auditor-General asks, confess to malfeasance in office than allow the matter to come before the Public Accounts Committee, where all the truth might come out. This the Government confesses it is anxious should not occur and admits that the contract of 1900 was an "unadulterated give-away" to Mr. Davis at the expense of the people of Canada.

$38,000,000.	$74,771,608.

This is what is called Liberal economy. The Conservatives were roundly denounced as extravagant spendthrifts by the Liberals in 1896 for asking for $38,000,000. Now the professed economists ask for the current year ending 30th June, 1905, $74,771,608, just $36,771,604 of an increase. About $6,000,000 a month. Taxpayers, how do you like it?

What a gigantic business the United States Steel Corporation must be! The earnings for the quarter ending June 30 were $17,151,583 less than for the same quarter a year ago, but $6,181,839 more than for the preceding quarter of the present year. This would indicate that the steel barometer is rising.

Mr. Fielding, Finance Minister, boasted not long since that Conservatives would "not elect a man in the Province of Quebec" at the next election. To accomplish this the race and creed cry is being already raised. Mr. Fielding may learn ere long that he is "living in a fool's paradise." At the last election, though the Conservatives elected only seven members out of sixty-five, they polled over 100,000 votes, while the Rouges polled only 133,000. A few changes may tell a different tale. There is no doubt but that, like in the last Ontario election, a number of Conservatives were literally robbed of their rights.

Here is a specimen of how the Immigration Department of Canada is managed. The Montreal Gazette says: "Half of the last batch of immigrants landed at Quebec are so rotten with disease that they have to be sent back or into hospital to be an immediate charge on the country. And the good money of the people of Canada is being paid out for unloading this sort of human refuse in our midst."

Chief Justice Taschereau was in Parliament when the Confederation Act was passed and opposed it, wishing to keep the then Lower Canada as a special French reserve. He does not appear to have changed as he contemptuously sneers at the Dundonald agitation by assuring the British public that there are "only a few Scotch" behind it. The judge and his friends will learn when the time comes that more than the Scotch people of Canada will resent the insult and teach the judge a lesson he will not forget!

Nearly all the Grit papers in Canada, and particularly those which are owned by or operated in the interests of Cabinet ministers, are frothing at the mouth and throwing fits because Lord Dundonald, at the farewell given him in Ottawa, advised his hearers to "keep both hands on the Union Jack." This remark the Montreal Herald (Hon. Syd. Fisher's paper) calls "an insult." An insult to whom? Surely not to the people who heard it, for they have hardly yet stopped cheering. Surely not to loyal men and women. What more fitting thing could Dundonald, the heroic and splendid British soldier, say on leaving a portion of the British Empire—the Empire for which he has fought, side by side with the brave sons of this Dominion.

• • •

Why, then, should the Government's sycophants, great and small, howl with rage? Surely they did not expect to hear Dundonald preach independence or annexation to the United States. He made no personal references. He said not one word about Laurier's Saskatchewan musket; not one word did he utter about the Boston speech in which Sir Wilfrid Laurier declared that the dream of his life was to see Canada an independent nation; he did not even remind his hearers that the Premier had done his best to keep Canadian soldiers from going to South Africa. Why, then, is Lord Dundonald abused? Why should not Canadians keep both hands on the Union Jack? Perhaps some of the Government's defenders would like to see them put their feet on it.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and while especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

ELTON'S WEATHER REPORT

By LESLIE W. QUIRK

Copyright, 1905, by Leslie W. Quirk

When the managing editor of the Clayville News opened his paper at breakfast one morning and looked for the weather report he found in its place a modest notice stating that the circulation of the News was the largest of any paper in the city. Now, this fact was interesting to the managing editor, but it was not what he wanted to read. He was looking for the prophecy of the weather bureau, which was telegraphed each night from a neighboring city.

The managing editor allowed his steak to grow cold while he searched the paper. But nowhere in it, from the top of the first column on the front page to the end of the last one on the final page, could he find any comments on the weather. He folded the paper deliberately, swearing softly to himself, and fifteen minutes later he confronted young Elton, the telegraph editor.

"I'VE BEEN A FOOL," HE REPEATED TO THE GIRL.

"The weather report," said the latter, with the air of excusing the bureau, "did not come last night."

"Ah!" said the managing editor dryly.

"No, sir," went on the telegraph editor. "I held the paper till 3 o'clock waiting for it, but for some reason it failed to come."

"Ah!" said the managing editor again. Then his anger burst forth, and he raved as became a man who held reporters and editors under his thumb.

"I suppose," he concluded sarcastically, "that it never occurred to you to 'fake' a report, to realize that any guess on the weather was better than none, to appreciate the comments the Times will make on the incident, to imagine the disappointment of every one of our readers. Why, you fool, do you suppose any one would have known that your guess was not a reliable report even if it differed from that of the Times? Do you"— He stopped suddenly, turned on his heels and went out the door, with the remark, "Don't let it happen again!"

Young Elton stared at the ceiling for a good five minutes. Then he went over to his desk with the mail and straightway forgot all his troubles in reading a dainty, scented note. She said some very nice things to him and asked how he was faring in his work.

The weather report failed to come that night. Young Elton prepared some slips of paper with various weather conditions written on them and then drew one cautiously. It said, "Rain today; colder."

The managing editor read it the next morning and wondered if it were reliable. It was not. All day a warm wind blew gently from the south, and a blue sky and a hot sun smiled genially.

Three nights later the message failed again, and young Elton guessed it would be fair. The next day the greatest rain of the season poured down from early morning till late at night.

Young Elton's face was beginning to grow careworn. In desperation he went to the girl and told her the whole story.

"So far my guesses have been all wrong," he confided. "Now, I have a plan that certainly deserves success. It's simple, you understand. I am going to drop in and see you for a minute or two each evening about dinner time, if I may, and I shall gauge my guesses by your demeanor. If you are very cordial I shall say the next day will be clear. If you are not so glad to see me I shall prophesy cloudy weather. If I find you bored by my visits the report will say rain. Do you understand?"

The girl did, and though she suggested the possibility of fair weather every day young Elton decided to try the plan. He grinned cheerfully and went back to the office and wrote the report, "Fair today, with southerly winds." And, although the Times promised rain, the next day was cloudless and warm.

It was very clear for a week, during which time young Elton was called upon to guess the weather conditions several times. The rival paper seemed to be steadily wrong, and the managing editor of the News took it upon himself to write a little editorial on the subject, reprinting the reports of the two papers in parallel columns. The reporters slapped young Elton on the back and told him he should try the races.

Then one night something went awry at the girl's house. It was only a trivial thing in itself, but it lowered the spirits of both. The paper promised cloudy weather, and all the next day ugly, black clouds glowered.

The little quarrel was over by the next night, but the conversation was strained. A few evenings later the girl happened to mention another man who was not young Elton's idea of a fit companion for a woman. He said so very frankly, and the girl disappeared.

The weather report read, "Rain today." For twenty-four hours the water poured down unceasingly.

Late the next afternoon young Elton sat at his desk thinking deeply. He had been out of sorts all day, and he knew very well where the trouble lay. He looked at the clock thoughtfully and noted that it was nearly time for his call. He wondered whether it was worth while to go.

Suddenly he rose, slipped on his rain coat and went out of the office. There was resolution in his every movement.

"I've been a fool," he told himself, "a poor, blind fool. The nicest girl in the world almost mine—the nicest, prettiest"—

The girl met him at the door and invited him into the house a bit unsteadily, as if she did not quite understand. Young Elton slipped off his rain coat, noted the paper on the table, with the weather report wrinkled and a little tear stained, and began bravely.

"I've been a fool," he repeated to the girl, "a poor, blind fool. If you will only forgive me I'll"—

She cried a little very softly on his shoulder, and then, with the prophesied rain pattering down outside, he slipped a ring on her finger, and they fell to talking of the something when there should be a little cottage with a bit of green and maybe a dog.

When the managing editor took up his paper the next morning he neglected to scan the weather report until he had read some strong editorials, which struck him as very excellent. He smiled complacently at the forcible words and turned to the weather report.

His face grew very white.

"Southerly winds," he read, "and fair weather forevermore."

Ancient Chinese Musical Instruments

The ancient Chinese believed that music was of divine origin and that it was a gift from the gods to man. Ancient Chinese instruments are of very neat workmanship. There is a small violin called ur-heen, which is made of dark wood, the head covered with snakeskin. It is not ornamented with any carved or inlaid designs, but it is beautifully made, and the wood is polished very smooth. There are only two silken strings, tuned in fifths and played on with a horsehair bow. A three string banjo, also covered with snakeskins, has a long neck, the top of which, where the strings are fastened, being carved to represent a bat. There is also a very ingenious mouth organ called ti-tzu. The body is made of wood, and in it are inserted seventeen pipes. The notes are made by stopping the holes in the pipes with the fingers.

The Chinese are very fond of drums, which they call kou. The oldest drums were of baked clay, with a skin head fastened on with nails instead of braced cords, which made it impossible to tune them as modern drums are tuned. The variations of tone were regulated only by the force of the blow.

Ingratitude.

A congressman from a northern state was complaining to a colleague of the political nonactivity of a number of his constituents whom he had been influential in placing in public offices.

"There is no use talking," he said, "this civil service business is a humbug. I named four or five fellows for good jobs, and as soon as they got warm in their seats they snapped their fingers at me. They felt that they were protected by the civil service and made up their minds to lay down and not do any work."

"That's nothing to a fellow that I had appointed," said the other man, who hailed from one of the western states. "He was worse than any of your fellows."

"Why, what did he do?" inquired the northerner.

"Do?" was the indignant reply. "Why, as soon as he got his place he joined the church, and now he is useless as far as our political organization is concerned."

The Camel.

The fifteen century pilgrim, Felix Fabri, gave the following quaint description of the camel:

"A camel has a small head and is without horns. It has big and terrible eyes and always seems a sorrowful and troubled animal. Its eyes are like fire beacons, and big reflections shine in them, for whatever a camel looks at seems great and huge to it, wherefore it seems to view everything with wonder and alarm. When, therefore, a man goes up to it the beast begins to tremble, so that the man perceives that the beast trembles because the man coming toward it seems to it to be four times bigger than he really is. Had not God so ordered it this animal would not be so tame and orderly as it is. When it screams, being in trouble, it opens its mouth, shakes its head and raises up its long neck, wagging it to and fro, so that a man who is not accustomed to it is disturbed and frightened."

TRAINING DAUGHTERS.

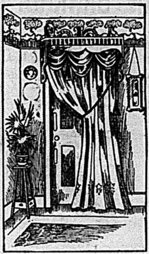
Teach the Girls to Recognize the Power of Thought.

Scholarship is a purpose commonly held in the school and college for boys. Although not one boy in a thousand will become a scholar, yet it is well that the purpose is general. If one boy in a thousand becomes a scholar, one girl in ten thousand becomes a scholar. Small is the chance that my boy will become a scholar, and so infinitesimal is the chance that my daughter will become a scholar that I have the right, and perhaps am bound by the duty, of eliminating it from my calculations. But if my daughter cannot become a scholar there is one thing which my daughter may become—she may become a thinker. It is as much more important as it is more probable, for the opportunities for the use of scholarship are few, sporadic, but the opportunities for the use of the power of thinking are constant. In no better way can I prepare my daughter to undertake the joys and responsibilities of the headship of a home, either for herself alone or for herself in combination with others, than by making her a thinker. The appreciation of others' needs is most readily secured by thinking. Wise thoughtfulness saves or helps to save one from selfishness. Effective economy or economic efficiency is the result of discrimination, and discrimination is a form of thinking. Attention to details is primarily an intellectual quality. The largeness of conception which my daughter should embody in her life in the home represents the power of thought. Therefore I wish my daughter to think.—Dr. Charles F. Thwing in Harper's Weekly.

DRAPING A DOOR.

Artistically Done, It Will Add to the Beauty of a Room.

Draperies play an extensive part in decoration, and often the most inexpensive materials carefully disposed are exceedingly effective. An artistically draped door will often change the whole character of a room. The illustration shows an effective treatment in this line. Over the door are a canopy and a rail, which are easily put up and which a few pieces of pottery ornament. The door draperies start from under the canopy, which hides the brass rod they hang from. The top drapery should consist of some soft material in a shade harmonizing with the walls. The undercurtain drapery is art linen looped back with cord and tassels. A stand, bearing a palm placed near the door, is a pretty finishing touch.



A DRAPED DOOR.

Fan Wall Pockets.

A very handy thing is a wall pocket for letters and small articles, and it can be made very attractive by using one large and one small folding fan. A wire is run in and out through the large open fan one inch from the edge and covered with narrow ribbon, which is slipped through the same holes. The small fan is treated in the same way. The small fan is then placed upon the large one and the ends firmly wired together. The wire near the edge of the small fan is bent to allow the fan to form a curved pocket, and the ends are fastened to the sticks of the large fan, which forms the back. Ribbon bows are fastened over the joinings at the sides, and a length of ribbon extends from one to the other and a little above the top of the back to hang it by. A large bow conceals the fastening at the lower point of the pocket.

The Girl Who Is Loved.

Her features may or may not be good, her complexion perhaps leaves something to be desired, but her sweet, true eyes and her kindly heart make her friends forget any physical shortcomings that she may have, and wherever she goes she is as welcome as the sunshine. Her charm is in her freshness and her naturalness. She is sweet and wholesome herself, and, being that, she is on the lookout for the good that is in the world. Somehow she always finds it. People seem to be at their best in her presence, and, though she knows that the world has its ugly, seamy side, she escapes personal contact with it. She is simple and honest, and people who are tired of the shams and hollowness of society delight in her.

A Laundry Suggestion.

In ironing, the laundress should be instructed to hang upon one side of the clotheshorse only such articles as can be put away immediately after airing. By separating those which need a stitch or button the work of searching through the clothesbasket and the tumbling of the freshly laundered pieces are avoided.

It's never well to shout till one is out of the wood. Less than a month ago M. de Plehve boasted that his police could more than take care of all the anarchists in Russia. Now the aforesaid anarchists seem to have more than taken care of M. de Plehve.

It is possible that the Russian fleet may interfere with some of the Canadian vessels who ply from Vancouver to the Far East. In that case, we opine, there will be an appeal to His Majesty's Government, in short order, and a demand for reparation and protection. And the same people who shriek for the good offices of the British navy will be the very ones who, in this country, object to paying their fair share towards its maintenance. We have some queer people in this great Dominion, and they don't wear any jewelry of the consistency kind.

WOMAN'S WORLD

MRS. F. E. BRITTEN.

President of the Boston Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Mrs. F. E. Britten, president of the Boston Woman's Christian Temperance union, has a charming personality and seems to be a born leader. She possesses great force of character and generally succeeds with whatever she undertakes.

Mrs. Britten was born Sept. 2, 1865, at Ann Arbor, Mich. She was educated at Manistee High school and took a classical course at the University of Michigan. She was married April 29, 1886, to Rev. Fred E. Britten, then pastor of the First Baptist church, Faribault, Minn. She is the mother of three sons, Clarence D., aged sixteen; Rollo H., fourteen, and Merle D., twelve. Mrs. Britten and all her family are members of the Tremont Temple Baptist church, and she is a licensed preacher in the Baptist denomination. In addition to being president of the Boston W. C. T. U. she has been general secretary of the Gospel Prohibition Association of Greater Boston from its beginning in 1903 and state superintendent of the department of Christian citizenship.

MRS. FRED E. BRITTEN.

She has taught in public schools and in the art, Greek and Latin departments of the Central university of Iowa. She has preached in mission work in Nebraska and as pastor of two churches in Michigan. She has been a national lecturer of the Prohibition party and was office manager of that party in Michigan for about four years, 1898-1901.—Boston Globe.

When the Baby Cries.

The early cry which is painfully trying to some young mothers, especially to a nervous one, becomes less distressing if she stops to think that the lungs, never having been used, need exercise in order to make them strong. For the first three months the infant is too weak, even with a fair amount of crying, to develop the lungs more than one-third their normal capacity, and that these organs cannot be considered perfect until they are inflated to their utmost is enough to make her tolerant of a fair allowance of crying. A year of simple breathing would not accomplish as much toward developing the lungs as a moderate amount of crying each day for a month. It is the deep inhalation, such as accompanies a good cry, which alone can make the lungs strong. Healthy infants cry normally, and they should be allowed to do so a portion of each day. When the cry is whining or continuous, it is usually caused by overindulgence of some kind or by mistakes such as handling the baby when he is more comfortable left alone. Too much entertaining causes nervousness and cold extremities, which make necessary too many wraps or too hot a room; this results in discomfort and weakness and lack of fresh air. Sleeping in a bed with older persons is bad for a baby; it draws upon the vitality. Indigestion is never natural; it is caused by overfeeding or improper feeding.—Marianna Wheeler in Harper's Bazar.

Pretty Bedspread.

An extremely pretty bedspread is made by taking a new linen sheet and with a dinner plate and small dessert plate or saucer making intersected circles with a hard lead pencil at regular intervals over the spread. When this is done the foundation lines are made for a pretty design of wreaths, on which it is easy to draw flowers or leaves. One wreath of wild roses on another of daisies has a good effect. The smaller circle of green leaves and the larger of any simple flower is a good idea. When the flowers have been sketched, stain them the color desired with a fast dye. There are several dyes that will stand careful washing—violet ink or red ink, for instance. After the designs have been stained outline them with single zephyr worsted, which washes admirably. Wash silk is pretty and dainty, but it is not so effective and takes more time. The easiest outline stitch is to sew around the design with simple running stitch and then, going over it again, catch each stitch in over and over fashion. This gives a rope effect which looks well.

Hollandaise Sauce.

Slice an onion and place it in a double boiler with a bay leaf, several whole peppers and an ounce of butter. As the butter melts stir in a tablespoonful of flour and half a pint of white stock or chicken broth. Mix well until the mixture is creamy. Season with salt, cayenne and a little nutmeg. Beat the yolk of an egg with a teaspoonful of lemon juice and pour into the sauce. Add a tablespoonful of butter cut in small pieces, and when these are all incorporated serve. This is the ideal Hollandaise. An easier way to make the sauce is to put the yolk of an egg, a tablespoonful of butter and a teaspoonful of lemon juice in the double boiler or in a small saucepan set in a pan of hot water. Stir until the butter melts, when add half a tablespoonful more of butter. Season with salt, cayenne pepper and a little nutmeg. Stir constantly, and as the sauce thickens add a third installment of butter, about half a tablespoonful. A little broth added when the first butter melts is an addition, as the sauce is liable to be too thick.—New York Evening Post.

Clear Broths.

Clear broths are merely aids to digestion, little whips and spurs to sluggish powers. Invaluable in their proper place, it is only when beef tea, mutton broth, chicken and clam broth are mistaken for real food that they become dangerous and a source of positive disaster. Clear animal broth or beef tea means starvation for the sick. The albumen of meats is hardened by hot water and either remains in the meat itself or in the form of scum is skimmed off the top of the infusion. The water takes up the flavoring principle and a small portion of other material, but is devoid of the nutriment commonly supposed to be dissolved by it.—Harper's Bazar.

Rack For a Narrow Hall.

For a small, narrow hall a young matron has designed a coat and hat rack that is perfect in its way. It is simply an enlarged roller towel rack made of heavy wood and long enough to hold several coats snugly. The carpenter has fixed it firmly to the wall, opposite the door and about five feet from the floor, and it is filled with a sufficient number of brass hooks. This arrangement takes up little space and leaves room for pictures and a little mission table, with a middle shelf for those who would rather put their hats down than hang them up—and women's hats will not hang, except on the floor.

Children's Night Clothes.

Many mothers and nurses who are careful to supply the growing children with garments of sufficient size for day wear are careless as to the fit of the night clothes. This is a serious error. Considering the attitudes which children assume during sleep, it should be clear to all that anything which cramps the chest and limbs is detrimental to free breathing and growth. A tight collar band is especially harmful and, in fact, dangerous. It should be remembered also that there is greater warmth from loose than from tight clothing.

Kitchen Bowls.

Why adhere to the common yellow or, worse, brown bowl, when doing your own housework, when for the same price you can get pretty German or Chinese ware, having the additional merit of being so well glazed they are impervious to grease, yet strong enough to stand the "beating" of various mixtures? Why not have attractive ware for the common, everyday service, and not starve your love of the aesthetic by using ugly utensils, especially when pretty ones cost no more?

Brooms.

"A broom for every place and every broom in its place" is a good motto to instill in the housemaid. By taking care not to use the broom intended for the kitchen floor on the Persian rug or Wilton carpet the natural life and beauty of the floor coverings will be preserved. Put a screw hook in the top of each broom handle, and have a peg to hang it on, above which is written the name of the room or hall for which it is to be used, and insist that it be replaced after using.

Keep a String Bag.

Keep a string bag. It will be found most useful in the kitchen. It should be hung up in some special place, and all pieces of string that come tied around parcels should be put in it. String is constantly required, and it is far better to know exactly where to find a piece than to be obliged to hunt about and waste time in searching for this necessity.

Refrigerator Racks.

If wooden racks are used to hold the ice in your refrigerator, have at least three, so that each in turn may be thoroughly well dried in the sun before being again employed. Even in a tiny apartment this is possible by watching the course of the sun. The odors from sodden wood quickly affect the food, especially milk and butter and uncooked meat.

The Window Seat.

A great improvement upon the window seat, as commonly constructed, is to have it built with shelves to be concealed from view by a drop curtain. This method permits one to get directly at the article wanted instead of having to take out the entire contents.

Galvanized iron tubs can be cleaned by scrubbing with hot vinegar and soda, allowing the mixture to remain on for a time; then wash in hot, strong soapsuds and wipe dry.

Save all old zinc, and when chimneys are filled with soot put a quantity on the fire. It will carry all soot out of stovepipes and clean the chimneys.

Alcohol rubbed into a carpet will effectually remove a varnish stain. This should be done after the carpet has been taken up and shaken.

The economical and well groomed girl will cultivate the acquaintance of boot trees.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation —Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more pone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very bilious habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 69 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kinloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Out the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Bilious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieve the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

THE CRIME OF THE CENTURY

BY RODRIGUES OTTOLENGUI,

On the following morning, precisely at the hour appointed, Mr. Barnes was announced and ushered in.

"Ah! Good morning, Mr. Barnes," said Mr. Mitchel. "I hope you have not overworked yourself on this case of yours. Feeling well this morning?"

"Quite well, I thank you," was the rejoinder. "Why do you ask?"

"Oh, I did not know but that you had been up all night watching somebody. Mr. Barnes, I have often admired the patience of detectives when I have read of one of them sitting all night watching a doorway through which he had seen a criminal pass. The fact that the criminal seldom comes out again does not seem to deter him at all. He watches on and hopes for the best. Some day a criminal may come back and be caught. Who knows? That sort of thing always makes me think of our cat. Remus is his name, and he is truly a wonderful fellow in many ways, only he has that inevitable failing of his kind—he must watch something. I suppose he feels it a sort of duty in repayment for his food and lodging. The first night on which he came to us he caught a mouse, and while he was playing with it the little creature escaped and ran into my wife's slipper, from which hiding place Master Remus soon dislodged him. But do you know whenever that cat sees that slipper lying about he sits down and watches it! It is really very amusing. Come up some night when my wife is at home, and I will have Remus go through his performance for you. It might prove a useful object lesson."

"I have listened patiently to your chaffing, Mr. Mitchel," said Mr. Barnes, with becoming dignity, "and I should be pleased to have you tell me why you have spoken thus. What have I done to deserve it?"

"You had me spied upon," answered Mr. Mitchel sharply.

"You are mistaken," said Mr. Barnes quietly.

"Do you mean to deny that one of your men followed me about yesterday?"

"No, but it was not at my instigation."

"Then why was it done?"

"He knew you, and, seeing you in the company of one of the shrewdest bunko men in town, he thought it best to keep you both in sight."

"Dear me! So your man thought that Leroy Mitchel is not capable of protecting himself in New York city! We will let that pass then. But now tell me why you followed me personally last night."

"How do you know that I did?"

"That is not answering my question."

"Well, Mr. Mitchel, while I certainly think you capable of taking care of yourself, from what my man told me I concluded that you meant to accompany Slippery Sam on last night's excursion. Not having the same confidence in that person which you seemed to have, I thought that as your friend it was my duty to be on hand in case of trouble. But I was not spying upon you."

"So you even went so far as to disguise yourself as a waiter and serve beer to a lot of crooks, just to be near me? I am truly indebted to you. But I do not admire this masquerading. It is too theatrical. It savors too much of the dime novel detective. And I suppose, of course, you had to bribe one of the regular waiters, who allowed you to take his place, eh?"

"Not exactly," said Mr. Barnes hesitatingly, somewhat abashed by the criticism upon his methods; "but, Mr. Mitchel, we cannot always choose. I have known of the uses to which this boat has been put all summer, and I realized that it would be wise and might become of extreme importance to me to have it in my power to be on board at any time. I therefore arranged matters with the head waiter and have played waiter on that boat so often that now my presence attracts no suspicion."

"That is just the conceit common to all of your profession. Your disguises are never penetrated. You are like the ostrich with his head in the sand, invisible—in your own mind. Now, the fact is your identity was very well known on the boat last night."

"Indeed! How do you know that?"

"The lecturer of the evening was talking to me about you. He considers you rather clever, but expressed his surprise that you should stoop to such antiquated methods as the employment of spies. He says that if he were in your place he would use his brains instead."

"Then he would accomplish little, for he has no brains." Mr. Barnes spoke angrily, for he had begun to lose patience. He thought that Mr. Mitchel went too far in his adverse criticisms, and in this perhaps he was right. But the truth was Mr. Mitchel was excessively annoyed, not so much because a spy had followed him, but because for the first time in his experience he had not himself discovered the fact. He had therefore given vent to his feelings by resorting to satire.

Mr. Mitchel had decided that Preacher Jim was possessed of quite a superior quality of brains, and consequently he was attracted by Mr. Barnes' words, well knowing that they were not idly spoken.

"What do you mean by that?" said he.

"The man is a monomaniac," Mr. Barnes replied.

"On what subject?"

"Oh, on the subject of last night's lecture! I know his history very well, having observed him for many years. One of his delusions is that he is himself a great criminal. If you could get him to talk with you, he would undoubtedly lead you to suppose that he has committed many crimes and that through his marvelous skill he has not only escaped arrest, but has even avoided suspicion."

"But is not this true?"

"True as to his keeping out of the clutches of the law, but that has not required any skill. He has committed no crimes since he left the reformatory, and he entered that place when a child. The man is not sound here," concluded Mr. Barnes, tapping his forehead significantly.

"He does not impress me as being unsound mentally," said Mr. Mitchel doubtingly.

"Very likely not at a single interview. Perhaps indeed you may even have concluded that he is endowed with unusual intelligence. But suppose that you were to meet him again and that his conversation should be substantially the same and that at many subsequent interviews with you he should always descant upon the same topics in much the same words! Such has been my experience, and I am satisfied that his apparent brilliancy is really lusterless. As I said at first, he is a monomaniac."

"Nevertheless, Mr. Barnes, he has proved the fallacy of one of your favorite theories with scarcely an effort of his feeble brain."

"What theory?"

"You argued that the theft of the will is good evidence against young Mora; that the will would be useful to him, because its suppression would double his fortune."

"I did, and my opinion remains unaltered."

"Very good. But let me give you Preacher Jim's idea—the idea, let us say, of a practical crook opposed to the theory of a skillful detective. That should be interesting, should it not? Well, then, suppose that any man—that is, any man except the son—knew of this will and first stole the document and then murdered old Mr. Mora to make it operative. Now, after this affair blows over and young Mora is in possession of the property, including nine millions bequeathed elsewhere, could not the possessor of the will draw interest, as it were, upon the capital by presenting this important paper, say quarterly, in substantiation of his claim?"

"So that is Preacher Jim's theory, is it? Well, it is precisely the sort of thing that a crazy man would work out, but which no sane man would either formulate or carry into effect. But, considering it for a moment as among the possibilities, it is easily demolished. No theory is of value which is not substantiated by collateral circumstances. Now, there are no facts to fit the supposition of a murderer from without, while the chain of evidence which encircles the son is almost complete. But, since you have been discussing this case with Preacher Jim, perhaps you spoke to him about the plaid suit of clothes. What are his views in that direction?"

"There he agrees with you—that is to say, he believes that the murderer wore them going in, as well as coming out, and that young Mora's suggestion that they were taken from his room to cover the blood stained clothes of the intruder is untenable."

"Thus, you see, he advances contradictory theories which substantiate mine as to his insanity. At one moment he thinks an outsider came in and killed the old man to get the will and use it against the son, and in the next breath he argues that the murderer wore the plaid suit, in which case the son must be the guilty party. So, you see, Mr. Mitchel, I fear you wasted your evening—that is, if you went aboard that boat with any idea of probing this mystery."

"Which, of course, I did not," interrupted Mr. Mitchel.

"Well, anyway I have to report that I did not waste my day. What would you say, Mr. Mitchel, were I to tell you that I have found that plaid suit and that it is at present in my possession?"

"I should say that you are a very clever man unless"—

"Unless what?"

"Unless some one found the things and brought them to you. That was a possibility prophesied by Preacher Jim."

"Oh, indeed! But he probably meant the regular police. I do not have important clews and evidence thrust upon me in that manner. No; I discovered these things by the system which you deprecate—by spying."

"This is becoming interesting. Give me the details."

"I am to understand, then, that you will work with me on the case? You asked for 24 hours in which to consider the matter, but you have not given me your decision. You have spent the last half hour chaffing me."

"Oh, I meant no offense! Surely you have taken none. There's my hand. Yes, I will study out this problem with you, but I stipulate for perfect liberty to proceed as I please."

"Very good. Then I will relate what has happened since we parted. You speak sneeringly of spies and make a plea for the use of brains alone. But it is only in fiction that a detective listens to the story of a crime and finds the solution without visiting the locality in which it was committed or seeing the suspected parties. In practical experience the analytical work goes hand in hand with what you call the spy system. If suspicious circumstances point to a certain man, we watch his movements, and often we very soon discover that he is innocent or guilty, especially when we can spy upon him before he knows that he is suspected. With that knowledge, of course, the criminal uses more caution. To my mind, it was almost a certainty that young Mora killed his father. I argued that he was unaware of the fact that he had been observed by the watchman until he heard it on the following day. He had changed his clothing because of the blood spattered upon him, and to offset the watchman's testimony he denied his first visit to the house."

"I follow you. Proceed."

"Think a moment. If a man can make a change of clothing away from his own home in the middle of the night, reappearing in garments which are not new and which he is known to have worn before, the logical deduction is that he must have another residence in which he is sufficiently at home to keep a part of his wardrobe there."

"Yes; you are right. Go on."

"Having removed his blood stained garments and having replaced them with a fresh suit, he would hurry home to be the one to discover and report the crime, but when he then learns that he had been seen in a suit conspicuous because of its pattern he would naturally become anxious about that suit. Fearing that it might be found in that closet at his other house, where he had hurriedly left it, he would take the first opportunity to remove it. Since the murder young Mora had been held to await the result of the inquest. Yesterday he was released, the district attorney evidently considering that to be the wisest course until he can obtain better evidence to present to the grand jury. Yesterday, therefore, the man had his first opportunity to go after the clothes. Therefore I watched him. I knew that he would be cautious, and so I was compelled to use the double spy system. I ordered another man to follow him, which he did until, by doubling on his tracks, always in itself a suspicious circumstance, young Mora had succeeded in discovering that he was being followed, whereupon my man desisted. After that I had no difficulty in continuing the chase, for, having rid himself of a spy, he was no longer suspicious. I may say, in passing, that just after this my man met you with Slippery Sam near Apollo hall, for we were in that neighborhood. Mora went straight to a house, which he entered, using a night key. Half an hour later he came out again with a bundle. This time he looked about for spies; but, seeing no one whom he mistrusted, he hurried by the nearest way to the river, where he tossed the bundle overboard. You see, it was no part of his intention to destroy the clothes. Indeed I have no doubt that he hopes that they will be found, whereupon he will claim that the assassin has thrown them into the river. But, unfortunately, such a claim will not be only useless, but it will now injure his cause, for I have some ideas about these garments which may prove puzzling to him."

"He hurried to the river, where he tossed the bundle overboard."

"I would like to hear them."

"We will come to that better, I think, when we meet Mr. Mora face to face."

"And when will that be?"

"I have taken the liberty to write him a letter asking him to call here on business of vital importance."

"And do you think that he will come?"

"Yes. He is playing a bold game. It is time he were here now, because I asked him to be with us by 10, and it is now half past. Therefore let me conclude. After recovering the bundle, which of course I did very promptly, I returned to the house, and there I discovered a pretty little woman who calls herself Mrs. Morton. Moreover, I am convinced that Morton and Mora are one and the same."

"You mean to say that he is secretly married under an assumed name?"

"So it appears at a superficial glance. What we may learn when we probe deeper remains to be seen. Ah! There is your bell. It is he."

Within a few minutes the door opened to admit a young man faultlessly dressed in a suit of black. Young Mora was a beardless youth, with only the first suspicion of a mustache, but there was that in his manner which betokened a keen intellect and sharp wits. His eyes wandered from one to the other of the two men fearlessly and with a look which rather challenged them. His chin was large and his jaws firmly set, indicating great power of self control. Withal he was a manly fellow and rather handsome, with his well chiseled features and black hair parted evenly in the middle, but brushed so that it did not seem effeminate. Mr. Mitchel eyed him narrowly, and a new interest in the case sprang up within his mind. Could this be a murderer? If so, he fancied that it would be difficult to prove. He therefore awaited the interview between Mr. Barnes and the newcomer with anticipations of enjoyment. It was to be a battle of wits, which always allured him.

"You asked me to call here, I believe, Mr. Barnes," said Mora, himself beginning the conversation.

"I did," replied the detective. "Permit me to present you to Mr. Leroy Mitchel. And now, if you please, be seated."

The two men bowed, and Mr. Mitchel handed a chair, which Mora took.

"Mr. Mora," continued Mr. Barnes, "you may wonder why I have asked you to call here. I will therefore clear up that point at once. Since your release from the hands of the police I understand that you have offered $10,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of the man who murdered your father. Am I right?"

"Quite correct."

"In that case I mean to earn the reward."

"I shall be as pleased to pay it to you as to any other man."

"Ah, no doubt! But would you be pleased at all at the arrest and conviction of the criminal—the real criminal, I mean?"

Mr. Barnes spoke slowly, with significant emphasis upon some of his words, and both he and Mr. Mitchel observed the young man closely, but detected no sign of uneasiness. His reply was terse and pertinent.

"I should. It is the only absolute proof of my own innocence which will be convincing to the world."

"Always supposing, of course, that you are innocent," said Mr. Barnes mercilessly.

"My innocence is not a supposition. It is a fact," retorted Mora quickly, but without any show of temper.

Mr. Mitchel was delighted with him, though his perfect defense against the attack of the detective was only what he had been led to expect from what he had heard of him.

"So you have insisted," resumed Mr. Barnes. "Your innocence, then, being a fact, as you call it, you have no fear of any investigation that I may make?"

"I have no fear of any truths that you might unearth. I am only afraid of your blunders."

"Well, then, in order to avoid my blundering, would you be willing to reply to a few questions which, if truthfully answered, might prevent my slipping into error?"

"If you can convince me of your good faith, I would."

"And what do you mean by my good faith?"

"I will tell you frankly. If you are trying honestly to unravel the mystery of my father's death, I will assist you to the extent of my ability. If, however, you are merely piecing together evidence upon which you hope to prove my own guilt, why, I am not such an ass as to help you."

"No, of course not. Well, then, Mr. Morton, I can assure you of my good faith. I am honestly trying to find the real murderer. Will you answer my questions?"

Mr. Barnes called him Mr. Morton to note the effect of his words, and he was satisfied, for, though the detective did not act as though aware of having used a wrong name, but continued so that one might readily have thought it a chance slip of the tongue, Mora started perceptibly, bit his lip and strained every muscle in his body in his effort to preserve his self control. All of this Mr. Barnes saw, and he considered that his maneuver had succeeded.

Mr. Mitchel, closely observing both men, also comprehended the intent of the detective as well as its effect, but he decided that Mr. Barnes had made a grave error. It seemed more than probable that Morton was an alias of the man before them, and so much had been proved by taking him by surprise. But at the same time he was now on his guard and could better prepare his defense, especially as Mr. Barnes could not play his trump cards at once. The situation, therefore, to Mr. Mitchel was increasing in interest.

"I will answer whatever you choose to ask," presently came Mora's reply.

"You have suggested, Mr. Mora, that the murderer of your father took your plaid suit of clothes and wore them over his own when leaving the house. Do you still adhere to that theory?"

"I never said that I believed it," was the answer.

"You did not claim to believe it!" exclaimed the detective, thoroughly astonished.

"No," said Mora coolly. "Let me explain. I think it was you who advanced a theory that because a man in a plaid suit was seen at our house it stood proved that I was there. To parry your attack I suggested a theory equally tenable, which agreed with my claim of innocence as well as your theory sustained your charge of guilt. But you cannot find it in the records that I said that I believed my own proposition. It was the first that occurred to me, and I utilized it. I could think of others equally good, perhaps better, for that one had a flaw in it which I was surprised to see passed unnoticed."

"Perhaps you would not mind telling me the flaw in your own proposition," said Mr. Barnes, with a slight sneer.

"With pleasure," answered Mora, ignoring the tone of sarcasm. "It is very evident. If the watchman was to be relied on when he said that he saw the plaid suit come out of the house, he must have been equally right in saying that he saw it go in. See?"

He laughed in a tantalizing manner, and Mr. Barnes was annoyed. Mr. Mitchel was startled a little to hear Mora using the identical argument advanced by Preacher Jim. Yet Mr. Barnes thought the latter insane, while here was an important point, overlooked by himself, though clear to two others.

"You said that you could advance other theories agreeing with your plea of innocence, yet explaining the fact about the suit of clothes," said Mr. Barnes, determined to press this matter. "I would like to hear one—one without a flaw this time."

"Nothing easier. Let us suppose that the murderer stole the suit before committing his crime, instead of afterward, and there you are. The watchman's story is true, and yet I am not in it, to use a slang phrase—not in the suit, I mean. What do you say to that?"

"I asked you for a theory without a flaw," replied Mr. Barnes.

"And where is the flaw in this?"

"If your clothing had been stolen, you would have complained of the loss," said the detective.

"Not if the theft occurred on the night of the murder and was therefore unknown to me at the time."

"Not good enough, Mr. Mora. No one entered that house that night but yourself and the murderer, if indeed there were two. No thief went in earlier in the evening and came out again, as he must have done to be seen going in wearing your suit."

"You are very shrewd, Mr. Detective, but you are not omniscient. You argue from the premise that the suit was in the house, whereas, as a matter of fact, it was not."

"Where, then, was it?"

"At some rooms I have down in Essex street."

The audacity of this reply made Mr. Barnes start to his feet, while Mr. Mitchel, admiring the craftiness of the move, listened with redoubled interest.

"Then you admit that you have another home!" ejaculated the detective.

"Why not, since you know it?" was the cool rejoinder.

"Ah, then you also confess that you call yourself Morton there and that you have a wife, who"—

"Not so fast, Mr. Barnes. I am not confessing any such nonsense. I had a room there because I found it convenient in my slumming trips to sleep down town occasionally; also to have a place where I could change my clothing to less expensive apparel than I usually wear. I also think it safe enough to say that there is a Mrs. Morton in the same house. I will go further and tell you that I know the lady very well and that it was she who recommended the room to me. When I engaged the place, I gave the name Morton, desiring, first, to hide my own identity, and, secondly, to account for my friendliness with the young woman. But no one in that house will tell you that I posed as the woman's husband. They believed me to be her brother-in-law. Her husband is away somewhere."

"Then there is nothing between you and this woman?"

"Nothing but friendship. She often obtained entrance for me into places where I could study the life of that section, but which would have been impenetrable to any one not known. She was useful to me in that way, and I have the kindliest feelings for her. If you find anything suspicious about that, you are welcome to make the most of it."

Mr. Barnes began to think that he had made a mistake in mentioning the name Morton. Mr. Mitchel knew it. This explanation, however improbable, was one that it would be difficult to disprove, especially as Mora could readily warn his associates in the house and coach them to support his story. Mr. Barnes, however, did not entirely despair.

"Then it was from this house that you now think that your clothes were stolen?"

"I do not think so. I assert it."

"At last we get to something tangible. The suit was stolen from the house in Essex street. The murderer wore it to your home and after killing your father came out again in the same garb. So much we know. Now, what did he do with these blood stained garments?"

"Ah, that is for the great detective, Mr. Barnes, to discover!"

"My own idea would be that he would not destroy them," said the detective, appearing not to notice the other's sneering tones. "Shall I tell you why?"

"By all means."

"Because his wearing them at all must have been a part of his scheme. He wished others to think that you committed the deed. He would therefore prefer to have the things found."

"That is very probable."

"One good place to throw anything which one wishes to have found is in the river. Therefore I fancy that the murderer might have thrown the suit into the river. What do you think?"

Mora did not quail before this very significant speech. On the contrary, with great coolness, he said:

"I think that you are mistaken."

"And why do you think I am mistaken?" said Mr. Barnes.

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly—in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

Atfer The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidly as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices.

Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public.

Then, Too,

You have the value of cur decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen for, we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

RUSSIA S PEACE TERMS.

THEY MAKE RATHER PATHETIC READING, JUST AT PRESENT.

It is instructive as well as pathetic to recall the announcement made two months ago by the Moskovskaia Viedomosti of the terms which Russia will demand when the war is over and peace is being arranged. Four clauses of the programme were recently published by the New York Sun, and they provide that:

1. Corea should for once and all be annexed to Russia, the more because it has already twice asked for annexation and protection of Russia, while its government is now allied with the enemies of Russia. The Government and the people, having suffered so much, look to Russia. Moreover, the territory of Corea enters like a wedge into the Russian possessions.

2. The Island of Kiu-Siu should be occupied and fortified as an advanced post of the new Russian coast, which is extensive and for the most part without defence.

3. Formosa should be given back to its legitimate proprietor, China, and Russia should retain on it only a port convenient for a coaling station and a fortified shelter for its fleet.

4. Japan should have imposed on it such a war indemnity, comprising in it her warships, that for decades this troublesome neighbor might be deprived of all thoughts of military adventure. It is of no consequence that Japan has not much money; Russia can take from it its State bonds. Let the Japanese pay for at least half a century and be reminded of the war which they, and not Russia, began.

The Pity of It.

(Montreal Star.)

The Times' correspondent at Tokio writes that since the Yalu battle the Japanese officers have begun to speak with marked respect of the qualities of the Russian soldier. They pay a high tribute to his stubborn courage in desperate situations. The fierce valour he displays as he rushes with head erect over the dead bodies of his comrades, in complete blindness to danger, makes it seem pitiable to destroy them. Pitiable it truly is. These men have homes, they have parents, wives, children. They perish because men cannot in the twentieth century of the Christian era, find any way of agreeing about the partition of the earth's surface till they have first tried the arbitrament of the sword, or at least thrown the sword into the scale. That even the Japanese should be moved to pity ought to cause deep heart searching to the professedly Christian nations.

Died at Little Falls.

Word has been received of the death at Little Falls, N.Y., of Mrs. (Dr.) D. H. Rowe which took place on July 19. Mrs. Rowe was formerly Miss Lydia Chase and was born in Ameliasburg where her father, the late D. D. Chase, resided before removing to Flint Michigan. She will be remembered as a bright and attractive young lady. Her husband, Dr. Rowe, who is also a Prince Edward boy, has a large practice at Little Falls. Mrs. Rowe was about 38 years of age and leaves a family of two boys.

WITH CRICK IN THE BACK

You are up against a whole lot of trouble unless you have a strong remedy like Nerviline to settle pain and dislodge stiffness from the muscles and joints. Just rub Nerviline on the painful spot—not much rubbing, because Nerviline has more power than ordinary remedies. You won't suffer long after Nerviline is applied, for it relieves almost instantly. Mr. Philip Adams, of Oakland, says, "If I hadn't used Nerviline I guess my back would be stiff yet. A few applications of Nerviline took out all the soreness and stiffness. I can recommend Nerviline for any kind of muscular pain, also for rheumatism. Price 25c.

Militiamen's Rights as Citizens

(Canadian Military Gazette.)

The Gazette is reminded by one of its readers, who commends its article on the right of militiamen to speak or write on militia questions, of the fact that this was settled many years ago when Sir Patrick Macdougal was Adjutant-General of Canada. Sir Mackenzie Bowell was a militia officer, an editor of a paper in Belleville, and member of Parliament. On the platform, in his newspaper and in the House of Commons he criticised Sir Patrick Macdougal's administration, and Sir Patrick issued very peremptory orders that the young officer must refrain from doing so. Mackenzie Bowell refused to obey, contending that he was a citizen although he was a militiaman, and being a citizen he had a right to criticise and express his opinions about the policy of his superiors. As a soldier as well as a citizen it was more than a right, it was his duty to expose weaknesses, which the Government or the senior officers might like to hide. He agreed that his seniors would be justified in compelling him to obey any commands they might issue during actual training, or on active service, or on parade in uniform. The matter was referred to the Home Government, and they decided against the Adjutant-General, who resigned his command.

It is a coincidence that many years after Sir Patrick Macdougal came to this country and was for a time administrator of the Government, and as the administrator one of his advisers was Mackenzie Bowell.

PILL POINTS

Dr. Agnew's Liver Pills are a purely Vegetable Compound. A scientifically studied Formula. The after-effects of the medicine have been given as much consideration as the immediate results.

Not so with many of the Ancient Formulus—Painful Purgers and no healing powers. Think of these points.

If you must use medicine, look for the most pleasant, safest and surest to take. Dr. Agnew's Liver Pills are supreme in cases of Sick Headache, Bilousness, Sallow Skin, Constipation, etc. 40 doses, 10 cents; 100 doses, 25 cents. 61

FOR WARM DAYS.

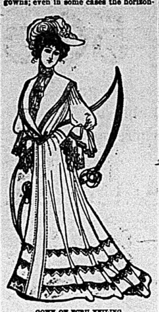
Pretty Embroidered Linen Dresses. The New Laces and Insertions.

Small hats tilted over the face, with elaborate trimmings on the band behind, are among the old millinery shapes which are being revived.

Pretty linen dresses embroidered in colors are worn with wide belts to correspond. These belts are made of leather, finely stitched and boned in the back to keep them up. Ecru linen embroidered in white and white linen inlet with lace and fine embroideries are particularly smart.

A shade of orange known as cavalry is the latest. It is particularly effective when used in relieving gray, white or tan costumes.

Points and scallops appear on many gowns; even in some cases the horizontal trimmings have scalloped or pointed edges. Ruffles are arranged in scallops, and new laces and embroidery insertions have waved edges.



GOWN OF ECRU VEILING.

The all white chip hat trimmed with coq feathers cannot be replaced in the millinery collection of the smart woman unless it be superseded by the flat French sailor hat, tilted in the back and trimmed with a great bunch of white roses on the crown and a circle of green leaves.

Mohair in white and delicate colors is a favorite material for toilets of every description of dressiness.

The illustration shows a gown of ecru veiling with undersleeves of ecru and white lace and a vest of the same. The hat is of ecru straw with a pale blue feather. JUDIC CHOLLET.

COTTON DRESSES.

Dainty Embroidered Linens Used For Smart Suits—Fashionable Tints.

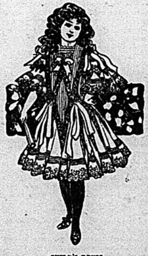
Clusters of red roses are the fashionable decoration for white lace and straw hats.

White linen buttons embroidered in shaded silk or thread to match the color which is introduced to trim the gown are very pretty as well as useful. They can be made at home by using the plain covered linen buttons and some wash embroidery silk.

Wedgwood buttons with raised figures on blue ground are very pretty to trim blue veiling gowns. Pearl buttons of all the popular shades, grass green, violet and ox blood are quite the thing for wash gowns.

The dip yoke is returning owing to the increased fullness in skirts, which seems to demand it. The fullness unconfined on the hips is apt to make a figure look excessively dumpy.

The simple fashion of a two flounced skirt is one to be recommended to the amateur dressmaker. The upper flounce is shirred a little around the hips, or else it can be laid in fine tucks.



CHILD'S DRESS.

Spotted linens are greatly in vogue and also a material which resembles pongee and has the advantage of washing, which pongee never does well. Every shade of blue appears in linen from pale hydrangea blue to dark blue relieved with white. Grass greens also play an important part in the season's cotton gowns.

Very effective are the large low crowned hats of plain taffeta draped with embroidered or painted mousseline, the brim being lined with tiny frills of valenciennes lace.

The illustration shows a child's dress of tucked batiste trimmed with insertion run through with blue ribbon.

MAY BE A CIVIL WAR IN AUSTRALIA.

VISITOR FROM SOUTHERN COLONY SEES GREAT DANGER AHEAD.

(Vancouver World)

"Unless I read the trend of events incorrectly, the Commonwealth of Australia will before very long be in the throes of a small civil war. The states are not getting along well together, and gradually throughout the more outlying portions a feeling of unrest and resentment against the extremists of the big cities is taking firm root and gradually spreading. Fanatical labor legislation, experimenting with wild theories has been the curse of Australia—a curse greater than that of the periodical droughts So strong is the sentiment against those that are responsible for the present grave situation of affairs that a serious collision is bound to come in time. The sensible element of the country has stood things just about as long as it can, and is getting sick and tired of the official corruption and legislative insanity that are together the curses of Australia."

So spoke Mr. A. J. Cutlack, one time proprietor of a press advertising agency in Brisbane. He is in Vancouver, having come to Canada as the representative of a score of families who wish to leave the southern colony for a home in a more settled country.

"No one here can imagine the length to which the labor men have gone in Australia," went on Mr. Cutlack. "For instance, Mr. Edwards, M.P., during the drought was walking in front of his home one day when a man approached and begged help, saying that he was in distress. Mr. Edwards said he had no work for any one, as his regular employees looked after everything. "But you must help me," said the man, "I am actually suffering."

"'All right,' replied the M.P., 'we can't let you starve. Level this bit of ground and I'll give you five shillings a day and your dinner.'

"'No, sir, I won't work for less than union wages,' said the 'unfortunate' man, indignantly.

"'Very well,' was the M.P.'s answer. 'There is the gate. Go!'

"And he went.

"In Brisbane, as in all the large cities, industrial institutions of every description are under Government control. Out of them have grown a whole harvest of scandal, the magnitude of which is incalculable. In one institution, it was an actual fact, recently that more men were employed than were sufficient to do all the work that could be found. Unionists would go to their labor representatives and say that they wanted a position. The M.P. would send a note to the Minister of Labor, stating that he required employment for his friend. The Minister of Labor would send orders to a foreman in the factory to take on the applicant.

"In one particular case the following incident occurred: A man was 'employed' through the channels outlined above. He went to the foreman to be put to work. The foreman scratched his head.

"'But I have nothing I can give you.'

"The 'employee' shrugged his shoulders.

"'Well,' went on the foreman, after a short brown study, 'I suppose we must find something. Here,' driving a nail in the floor and a second one some distance away, 'walk up and down between these nails and when you get tired, sit down beside one of them. But under no circumstances go away from the line.'

"Then the foreman went away and left the laborer at his toil.

"Such things as these are making the people so disgusted that an outbreak is bound to come. How Australia will come out of it cannot be foreseen."

LAWYER AND WIFE HURT.

IN AUTO CRASH AT SANBORN, N.Y., ON WEDNESDAY.

Buffalo, July 28.—Attorney George P. Schultz, of Buffalo, was seriously injured in an automobile accident at Sanborn, N.Y., yesterday. A dog ran in front of his machine, causing the auto to overturn completely. Mrs. A. L. Pearce, of Sanborn, who was also in the car at the time, was badly hurt.

Miss Pearl Cope, of this city, another occupant, escaped with a few bruises. Mr. Schultz was injured internally and cut about the body and arms.

It supplies more nourishment than children can get in any other way and soon establishes a reserve of force and energy. Give your children Ferrozone and watch them grow strong. Price 50c per box.

PUSH THE TRENT CANAL.

NO FRESH CONTRACTS LET BY PRESENT ADMINISTRATION

The Orillia Packet has the following timely and sensible remark on the completion of the Trent Canal:—

If the Government is in earnest in its professed desire to have the Trent Valley Canal pushed to an early completion why does it not let the contracts for the section between here and the Georgian Bay? Both ends of the canal must be opened before it can serve the purpose for which it is being built but even to have the northern end open would greatly increase its local usefulness between here and Hastings. While waiting to make up their minds between the Trenton and Port Hope routes, the Government can prove their sincerity by letting the contracts for the work along the Severn, which is estimated to cost only a million and a half. Delay is only likely to involve them in another time-wasting dispute as to routes, which it is in the interests of the country to avoid by adopting the route chosen by the engineers, without regard to political considerations. As the record stands at present not a contract has been let on the canal since the Liberals came into power in 1896. This hardly bears out the Government's claim that they are pushing work on the canals with much more energy than their predecessors.

FRUIT CROP WILL BE SMALL.

APPLES, PEACHES, PEARS AND PLUMS WILL BE SCARCE IN ONTARIO THIS YEAR.

Toronto, July 28.—Detailed reports received by Mr. H. B. Cowan, secretary of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association, confirm the pessimistic reports that have been made respecting the outlook for early fruit, and also indicate that the more staple crop of the apple orchards will this year fall considerably short of the average. This is so of the northern districts, more especially where in some places orchards of hardy winter apple trees were destroyed by the severe frosts and heavy snow of the past year. Where the trees escaped with their lives they appear to have been so robbed of vitality that they are not in a condition to bear fruit this year, and the result in some sections is a failure of the whole crop.

Peaches, pears and plums are away off. Some experts go so far as to state that the peach crop of the province will not be more than one-tenth of what it was last year.

Licenses Granted and Refused.

The Board of License Commissioners of North Hastings met at Springbrook on Friday afternoon to consider the extension of shop licenses. At the May meeting only a permit for three months was given shops pending the investigation of complaints in regard to some of them. As a result the Board have decided to give no further extension to Mr. English, of Stirling. Licenses were granted to Flynn, of Bancroft, and Anderson, of Marmora. A request came from Madoc for an adjournment before Madoc license was granted in order to bring certain objections before the Board.

Jailed for Threatening.

A man named Peter Blakeley was yesterday brought to the county jail to serve a sentence of 20 days. He belongs to Trenton and was convicted on a charge of endeavoring to induce a hotel-keeper to supply him with liquor during prohibited hours. It is also alleged that Blakeley threatened to inform upon the hotel-keeper if the liquor was not produced. The prisoner is a comparatively young man, only 30 years of age, but his record is not good, as he had previously done time.

New Military Feature.

As a regular feature of the programme before the grand stand, both afternoon and evening, at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, August 29th, to Sept. 10th, will be presented an Artillery Musical Drive. For the first time outside of England this exhibition will be given with six instead of four guns and with six horses to each gun. The music will be furnished by the famous Black Watch Band, the musical feature of this year's Exhibition, and which visits Canada for this event by the gracious permission of His Majesty King Edward VII. and the Commanding Officers of the 42nd Royal Highlanders.

ANOTHER BIG FIRE IN TORONTO THIS MORNING.

EBY, BLAIN & CO. SUFFER LOSS OF FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS.

(Special to The Intelligencer.)

Toronto, July 29.—A serious fire started this morning about 10.30 in the four story brick building, corner of Front and Scott streets, owned and occupied by Eby, Blain & Co., wholesale grocers. It was first noticed about the tackle of the elevator on the top floor and is supposed to have been caused by friction. The fire brigade were slow in responding but by hard work they had the flames under control within an hour.

The damage by fire was confined to the top floor and roof, but tons of water poured down through the other floors into the basement.

The total loss probably will reach $50,000. Fully covered by insurance.

PROGRESS OF THE CAMPAIGN

(The Globe.)

The most significant bit of news from Manchuria this morning is that the war correspondents with the Russian army have been ordered back to Harbin. The Russians, apparently, do not place much trust in Haicheng, Liaoyang and Mukden as means of stopping the Japanese advance, which is now being continued. Tatchekiao was left in flames on Monday by its former occupants, and Oku pushed on past the burning town in pursuit of the retiring foe. As Haicheng is less than twenty-five miles north of Tatchekiao, and as the Japanese are repairing the railway as they advance along it and forwarding their heavy baggage by rail, the various divisions should be in position around Haicheng by Saturday at the latest. Haicheng is a walled city taken by the Japanese during the war with China in 1894-95. It lies in the centre of a sandy plain. The Haicheng River and a branch thereof surround it on three sides. To the east are sever high hills, on which the Japanese formerly planted artillery and built trenches. Haicheng is incapable of defence against modern artillery and would be nothing better than a death trap to any army occupying it. The Russians, if they make a stand there at all, will merely fight a rearguard action, while their war material is going through to Liaoyang, forty miles farther up the line. As at Mukden and elsewhere, the railway at Haicheng does not run through the walled city, but passes a little to the westward. No such defences have been constructed at Haicheng as at Tatchekiao, where the Japanese say nine miles of trenches and field works had been dug out.

At sea the Vladivostok fleet still menaces Japanese shipping and is in a position to replenish its coal supply without trouble, if we are to believe the New York story that the ships in Skrydloff's command have been fitted up with cables that enable them to take supplies from a collier at sea.

The tension between Great Britain and Russia over the seizure of British ships is lessening, and danger of war is not so great as it was a few days ago. The Russian Government states that if inquiry proves that the Knight Commander was sunk for an insufficient reason, compensation and apology will both be forthcoming.

MONTREAL'S FAREWELL.

Soldiers Seized General Dundonald and Carried Him on High on Their Shoulders—Citizens' Ovation.

Montreal, July 29.—The reception tendered here last evening in honor of the departing general was of tremendous proportions. At 8.30 the Earl of Dundonald reviewed one section of the corps in the rotunda of the Windsor, and was afterwards greeted by thousands, both within and outside the Windsor.

Peter Lyall, president of the Caledonia Society, presided, and read an adddress. Secretary Lieut.-Col. Stevenson delivered a spirited speech in which he said that the name of Dundonald would be revered in Canada after those who had dismissed him had sunk into oblivion. The colonel denounced those who had laid their inexperienced hands on the militia of Canada.

Dundonald's Reply.

Then the general rose to speak. He was cheered again and again. He made a very brief speech, saying that in leaving Canada he left more friends than he had ever thought possible to have. His departure had been caused by circumstances he could not control, and, he might add, over which the people present had no control.

Thousands of men came to the platform and shook hands with the general. In the street the most inspiring scenes were witnessed. Bands played "Rule Britannia" and soldiers seized Lord Dundonald, raised him to their shoulders and carried him around the square while the crowd cheered with delight.

The sharp downpour of rain prevented the procession from assuming large proportions, but the militiamen took the horses from the general's carriage and dragged the hero to the Place Viger Station.

At the station another mighty throng gave the general a send-off and one of the most popular demonstrations ever witnessed in Montreal was brought to a close.

Would Have Been Recalled.

London, July 29.—(C.A.P.)—Premier Balfour, replying to Sir Howard Vincent, said that before the incident ending with the recall of Lord Dundonald he was intended for a command under the new army scheme and would shortly have been recalled for that purpose. This appointment would now be subject to the finding of the Army Council upon the merits of the Canadian affair.

Found Dead in Swamp.

Palmerston, July 29.—About three o'clock Saturday, 16th inst., David Gibson, a veteran of the Crimea, left his boarding house here and did not return. Last night, William Lawrence was looking for his cow in a swamp half a mile north of the town, when he found the body in a partly decomposed condition. Mr. Gibson was 72 years of age, said to be an Irishman, and to have a brother resident in Toronto by the name of John.

Nation Without a Language.

Among the people of the world the Swiss are alone in having no language they can call their own. According to a recent visitor to the little country about three-fourths of the people of Switzerland speak German, while the remainder divide four other languages among them—mainly French and Italian—the languages varying, as a rule, according to the proximity of the people to each country whose tongue they speak. Public documents and notices are printed in both French and German. In the Swiss national parliament the members make their speeches either in French or German, for nearly all the members understand both languages. The orders of the president are translated by an official ingerpreter and furnished to the newspapers in both languages.

Brockville, July 28.—Offerings to-day on the Brockville Cheese Board were 695 white and 1200 colored; 1150 boxes were sold on the board at 7⅝c.

Kingston, July 28.—The regular meeting of the Frontenac Cheese Board was held this afternoon. Inspector G. H. Robinson was present and gave an instructive address to the members. He commented on the quality of the cheese being shipped to Montreal and said that the cause of any inferiority in the finished article could be traced back to the quality of the milk originally. The boardings were 685 colored and 740 white. Nearly all the holdings were cleaned out at 7½c.

Barrie, July 28.—Barrie cheese board met to-day, when eight factories boarded 695 cheese; market dull; bidding slow; D. Gunn, Toronto, bought 615 at 7⅝c to 7½c, C. Moore, Orillia, got 75 at 7½c; C. A. Perkins, Barrie, 125 at 7½c; Brown & Co., Barrie, 80 at 7⅝c. All the cheese sold.

Tweed, July 28.—There were 680 cheese boarded; all sold at 7⅝c. Magrath and Brintnell buyers.

Vankleek Hill, Ont., July 28.—There were 1121 white and 114 colored cheese boarded here to-night. Fraser starter the bidding at 7¼c, McRae finally raised bid to 7½c, and, after several calls and no sales, as the patrons would not sell at figure offered, all the buyers present seemed to be anxious to get the cheese at 7½c, so privilege was given to sell on the street.

Winchester, Ont., July 28.—The regular meeting of the cheese board was held here to-night; 1829 cheese were registered, of which 1454 were white and balance colored. Price bid for white cheese 7⅝c, and for colored 8c; 34 boxes of colored cheese sold at 8c on board.

SLAIN BY AN ASSASSIN

Russian Minister Plehve Victim of Widespread Plot.

M. Plehve's Head Was Torn Off—Murderer, a Finn, Named Legio, Though Badly Hurt By the Fatal Bomb, Was Arrested in Attempting to Escape—Bomb's Force Was Almost Satanically Terrific—Incidental Damage From Explosion.

St. Petersburg, July 29.—M. Von Plehve, Minister of the Interior, was assassinated at 9.30 o'clock yesterday morning by means of a bomb thrown at his carriage, while he was driving to the Baltic Station to take a train for the Palace at Peterhof, where he was to make his weekly report to the Emperor.

The assassination is believed to be the outcome of a widespread plot, the existence of which has been suspected for several days. Numerous arrests have already been made, including that of the assassin, a young man who is believed to be a Finn named Legio, and who is now in a hospital, severely and perhaps fatally injured by the explosion of his own bomb.

M. VON PLEHVE.
(Russian Minister of Interior.)

An accomplice of Legio, also apparently a Finn, but whose name is unknown, has been arrested. He had in his possession a bomb, which he tried to throw, but he was overpowered by the police just in time to prevent great loss of life. The assassin stood on the sidewalk just as Minister Von Plehve's carriage was about to cross the canal bridge, near the station. The Minister was escorted by a number of detectives on bicycles, and one of them jostled the assassin, who then rushed into the road and threw the bomb after the carriage.

Minister Killed Outright.

The missile struck the hind wheel and exploded with fearful force, killing or wounding over a score of persons. Minister Von Plehve and his coachman were killed outright and an officer of the guard was fatally injured.

One of the cyclist detectives arrested the assassin, who endeavored to escape, though wounded by splinters in the face, arm and abdomen. He made no attempt at resistence, however, when seized by the detective and confessed his crime, but refused to give his name.

The police immediately after the explosion arrested a suspicious individual who took refuge in a hotel opposite the scene of the tragedy. He carried a bomb similar to that thrown by Legio. As soon as the police saw the bomb they scattered, but an employe of the hotel rushed up behind the accomplice and pinned his arms. The explosive is believed to have been composed of pyrovolin, as it gave off little smoke.

Bomb's Terrific Force.

The force of the explosion was so terrific that it not only broke every window within a radius of half a mile, but reduced the heavy paving stones to powder, heaved up the pavement and flung a heavy piece of the iron work of the carriage across the canal, severing the thick mast of a barge, which fell, stunning the captain of the barge. Everybody in the street was knocked down, and more or less bruised.

When the officers of the law, headed by Minister of Justice Muravieff, had terminated the necessary formalities by drawing up a written report of the crime, the mangled remains of the Minister of the Interior were conveyed to a humble chapel adjoining the station, the windows of which miraculously escaped destruction.

Reported to the Czar.

The Minister of Justice, M. Muravieff, went to the Peterhof Palace yesterday afternoon to report the assassination of Minister Von Plehve to Emperor Nicholas. His Majesty did not leave the palace during the entire day, although he had arranged to go to Oranienbaum (19 miles from St. Petersburg), to attend the consecration of the new harbor.

The Empress has not been informed of the tragedy in view of the hourly expectation of the birth of an heir to the throne.

His Head Torn Off.

The bomb was thrown from a window of the Warsaw Hotel. Von Plehve's head was torn off, the lower portion was completely shattered, but the upper part was untouched. There were only two conspirators, one of whom threw the bomb from the window and then bolted. When captured, another bomb is said to have been found in his pocket.

Next to the Emperor.

Von Plehve's assassination was officially announced at about 1 o'clock and was followed immediately by the issuance of extra editions of the papers. Although they contained only four lines referring to the tragedy, the newsboys were fairly mobbed by the crowds in the streets, so eager were all for details of the crime. Intense excitement reigned everywhere. Only the assassination of the Emperor could have created more of a sensation, as next to His Majesty himself, Von Plehve was regarded as the most powerful personality in the Russian Government.

Who Assassinated Man Was.

Von Plehve was appointed Minister of the Interior April 18, 1902, succeeding M. Sipiaguine, who was assassinated April 16, 1902, by a student named Balschaneff. He had formerly been Director of the Department of Police. Plehve conducted the prosecution of the assassins of Alexander II. in 1881, and from that time on his power increased until it became only second in importance to that of the Emperor. Several plots to assassinate him have, according to reports, been discovered during the past two years.

After Others Too.

As Minister of Justice Muravieff was driving to the Peterhof Palace yesterday afternoon to report to Emperor Nicholas the assination of Minister of the Interior Von Plehve stones were thrown at him and his carriage windows broken. The identity of the minister's assailants has not yet been discovered.

Plehve Regarded With Abhorrence.

Former United States Ambassador to Germany Andrew D. White was seen by a Post-Standard reporter just before he left for Ithaca yesterday afternoon. When asked if he had the acquaintance of Mr. Plehve, Russian Minister of the Interior, Mr. White answered that he knew him well. Mr. White said:

"I think both Gen. Bachellor and myself found Mr. Plehve very agreeable, and apparently, as far as his Government allowed, reasonable. I also met him socially at various times and found him agreeable and interesting. I was, therefore, greatly surprised at learning when he was promoted to the first place, that his whole character seemed to change.

Helped to Kill Jews.

"His part in the aerrible massacre and plunder of the Jews, men, women and children, at Kishineff, caused him to be regarded with abhorrence by the whole world. Even more frightful has been his connection with the destruction of the liberties of Finland. In my mind that is the most wicked thing in the history of the last two centuries. There is no time to go into it here further than to say that it has turned the best, the most civilized, the most educated and most loyal province in the Empire into a land in which the opposite of all these characteristics is more highly developed than in any other part of the Empire. Other things done by him were also calculated to bring most bitter hatred against him.

Doesn't Wonder at It.

"I do not wonder at his assassination, although I deeply lament it. Among other reasons for this regret, it will doubtless be made a pretext for new oppression and new cruelties toward the Jewish population and toward the Findlanders. Assassination always defeats its purpose, and this will be, I fear, no exception to the rule."

"UTTERLY SHAMELESS."

R. L. Borden's Scathing Denunciation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Ottawa, July 29.—The House did not go into supply yesterday morning, because Mr. Bennett brought up the case of J. B. Jackson of Ingersoll, appointed commercial agent at Leeds, Eng. He claimed Jackson had been a useful man to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the matter of election conventions, and he went into Jackson's connection with the case to unseat Mr. Sutherland, the Conservative member for South Oxford in the Ontario House.

Utterly Shameless.

Mr. R. L. Borden concluded a magnificent speech as follows:

"I believe, sir, that there never was in the public history of this country, or of any other country, so far as I am aware, has there been a more damnable doctrine more unblushingly avowed. (Cheers.) I do not understand how a gentleman who has in the past preached such doctrines with regard to the purity of public life, could ever have found it in his heart to stand up in this House of Commons and to make the avowal which the Minister of Trade and Commerce has made to-day. It was bold; it was more than bold; it was unblushing; it was audacious, and if I were not transgressing Parliamentary decorum I would say that it was utterly shameless. That this man so stigmatized by Mr. Justice Street should be promoted in the public life of Canada, and that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, speaking for the Government, should not be ashamed to stand up and justify him, is an unheard of degradation of our public life. We are indebted to the hon. member (B. Bennett) for bringing the matter to the attention of the House, and in my opinion it deserves grave consideration from the House and the country."

Mr. Borden concluded by offering the following motion: "In making appointments to public offices, and particularly those of a representative nature, party services should not alone be considered, but selections should be made with regard to capacity and to personal character."

The House then divided and the motion was defeated by 70 nays and 43 yeas, a Government majority of 27. Mr. Erb (Liberal), South Perth, voted with the Opposition, and Mr. Puttee of Winnipeg, with the Government.

Capt. Graham to Resign.

London, July 29.—(C.A.P.)—Capt. Graham, lately aide-de-camp to Lord Minto, is resigning his commission in the Coldstream Guards.

PORT ARTHUR ATTACKED

General Movement Against Russian Stronghold Has Begun.

Unconfirmed Report That Gen. Kuropatkin Had Been Wounded Originated at Tientsin—Generally Believed at St. Petersburg That Startling Developments in the Far East Are Imminent—Three Large Warships Leave Port Arthur.

London, July 29.—Special despatches from Shanghai and Yokohama report that a general attack upon Port Arthur has begun. A report that General Kuropatkin is wounded seems to have originated at Tientsin, but it is not confirmed.

Something Startling Due.

St. Petersburg, July 29.—A telegram received from Gen. Kuropatkin yesterday announced that the position at the front had not changed. It is generally believed here that startling developments are imminent. All the war correspondents have been ordered to Harbin.

Burned Towns.

Tokio, July 29.—The Russians abandoned Tatchekiao at noon on Monday, July 25, retiring before the advancing army under Gen. Oku. They applied the torch to Tatchekiao and the surrounding towns, and when the Japanese arrived they found the flames were still raging. The Japanese pursuit extended beyond Tatchekiao, and the Japanese left wing occupied Yinkow. The position held by the Russians last Sunday south of Tatchekiao consisted of nine miles of trenches and fortifications.

Lives to Be Saved.

Newchwang, July 29.—Takayama, the Japanese Administrator of Newchwang, has arrived here, and has issued notification to the population that Newchwang and Yinkow are now under Japanese control and that lives and property will be protected.

Southwest of Yokohama.

Tokio, July 29.—The Vladivostock squadron was reported off the Province of Awa yesterday. Awa is about 200 miles southwest of Yokohama, and is at the eastern entrance of the Inland Sea.

Warships Leave Port.

Che Foo, July 29.—Chinese refugees, who left Port Arthur thirty-six hours ago, say that three large warships have left that port. The Chinese cannot give the names or the type of the vessels. It is impossible to confirm this story from foreigners.

JAPS VICTORS IN CANADA.

Clash Between 40 Jap Fishermen and 58 Russian Miners in B.C.

Vancouver, B.C., July 29.—A battle took place between 40 Japanese fishermen and 58 Russian miners at Douglas City, Douglas Island, opposite Junoau, last Saturday night. News of the trouble was brought down from the north by the steamer Danube yesterday. A number of shots were exchanged, then the opposing forces stoned each other and finally engaged in a hand-to-hand fight. No one was killed, but a number are said to have been seriously injured. The Japanese put the Russians to flight, although the Russians outnumbered the victors.

Henry Kribs Dead.

Hespeler, July 29.—The death occurred yesterday afternoon of Henry Kribs, chief engineer of the Forbes Woollen Mills, who was badly scalded by live steam on Monday through the bursting of an elbow in the steam pipe that supplies the factory engine. The steam fairly cooked a portion of the deceased's left leg, which caused gangrene to set in, which resulted in death. Deceased, who was a brother to the late Lewis Kribs, the well-known journalist, and William A. Kribs, M.P.P., was 49 years old. He leaves a wife and two children by adoption.

Killed at a Crossing.

Port Hope, July 29.—Charles Ashley, a farmer, living about four miles north of here, was killed at noon here yesterday by the one o'clock train from the north. He was driving into town, but when nearing one of the railway crossings was caught by the train and badly injured. He was brought to town, but died an hour afterwards.

Cruiser's Trial Speed.

London, July 29.—(C. A. P.)—The Canadian cruiser showed speed of 17 knots at her trial over the measured mile.

FOR WOMEN

Much That Every Woman Desires to Know

About Sanative Antiseptic Cleansing

And about the Care of the Skin, Scalp, Hair and Hands

Too much stress cannot be placed on the great value of Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent in the antiseptic cleansing of the mucous surfaces, and of the blood and circulating fluids, thus affording pure, sweet and economical local and constitutional treatment for weakening ulcerations, inflammations, itchings, irritations, relaxations, displacements, pains and irregularities peculiar to females. Hence the Cuticura remedies have a wonderful influence in restoring health, strength and beauty to weary women, who have been prematurely aged and invalided by these distressing ailments, as well as such sympathetic afflictions as anæmia, chlorosis, hysteria and nervousness.

Women from the very first have fully appreciated the purity and sweetness, the power to afford immediate relief, the certainty of speedy and permanent cure, the absolute safety and great economy which have made the Cuticura remedies the standard humour remedies of the civilized world.

Millions of women use Cuticura Soap, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, for preserving, purifying and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening and soothing red, rough and sore hands, for annoying irritations and ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet, bath and nursery.

Cuticura Resolvent, liquid and in the form of Chocolate Coated Pills, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap are sold throughout the world. Depots: London, 27 Charterhouse Sq.; Paris, 5 Rue de la Paix; Australia, R. Towns & Co., Sydney; Boston, 137 Columbus Ave. Potter Drug & Chemical Corp., Sole Proprietors. Send for "A Book for Women."

A Promising Camp.

One of the most promising districts in British Columbia is that lying about the thriving city of Kamloops, B.C. The unlimited resources of the Pacific Province are shown here in all variety: Grazing lands, where thousands of cattle live and grow fat on the nutritious bunch grass; fruit lands in the valleys, farm lands on the benches, and mining lands on the mountains with good transportation facilities; an enterprising community and a glorious climate will make the Kamloops district.

A large amount of progress has been made in all lines, but the riches to be wrested from nature's treasure vaults in gold and silver and copper attract most attention. As a mining camp the district has not been boomed by the unscrupulous promoter but development has gone on quietly until to-day it is proved beyond a doubt that in all the rich sections of the great Dominion, Kamloops is second to none. The Cherry Creek Copper King mines, whose advertisement appears in another column, have secured one of the most promising properties in the camp, which was secured on very favorable terms. John Redman, M.E., in his annual report on the camp, says:—

"This group of claims, which is well known, possess some promising and extensive showings on the continuation of the Iron Mask lead. The following extract from the Company's prospectus fairly describes these, and I believe is a conservative description:

"The veins on the 'O.K.' which have been opened up by surface work and a shaft east and west at the 50-foot level is a true fissure, about 90 feet in width at the shaft. The strike of the lead is northeast and southwest, with a dip to the southeast of about 60 degrees. The ore bodies are lenticular, occurring throughout the vein filling. From these lenses a high-grade pyritic copper ore assaying from 10 per cent. to 10 per cent. copper and from $4 to $8 in gold is taken. A sampling of the fissure where exposed in the shaft gave an average of 12.60 per cent. copper and $6.75 in gold.

"A parallel vein on the Prince Charles has been opened up by a small shaft and a good body of medium grade pyritic ore uncovered. The extent of this body is apparently large but must be proved by further development. Average assays of this body give 70 per cent. copper and $6.75 in gold.

The company embraces some of the most responsible and successful business men of the Interior, and is setting forth its plans with a care and foresight not always devoted to the most prominent mining enterprises."

A perusal of their advertisement will show the plan for securing the shareholders.

Has Port Arthur Been Captured?

Rumor From Wei-Hai-Wei But It Lacks Confirmation.

London Advises That it Would Be Well Not to Attach Undue Importance to the Rumor—Heaviest Bombardment of the Russian Fortress Since the Beginning of the Siege —Japs Lose Cruiser and Gunboat.

Shanghai, July 30.—A telegram received here from Wei-Hai-Wei confirms other telegrams received here yesterday from Che Foo to the effect that Port Arthur has been captured. The Wei-Hai-Wei telegram says that the British fleet, which has been cruising, will return there today.

At Wei-Hai-Wei there is a British wireless telegraph station and the British warships are equipped with this means of communication. It is possible that Wei-Hai-Wei has been in wireless communication with the fleet and that the information of the fall of Port Arthur was received in this manner.

Not Confirmed.

London, July 30.—In view of the fact that there has been no confirmation of the report of the fall of Port Arthur, and considering the probability that such important news would be likely to reach other points near the seat of war besides Shanghai, from which it would be cabled, it would be well not to attach undue importance to the Shanghai despatch.

No further news regarding the reported fall of Port Arthur or war news of any kind has reached the London morning newspapers.

Legation in Dark.

Up to midnight the Japanese Legation had received no news indicating the fall of Port Arthur.

General Assault Begun.

Che Foo, July 30.—Refuges who have just arrived from Port Arthur confirm reports that a general assault has been begun by the Japanese on that fortress. The Russians are sanguine that the Japanese could not capture the place. The Russians, according to refugees' story, are still hoping for succor from General Kuropatkin. They are unwilling to believe the reports of his defeat at Tatchekino.

Heavy Firing Heard.

Che Foo, July 30.—A junk, containing thirty refugees from Port Arthur, who are all foreigners of the better class, arrived here last night, having left Port Arthur on Thursday. The refugees report that exceedingly heavy fighting by land and sea to the east and northeast of Port Arthur, occurred on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week, and they express the belief that a general assault was begun on Thursday. They say that this bombardment was the heaviest experienced since the beginning of the siege and that the Russian forts made very little reply to the Japanese fire. These foreigners confirm previous reports of the serious condition of the Japanese fleet. Field Marshal Marquis Oyama accompanied by his staff, left Port Dalny on Tuesday. He is conducting the Japanese operations in person. The fresh meat supply in Port Arthur is exhausted. Only the troops are getting salt meat. Non-combatants are subsisting mainly on oatmeal and rice.

Firing Outside Newchwang.

Newchwang, July 30.—Heavy firing was heard outside Newchwang until 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon.

Japs Lost Two Boats.

Che Foo, July 30.—Refugees who have arrived here from Port Arthur say that the Japanese lost a cruiser and gunboat last Thursday night, as a result of striking mines.

Russian Casualties About 2,000.

Washington, July 30.—The Japanese Minister has received the following cablegram from the Foreign Office at Tokio, dated yesterday: "General Oku reports further that according to the statements of Russian officers captured during the recent battle, Gen. Kuropatkin was present on the battlefield, and that Generals Sakaloff and Kondranovitch were wounded. Also that the Russian casualties were about 2,000. The Japanese casualties were about 1,000, and Gen. Oku reports that investigations are being made regarding the number of prisoners taken and the quantity of munitions of war, etc., captured."

Kuropatkin Not Wounded.

St. Petersburg, July 30.—The general staff denies the report circulated in European papers of the wounding of Gen. Kuropatkin at the battle of Tatchekiao. The general, it is added, is perfectly well.

Russia's Protest to Britain.

London, July 30.—Russia has filed a formal protest at the Foreign Office against British shipments of contraband to Japan.

Report on the Arabia.

St. Petersburg, July 30.—A brief report was received by the Emperor yesterday from Vice-Admiral Skrydloff, announcing the arrival of the German steamer Arabia, captured by the Russian cruiser Gromboi, July 22, at Vladivostock. The report says: "The presence on the Arabia of a cargo declared by the Imperial Government to constitute contraband compelled Admiral Jessen to send the vessel to Vladivostock, as being the nearest Russian port, in order that the matter might be examined by the local prize court."

Squadron Near Tokio.

London, July 30.—A correspondent of The Times at Tokio, cabling under date of July 30, says:

"The cruisers of the Vladivostock squadron were seen south of the Island of Idsu (at the entrance of the Bay of Tokio) this morning. It is believed that the Russian cruisers will be driven off or brought to bay in the course of a day."

Two Boatmen Drowned.

Toronto, July 30.—Information has been received of the drowning of two boatmen belonging to T. B. Speight's survey party on the Abbitibi River. It was contained in a letter from him to A. J. Van Nostrand, dated July 13. On the previous day Joseph Burns and a man named Defoe, connected with the party, set out to move about 800 pounds of supplies to a new camp. They were accompanied by David Lacelle and Arthur Fleury, two boatmen from Mattawa. Unfortunately the canoe was swamped, and both Lacelle and Fleury were drowned. Defoe grasped the canoe and managed to get ashore. Burns caught a box and with its aid drifted ashore half a mile below.

Many New Postoffice.

Ottawa, July 30.—The Postoffice Deparement continues to expand. The list for July makes provision for the distribution of the mails to 37 new offices, scattered throughout every province, with the exception of Prince Edward Island. There are five in Ontario, viz., Jocko River, Nipissing; Grenadier Island, Leeds; Pineland, Simcoe; Brough, East Middlesex; Lothian, Huron. Improved routes for distribution have been adopted for 42 postoffices, Algoma, has been changed to Dean Lake. Only five offices have been closed, including Kilgorie, in Simcoe County, and one at Mine Centre, Algoma.

"Slocum" Indictments.

New York, July 30.—Capt. Van Schaick, Federal Steamboat Inspector Fleming and former Inspector Lundberg were indicted yesterday by the federal grand jury in connection with the disaster to the General Slocum on June 25 last, when nearly 1,000 lives were lost.

Indictments also were reported against President Barnaby, Secretary Atkinson and Treasurer Dexter of the Knickerbocker Steamboat Company, and Capt. John Pease, the commodore of the company's fleet.

Expects Big Yield.

Winnipeg, July 30.—The crops in the province are coming on finely, and the prospects are for the largest harvest yet gathered. The only setback has been due to the rain in some localities where crops are still a little green, but the season is now favorable. Many Americans are investigating the farming situation.

Matches Caused the Fire.

Toronto, July 30.—An open case of matches, one of some half a hundred, which were stored in the upper floor of the Eby Blain grocery warehouse on East Front street is held responsible for having been the cause of a fire which gutted the entire flat. The loss will be between $75,000 and $100,000.

Artist Goodall Dead.

London, July 30.—Frederick Goodall, the artist, is dead. He was a member of the Royal Academy and was born in 1822. His first piscute was exhibited in 1839. "The Flight Into Egypt," "The Finding of Moses," and others of this period, about 1884, were very popular.

THE CASE OF THE KNIGHT COMMANDER.

A wise man once said that "philosophy is something which enables us to bear with complacency the misfortunes of others." It was with this sort of philosophy that the press and people of the United States viewed the seizures of British and German merchant vessels in the Red Sea by the Russian volunteer fleet, but the sinking of the British merchantman Knight Commander by the Vladivostok squadron is regarded across the border in a much more serious light, for the simple reason that the vessel, which was bound from New York to Yokohama, carried American merchandise. The United States is thus brought nearer to serious complications in the Far East than at any time since the outbreak of the Russo-Japanese war. In diplomatic circles at Washington the situation is regarded as exceedingly grave. The opinion is generally expressed that unless there are some unknown mitigating circumstances the act is one which could hardly have had the official sanction of the Russian Government. The New York Times declares the affair "carries altogether too strong a suggestion of common piracy to be agreeable to the civilized world," and shows "a disposition to hold up and paralyze the commerce of the world whenever it is to the interest of a nation at war so to do. There really seems much strength in the claim that the sinking of a suspected carrier of contraband, instead of taking her before a neutral tribunal, can be justified only by the clearest proof that she was carrying contraband to the enemy of Russia. According to international law the only condition under which it is proper to fire upon a neutral vessel is when that vessel tries to escape. Then it should be fully warned by several shots across her bows. From the meagre reports we have of the sinking of the Knight Commander it does not appear that the vessel made any attempt to escape, but that, on the other hand, the Russians stopped the ship and took off the crew before they fired upon her. Another theory of the occurrence is that the Russians may not have had enough men to man the merchantman and take her to port to be submitted to a prize court. If this is the case, however, the alternative selected was bold and dangerous. Now that the vessel has been destroyed, with her cargo, it will be exceedingly difficult to prove that there was contraband aboard. Unless Russia can prove that the various items were contraband she must undoubtedly be ready to pay the owners of all merchandise destroyed in full for their losses as well as settle with the British owners of the ship. The precedent on which the authorities at Washington base their opinion that the United States must, and probably will, look to Russia for possible restitution in the case of the Knight Commander is the case of the British ships Murla and Mashona, taken by the British off Portuguese East Africa, during the Boer war. The vessels sailed from New York laden with American flour and other merchandise. Although sailing under the British flag, the British stopped them and took them into a prize court. The United States immediately demanded restitution from England on behalf of the American owners of the cargo, and this was promptly paid. The differing feature of this occurrence is that the ships were sailing under the flag of the nation which seized them. At that time, in correspondence with Mr. Hay, the Secretary of State, Lord Salisbury, made the following significant statement of England's position:—"Our view is that foodstuffs with a hostile destination can be considered contraband of war only if they are supplies for the enemy's forces. It is not sufficient that they are capable of being so used. It must be shown that this was in fact their destination at the time of the seizure." It is altogether likely that the United States will look direct to Russia for reparation for the destruction of property of her citizens, while the question of the destruction of the vessel is one to be settled between Great Britain and Russia.

Puns and Promotions.

Canon Melville, who died the other day in his ninety-second year, owed his earliest promotion to a pun, affirms a London paper. When the late Earl of Dudley, who knew Mr. Melville sufficiently to remember that his Christian name was David, had a living at his disposal, he received a letter containing only the words, "Lord, remember David." The Earl's reply was no less terse and Scriptural: "Thou art the man!" Perhaps the earliest instance of ecclesiastical promotion won by a pun is that of a curate named Joseph, who was prompted by Swift to take this text for a sermon preached in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, before the Viceroy, "Butler," the Duke of Ormond: "Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but forgat him." The Rev. Dr. Mountain, who was the son of a beggar, owed nearly every step of his successive promotions in great part to his facetiousness, and won the last step of all by a single jest. When he was consulted, as Bishop of Durham, by George II. as to the fittest person to fill the vacant archiepiscopal see of York he replied: "Sir, hadst thou faith as a grain of mustard seed thou wouldst say to this Mountain (dramatically striking his breast), 'Be thou removed and cast into this sea (see).'" That George II. should so understand and appreciate the joke as to accept its suggestion is perhaps the strangest part of the story.

WHEN SICKNESS COMES.

DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS SHOULD BE USED TO BRING BACK HEALTH.

Sickness comes sooner or later in the life of everyone. Many who for years have enjoyed the best of health are suddenly seized with some one of the numerous ills of life. Most of the ills result from an impoverished condition of the blood; thus if the blood is enriched the trouble will disappear. That is why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have had a greater success than any other medicine in the world in curing sick and ailing people. These pills actually make new, rich, red blood, strengthen every nerve in the body and in this way make people well and strong. Mr. Alphonse Lacoussiere, a well known young farmer of St. Leon, Que., proves the truth of these statements. He says:—"About a year ago my blood gradually became impoverished. I was weak, nervous and generally run down. Then suddenly my trouble was aggravated by pains in my kidneys and bladder, and day by day I grew so much worse that finally I was unable to rise without aid. I consulted doctors, but any relief I obtained from their medicine was only temporary, and I began to despair of ever being well again. One day I read an article in a newspaper praising Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I decided to try them. I got six boxes and before they were all gone my condition was so greatly improved that I knew I had at last found a medicine to cure me. I continued the use of the pills for a while longer, and every symptom of my trouble was gone, and I have since enjoyed the best of health. I think so much of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills that I am never without them in the house."

It is because Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make new blood that they cure such diseases as anaemia, rheumatism, kidney and liver troubles, neuralgia, indigestion and all other ailments due to poor blood. But you must get the genuine bearing the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" on the wrapper around every box. Sold by medicine dealers everywhere or sent by mail at 50c a box or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Died in Toronto.

Mrs. Ernest Adams died at Toronto on Thursday night. Deceased was for many years a resident of Ameliasburg Township, where she was well known. The family removed to the Queen City a few years ago. The remains arrived here at noon to-day and were taken to Albury for interment.

WITH CRICK IN THE BACK

You are up against a whole lot of trouble unless you have a strong remedy like Nerviline to settle pain and dislodge stiffness from the muscles and joints. Just rub Nerviline on the painful spot—not much rubbing, because Nerviline has more power than ordinary remedies. You won't suffer long after Nerviline is applied, for it relieves almost instantly. Mr. Philip Adams, of Oakland, says, "If I hadn't used Nerviline I guess my back would be stiff yet. A few applications of Nerviline took out all the soreness and stiffness. I can recommend Nerviline for any kind of muscular pain, also for rheumatism. Price 25c.

"Because," said Mora, rising to his feet and boldly facing Mr. Barnes, who also arose—"because the murderer did not throw them into the river. It was I who did that."

"You?" gasped Mr. Barnes, utterly taken aback as he saw his supposedly strong evidence against this man about to be swept aside. "You say that you threw the suit into the river?"

"Do you doubt it? Did you not see me—you—you spy!"

The last words came forth with a hissing sound, and the young man assumed a threatening attitude, which tempted Mr. Mitchel to speak for the first time.

"Come! No violence!" he exclaimed, rising quickly and grasping Mora's upraised arm. The younger man wrenched himself loose by a quick movement and turned to confront Mr. Mitchel.

"And who are you?" he cried. "You have been sitting by in silence while this—this thief taker has been trying to twist something out of my mouth which he could use to place a rope around my neck. A nice business you both are in!"

"You do not know me, Mr. Mora, or you would not speak so harshly. In my conversations with Mr. Barnes I have argued that you are innocent."

"I presume you expect me to be grateful to you for that. Well, I am not. I am not guilty, and I defy all such detectives as this Mr. Barnes here."

"You may defy me as much as you like," said Mr. Barnes hotly, exasperated by the contemptuous words which had been used, "but you have admitted that since the murder you had the plaid suit in your possession and that you attempted to dispose of it. That you will find very difficult to explain."

"I should never hope that any explanation of mine would penetrate your thick skull," said Mora, "and I would not attempt it except that perhaps your friend here is more reasonable than yourself and might persuade you of the stupidity of having me arrested, which, I presume, is the next step which you contemplate."

"No other course would be open to me unless you can account for your very suspicious action," replied Mr. Barnes.

"All things are suspicious to those who suspect," said Mora. Then, turning to Mr. Mitchel, he continued: "This man admits that if the murderer wore my clothing it was because he wished me to be suspected. Very well. Upon my release yesterday I hastened to the Essex street house, because I had an idea which was quickly confirmed. The man stole my clothes, and after killing my father he returned them to the closet from which he had taken them. Imagine my position if my connection with the house had been learned and the clothes found in my closet, with the blood on them. On finding them I was terrified, and I lost my head. I made the great mistake of hurrying with them to the river. I see now that I should have acted otherwise."

"What should you have done?" asked Mr. Mitchel.

"I should have gone to the police station and told the truth. The truth will always prevail, only in this instance"—

He hesitated, seemed confused and stopped, leaving the sentence incomplete.

"Only in this instance the truth was so improbable that the police might have misconstrued your action into a bold game of bluff," said Mr. Mitchel, finishing it for him. "Is that your idea?"

'Come! No violence!' he exclaimed, grasping Mora's upraised arm.

"Yes; we'll let it go at that." He looked at Mr. Mitchel keenly for a few moments, then suddenly added, "I wish you gentlemen a very good morning," and hurried from the apartment.

Mr. Mitchel waited for Mr. Barnes to speak first, and very soon the detective asked:

"Well, Mr. Mitchel, what do you think?"

"I think I could have finished that young man's sentence exactly as he had framed it mentally. I think I could supply the words which he suppressed. I think your case is getting to be intensely interesting. And I think that I will take a walk—alone—if you will excuse me."

CHAPTER VIII.

MR. BARNES AT WORK.

When young Mora left the room so suddenly, Mr. Barnes, before asking for Mr. Mitchel's opinion, had hurried to the window and had so placed himself behind the curtains that he commanded a view of the street, though himself well screened from view. This precaution was well taken, for he saw Mora closely examine the window before jumping into his cab, which awaited. As the vehicle was driven away he asked his question, but he continued to gaze into the street until in a few moments another cab turned the corner and went in the same direction as the first. By this time Mr. Mitchel had replied, and Mr. Barnes found time to answer:

"You wish to take a walk alone? That means you do not desire my companionship. Well, that is satisfactory, for I believe I can do what must be done now with more facility if I, too, am alone."

He paused as though expecting Mr. Mitchel to speak, but that gentleman could not have been curious to know what the detective contemplated, for he remained silent. Mr. Barnes therefore at once took his leave.

In the street he stood still a moment, looking after the two cabs, which were still in sight. He then walked rapidly in the opposite direction for a couple of blocks, when he turned and hurried to the nearest station of the elevated railroad. Twenty minutes later he was standing in the doorway nearly opposite to the Mora mansion. Here he waited so long that, patient detective though he was, he began to be restive and would come from his hiding place, gaze quickly up and down the street and then hurry back to his retreat between the inner and outer doors.

At last the sound of wheels satisfied him, and he slipped behind a door, being thus completely hidden, though through the crevice he could still observe the Mora dwelling.

The cab drove up, and young Mora alighted. He paid his fare, and then he did a somewhat strange thing. He looked up and down the street until his cab had turned into the avenue and disappeared. Then he went up his stoop and hid behind the outer door of his own house, exactly as Mr. Barnes was hiding opposite. The detective wondered what this maneuver might mean, but he soon discovered.

Two or three minutes had elapsed when a man slowly passed who looked sharply into the Mora house. Instantly young Mora darted forth and seized him, at the same time touching the electric button which summoned his butler. Mr. Barnes could make out by his gesticulation that the newcomer was protesting, but Mora held him firmly, giving some orders to his servant which sent that worthy hurrying down the street without waiting to get a hat. A few minutes later the man returned with a policeman. Then there was apparently some argument, but eventually the officer went off, leading the man by the arm, despite his continued protests, while Mora looked after them with a smile.

Mr. Barnes saw and comprehended all that had taken place. He smiled also.

"You may dispose of that man, my boy, but now you have Jack Barnes to deal with," he mused.

This is what had occurred. When Mora left Mr. Mitchel's house, Mr. Barnes was satisfied that as he jumped into his cab he merely exclaimed "Home," for he seemingly uttered but a single word. Mora being a man of wealth, the detective had rightly imagined that he would come to the house in a cab. To be prepared against all emergencies he had consequently stationed a cab within reasonable distance, the occupant of which was one of his spies. When he saw the second cab go by, therefore, he felt assured that, even though he might have made a mistake, Mora would be watched. On the supposition, however, that he was correct he had taken the elevated road, which had enabled him to get to the house ahead of the vehicles. That he had been compelled to wait so long argued that Mora must have stopped on the way, and Mr. Barnes would have been very glad now for a few words with his spy, who was being led off by the policeman.

It was evident that Mora had noticed the cab following him and had craftily rid himself of the spy by having him arrested. That he could have any suspicion of the near presence of Mr. Barnes seemed highly improbable. Therefore the detective congratulated himself upon his success and had no fear that he would be unable to keep his man in sight for the rest of the day.

Young Mora then went into his house, and very shortly after Mr. Barnes observed that the shutter of one of the windows of the parlor was slightly opened, just enough to enable any one within to peep out.

"He's a careful devil," growled the detective. "He has heard of the double spy method, and, even though he ought to feel certain that there is no other spy around, he is trying to discover one. I must be very cautious."

The shutter was soon closed again, and half an hour passed, with nothing to break the monotony of the watch, when suddenly the door was opened, and a man came out and walked rapidly down the street. Mr. Barnes was on the point of hurrying after him when he suddenly stopped, just in time to prevent himself from passing beyond the protection of the door. Taking a small opera glass from his pocket, he looked at the man for some moments and then at the various windows of the house opposite.

"You devil!" he muttered half aloud. "You almost caught me that time. So! You've dressed your valet up in your clothes and sent him out to be followed by any spy who may be about. Well, my boy, the next time you try that on me don't select a man who takes three strides to your one. Ah! There you are, are you?"

This time it was Mora himself who came out of the house dressed in totally different attire. He seemed to be altogether at ease and to be careless whether detectives were about or not, for without haste and without looking back he quietly walked up the street.

"Shall I follow him or his man?" thought Mr. Barnes. "I believe that he is the sort who would never make a confidant of any one. The valet was but a decoy in case I had another spy posted near his house. He will himself attend to whatever business he has in hand."

Mr. Barnes now came cautiously forth and began shadowing Mora with the skill of a veteran. In the side street he kept so far in the rear and always so near a door or a tree box that if Mora had turned his head ever so quickly he would not have seen Mr. Barnes. On Broadway, which they soon reached, the crowded nature of the thoroughfare made it possible to keep closer, but he never risked to approach too near.

BABY'S DANGER.

The summer months are a bad time for babies, and an anxious time for mothers. Fermentation and decomposition in the stomach and bowels are the cause of the many summer complaints of babies and young children. This is the reason why the hot weather months are more fatal to little ones than any other season. Baby's Own Tablets should always be found in every home, where there are young children and their prompt use during hot weather may save a precious little life. The tablets cure constipation, diarrhoea, and stomach troubles, and are guaranteed to contain no opiate or harmful drug. Mrs. Walter Rollins, Sisson's Ridge, N.S., says:—"Before using Baby's Own Tablets my little one cried almost continuously with stomach troubles. I can truthfully say I never had any medicine act so promptly and give such satisfaction as the tablets do. I do not think you make any claim for them which their use will not substantiate." The tablets can be had from any medicine dealer or by mail from the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont. Price 25c a box.

TIMELY TOPICS.

It is intensely gratifying to note that, as there is one Grit M. P. who is against the principle of rewarding dishonesty, so there is one Grit paper which does not condemn Dundonald for advising Canadians to "keep both hands on the Union Jack." The Montreal Witness, a staunch upholder of the principles of Liberalism, has this to say of the now famous remark in question:

"Lord Dundonald told his enthusiastic admirers at Ottawa and Montreal yesterday, and they are legion, to 'keep both hands on the Union Jack.' The cheering assent that was given to that advice must have convinced everybody, if anybody in Canada or abroad ever doubted it, that the great heart of Canada never beat more with loyalty to the old flag than it does to-day. Lord Dundonald was given a great send-off at Ottawa and got a great reception at Montreal and all parties and creeds were represented. In Montreal, among the first to welcome him was Mr. Peter Lyall, the Liberal candidate for St. Antoine, which is sufficient proof that his public reception here was not arranged by the Conservative party. We read that one old soldier at Ottawa called for 'three cheers for the last general officer commanding in Canada,' and called for it with 'a touch of feeling,' which we can quite believe, and sympathize with. It is hard to break old ties and see them broken; but whether we are again to have a G.O.C. from England or not, or whatever other changes chance and time may bring about, most of us are in full touch with Lord Dundonald's soldierly valedictory."

Lame Back. David Hart, blacksmith, Havelock, Ont., says: O.R. Kidney Cure is a safe and sure remedy for diseases of the kidneys and bladder. I have used it for lame back, it acts like magic. Each bottle of O. R. Kidney Cure contains a ten day's treatment. 50c all druggist, or by mail.

FRANCE AND HOLY SEE.

French Ministry Keeps Its Decision in the Matter Secret.

Paris, July 30.—The Council of Ministers, after sitting until 5 p.m., yesterday, discussing the Vatican situation, decided to keep its decision secret.

Premier Combes, when questioned after the Ministers had adjourned, declared that diplomatic etiquette forbade him to speak. This statement is interpreted to indicate a complete rupture of diplomatic relations with the Holy See.

The French Government's note was telegraphed last evening to M. De Courcel, the secretary in charge of the French Embassy to the Vatican, who will communicate it to the Vatican authorities to-day.

It is believed that the Embassy staff will leave Rome to-day, and that the Papal Nuncio will leave Paris.

AUTHOR McLENNAN DEAD.

Distinguished Canadian Died at Vallambrosa, Italy, at 48 Years of Age.

Montreal, July 30.—News was received by cable yesterday of the death at Vallambrosa, Italy, of William McLennan, the distinguished Canadian author. He was 48 years of age, and was the second son of the late Hugh McLennan, in his time one of Montreal's most prominent merchants. Deceased graduated from McGill in 1880, and after practising law here gave his whole attention to literature.

Mr. McLennan's best known publications included "Songs of Old Canada," translated from the French; "Montreal and Some of Its Makers," "A King for a Week," "A Gentleman of the Royal Guard," and many short stories, essays and poems.

Boy of 7 Drowned.

Carleton Place, July 30.—A sad drowning accident occurred yesterday, by which Wilmer Neil, a boy aged 7 years, only son of Wm. M. Neil, lost his life. The little fellow and another boy named Melville Poivin were playing along the edge of the millrace, near Gillies' machine shops, when young Neil fell in.

There is nothing equal to Mother Graves' Worm Exterminator for destroying worms. No article of its kind has given such satisfaction.

A self made man has his private opinion as to what is the noblest work of God.

Some persons have periodical attacks of Canadian cholera, dysentery or diarrhoea and have to use great precautions to avoid the disease. Change of water, cooking and green fruit is sure to bring on the attacks. To such persons we would recommend Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial as being the best medicine in the market for all summer complaints. If a few drops is taken in water when the symptoms are noticed no further trouble will be experienced.

Few men realize what large dividends they can draw on kindness.

For coughs, colds, bronchitis and all lung and throat troubles there is no preparation of medicine can compare with Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup. It never fails to afford prompt and permanent relief. It removes all soreness and heals the diseased parts. It immediately soothes the most troublesome coughs, and by promoting expectoration, removes the mucous which stops up the air tubes which causes difficulty in breathing, thereby gives relief to that depressing tightness experienced in the chest. Public speakers and singers will find Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup of inestimable value, as it speedily and effectually allays all irritation and huskiness in the throat and bronchial tubes and gives power to the vocal cords, rendering the voice clear and sonorous. If parents wish to save the lives of their children and themselves from much anxiety, trouble and expense, let them procure a bottle of Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, and whenever a child has taken cold, has a cough or hoarseness, give the Syrup according to directions.

To Those of Sedentary Occupation—Men who follow sedentary occupations, which deprive them of fresh air and exercise, are more prone to disorders of the liver and kidneys than those who lead active, outdoor lives. The former will find in Parmelee's Vegetable Pills a restorative without question the most efficacious on the market. They are easily procurable, easily taken, act expeditiously, and they are surprisingly cheap considering their excellence.

A tailor made woman is one of the noblest works of man.

A Wonderful Cure. — Mr. David Smith, Coe Hill, Ont., writes: "For the benefit of others I wish to say a few words about Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. About a year ago I took a very severe cough, had a virulent sore on my lips, was bad with dyspepsia, constipation and general debility. I tried almost every conceivable remedy, outwardly and inwardly, to cure the sore, but all to no purpose. I had often thought of trying Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, so I got a bottle, and when I had used about one half the sore showed evident signs of healing. By the time that bottle was done it had about disappeared and my general health was improving fast. I was always of a very billous habit and had used quinine and lemon juice with very little effect. But since using three bottles of the Vegetable Discovery the biliousness is entirely gone and my general health is excellent. I am 66 years old. Parties using it should continue it for some time after they think they are cured. It is by far the best health restorer I know."

He Has Tried It.—Mr. John Anderson, Kimloss, writes: "I venture to say few, if any, have received greater benefit from the use of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil than I have. I have used it regularly for over ten years and have recommended it to all sufferers I knew of, and they also found it of great virtue in cases of severe bronchitis and incipient consumption."

Holloway's Corn Cure is the medicine to remove all kinds of corns and warts, and only costs the small sum of twenty-five cents.

Cut the trunk, the branches fall of themselves.

A Sure Cure for Headaches. — Billious headaches, to which women are more subject than men, become so acute in some subjects that they are utterly prostrated. The stomach refuses food, and there is a constant and distressing effort to free the stomach from bile which has become unduly secreted there. Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are a speedy alterative, and in neutralizing the effects of the intruding bile relieves the pressure on the nerves, which cause the headache. Try them.

Some second thoughts occur several minutes later.

UNTOLD MISERY — WHAT A WELL-KNOWN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER SUFFERED, AND HOW HE WAS CURED.—Gentlemen, about five years ago I began to be troubled with Dyspepsia, and for three years suffered untold misery from this terrible complaint. I was at that time travelling for Messrs. Walter Woods & Co., Hamilton, and was treated by some of the best physicians in the country, but to no purpose. I continued to grow worse, one day I was induced to try a bottle of Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, and to my great surprise and joy, I soon began to improve. I continued using this medicine and when the third bottle was finished I found I was entirely cured, and as a year has elapsed since then, I feel confident that the cure is complete and permanent. To all afflicted with this distressing complaint I heartily recommend Northrup & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery, believing that the persistent use of it will cure any case of Dyspepsia. (Signed)

Boys' Brigade Returns.

It was a hearty, happy-looking group of boys that landed from the steamer Varuna this morning the occasion being the return from camp at Twelve o'Clock Point of the Boys' Brigade of St. Thomas' Church, after an absence of ten days. Not all the members of the Brigade came by the Varuna, as a portion follow in their sailing boats. The boys report having had an exceedingly enjoyable time. They were under charge of Sergt. Howard Sharpe and Mr. Stewart Lazier, who are receiving much praise for the great success of the camp, as under their supervision the conduct of the boys was good. They enjoyed good health and had a real good time. The camp was held under military rules, with religious exercises daily. The boys were loath to leave and the people at the Point were sorry to see them go, as the boys were great favorites. This brigade has been very successful under the management of Mr. E. H. Farrow and is steadily increasing in strength and popularity.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Ten Years of Suffering.

"I wish to say a few words in praise of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mrs. Mattie Burge, of Martinsville, Va. "I suffered from chronic diarrhoea for ten years and during that time tried various medicines without obtaining any permanent relief. Last summer one of my children was taken sick with cholera morbus, and I procured a bottle of this remedy. Only two doses were required to give her entire relief. I then decided to try the medicine myself, and did not use all of one bottle before I was well and I have never since been troubled with that complaint. One cannot say too much in favor of that wonderful medicine." This remedy is for sale by all druggists.

NATURE REVOLTS

Because the Kidneys were overworked and weakened and could not do their whole duty. South American Kidney Cure cleared away the impurities—healed the diseased parts—made a sick-to-death man well.

One of the happiest men in the County of Huron to-day, is Mr. James McBrine, of Jamestown. He was suddenly attacked with most severe Kidney disease which culminated in a complication of bladder troubles. He tried the best physicians in the County without avail. Attracted by testimony of most marvellous cures by South American Kidney Cure he procured it, and before he had used one bottle was completely cured. 62

The Dakota Cyclone Is a "Warm Member"

CAMP MEETING ON WILLIAM STREET WHICH DOES NOT MAKE FOR THE PEACE AND QUIETNESS OF THAT NEIGHBORHOOD.

Hundreds of people are talking these days of the sayings and doings of a band of so-called religious workers who occupy a tent on William St. It having been alleged that their actions and doings were something out of the ordinary, a representative of The Intelligencer last evening paid a visit to the scene, and found that the reports he had heard did not in the least suffer from exaggeration. The large tent is provided with seats, and these were filled when the reporter arrived, there being also a good-sized crowd assembled outside the tent. Inside, on the platform, a young man, with many gesticulations, and with an altogether unnecessary loudness of voice, was haranguing the audience. This was "The Dakota Cyclone," a U. S. evangelist, who is alleged to have done much, in other places where he has been, to awaken people to a sense of their sins. As regards the "awakening," one can well believe the story. No one, within a radius of three or four blocks, could help being awake when the "Dakota Cyclone" starts to blow. His voice is something to remember. As to his utterances—well, for one to say that they were in accordance with the traditions and teachings of the conventional Canadian churches, would not be in strict accordance with the truth. He is certainly earnest, and probably means well, but to even the ordinary Philistine there are too many tricks and methods which savor of the side-show shouter to appeal much to quiet, Christian people. His condemnation of the existing conditions in Christian churches, while perhaps well-meant, was certainly not in the best of taste. Last night he was particularly severe on the Methodists and Presbyterians, which bodies, he stated, had "fallen from grace." Referring to the General Slocum steamboat horror, the speaker expressed the belief that it was a judgment on the church which allowed its Sunday school to hold the picnic. The Iroquois theatre horror, at Chicago, was another judgment. The "Cyclone's" curious expressions often moved his hearers to laughter which fact seemed to make him more explosive. "Laugh away," he shouted, "but the time is coming when you won't laugh. The time is coming when God will grab you and hold you over hell fire; then you will cry for mercy."

The exercises lasted till considerably after 10 o'clock, and the shouts of the "Cyclone" fitted in strangely with the decorous quiet which usually prevails in the aristocratic quarter of our beautiful city.

Many of Belleville's well-known people were to be seen in the crowd, most of them, perhaps, attracted more by curiosity than anything else. Some ladies, well-known members of society, expressed the belief "that it was perfectly awful the way that man went on about the churches."

When the "after meeting" began the noise and shouting was worse than ever, the weird screams of a woman helping to shock many people who evidently do not believe in the strenuous form of worship practiced by "The Dakota Cyclone" and those who assist him.

A suggestive incident occurred just before the newspaper man went home. A father and his little son were there, and the former, evidently weary, wanted to go. "Oh! wait papa," said the little chap, "they'll begin to yell and roll round after awhile. It's heaps of fun to see them."

Origin of Primrose Day.

"Primrose Day," 1904, is past and over, and I fancy that very few people realize that it was originated by a Sir George C. Birdwood, K.C., I.E., who before the first anniversary of Disraeli's death wrote to the secretary of St. Stephen's Club, suggesting that Lord Beaconsfield's favorite flower should be used to decorate the club dining tables. This, however, was not done, and the indefatigable Conservative induced Lord Lytton and some influential men to wear buttonholes of primroses on the 19th of April, and finally at his own expense advertised the movement in the papers, and the idea "caught on," and to-day thousands of bunches of primroses are sent to London, and all Conservatives bedeck the lapel of their coats, and in some cases the facade of their houses, with the little flower, which means a source of income to the children of the rural districts in many parts of England.

Summer Clearing Sale of Odds & Ends In China.

On Saturday, the 16th inst, we place on bargain tables all our table and fancy China together with a sample line of a large Japanese House, bought at a great sacrifice to save shopping out of the country. We have made the prices right to clear quickly—in most cases less than half the price. Tables at 5, 10, 15, 25, 35 and 50c, worth double. See them at once as prices will quickly lower the assortment.

Atfer The Battle

After the rush and tare of the Spring Wall Paper trade. After a strong season's trade there always remains many lines which have not sold quite so rapidiy as others—Not because of lack of merit, but rather lack of appreciation.

All such papers we are placing on sale at reduced prices. At startling prices.

Coupled therewith we add our entire line of Wall Papers with the exception of especial decorative goods.

All of which we offer for a short time at prices which are yet unknown to the public

---

Then, Too,

You have the value of our decorative department, a large staff of all competent workmen for, we have none other.

During the spring rush a few workmen were taken on our staff who were not competent thoroughly—but we have wiped these from our list of workmen, and to-day every man of our staff is competent in his branch—and our staff the largest in the city—by far.

Workmen, whether painters, Grainers, Finishers or paper hangers or decorators. We will furnish you the very best and at reasonable prices—Put us to the test.

Hardly any rubbing with Sunlight Soap. The Sunlight Maids say its child's play.

SUNLIGHT SOAP

Will wash anything, but to secure best results with least labor should be used in the Sunlight way. First dip the articles to be washed in a tub of lukewarm water and draw it out of the water on a wash board and rub the soap over it lightly. Then roll them up tightly and lay under the water. Leave them there for thirty minutes and let Sunlight Soap do its work. Commence rubbing the clothes lightly on the wash board and the dirt will drop out. Turn the garments inside out to get at the seams but don't use any more soap. No need to scald or boil a single piece and don't wash through two suds. Rinse in lukewarm water taking care to wash out all the dirty suds, then ring out and hang out to dry. That's the Sunlight way. It makes the clothes snowy white.

ASK FOR THE OCTAGON BAR

MADELINE'S SELFISHNESS

By MARAVENE KENNEDY

Copyright, 1904, by G. T. Visknisski

Her indolent grace irritated Harding. Even her serene, audacious loveliness found no favor in his eyes today. Her big, gray eyes looked out from under the sweeping lashes mockingly.

"Your silence means that I am going to be scolded shortly. Don't. I may mistake your interest and think you're in love with me. With all your wisdom and recondite philosophy you're only thirty-one, you know."

Harding reddened uncomfortably.

"If you only would fall in love with me!" she wheedled. "Think how it would develop your character to put the tender emotion underfoot! And how instructive to me to see your convolutions, to know that not even love could make you condone my indolence and selfishness!"

"And your conceit," he added caustically. "I'm thinking of my own affairs, not yours, unfortunately." A sudden weariness smote his eyes. "Madeline, I shall have to make an assignment and go out of business. Rob's failure has involved me deeply. Could I pay Mercer I could pull through, but I can't raise even $1,000 with the other claims against the stock. Money is very close now. I shall have to go to the city and take a position for awhile unless"—

"When do you assign?" she interrupted calmly.

"Next week. I'll give myself every hour's grace I can. Something may happen, but it's a forlorn hope."

"Then we shall lose you and your vast store of knowledge, and I shall be free from your rebuking tongue. But I'm truly sorry, Duncan, that you are in trouble. I really wouldn't have embraced my gain at your loss—premeditatively."

"WHERE ARE YOUR RINGS, MADELINE?" HE CRIED SHARPLY.

She held out her jeweled fingers and laughed joyously. The piled up gems that flashed under Harding's tired eyes were no more heartless than their beautiful owner, he thought savagely. Selfish as he had always believed her, he was yet stunned by her indifference. He had been George Rives' closest friend and had promised him on his deathbed six years before to keep a watchful eye over his mother, a gracious, delicate woman of fifty, and his sister Madeline, a willful beauty of sixteen.

Because she loved diamonds Madeline had promptly put one half of her patrimony on coming of age into numerous rings to adorn her slender, tapering, pink nailed fingers. The other half was tied up so she could not handle it or she would have weighted her toes with them, too, Harding declared in disgust when he saw her investment. The Riveses were comfortably fixed, but it was only by careful financiering and good management that mother and daughter could live in the comparative luxury they did. Mrs. Rives spoiled Madeline as only a doting mother can, but then every one, save Harding, took a hand at spoiling Madeline. She was so very lovely and so irresistibly sweet despite the selfishness Harding so greatly deplored.

Harding was hurt. He ignored the jeweled fingers and strode angrily toward her mother, who was approaching from the other end of the wide, comfortable veranda. Madeline's smile was enigmatical as she gazed at the big, broad shouldered figure towering above her mother and openly disdainful at his whispered command on leaving.

"Don't tell your mother. She's unselfish enough to care."

Mrs. Rives looked at Madeline disapprovingly as Harding tramped angrily down the long walk.

"Why will you persist in quarreling with Duncan?" she rebuked gently. "No brother could be kinder."

"I don't like paragons," said Madeline shortly. "It does him good to be disagreed with once in awhile and to lose his temper. He should be grateful to me, and"—

"He's not," concluded her mother impressively. She shook her head sadly. She had hoped things would be different between Duncan and Madeline. As day after day passed and Duncan did not come she was truly angry with her willful daughter.

But the girl had never seemed so happy. She was like a blithesome song bird with her bubbling spirits and gayety. And when, after a week's absence, Duncan did appear, she greeted even him with a smile of alluring sweetness.

"You think I'm going away," he said bitterly as Mrs. Rives left them together. "You're rejoicing too soon. Some one has loaned me $1,000. Who it is the Lord only knows. It came three days ago, ten $100 bills, with a typewritten note saying: 'Accept this loan from a friend. You can repay it with legal interest when you feel amply able to do so. I will disclose myself then; I cannot do so now.'"

"And you have no idea?" she asked wonderingly. "Perhaps it was Mercer himself. He may want to repay good for the evil he has done you. Even wicked folks are penitent—sometimes."

"But selfish ones are never generous," he retorted. "You—you were glad of my misfortune. You thought it would rid you of me and my preachments. Don't you know, Madeline, I reproach you only for your own good?"

"If I were as selfish as you think me," she said seriously, "'for my own good' might prove efficacious. It's hard to be unselfish when folks perpetually insist upon holding the thought 'for my own good.' If it were only for some one else's good I—might."

The tenderness in her voice disarmed him. "I wish we could be good friends," he said gently and took her slender hands in his. Something strange in their touch made him unclasp his fingers. He stared dumbly for a moment, then—

"Where are your rings, Madeline?" he cried sharply.

"I—I'm tired of wearing them," she faltered. "Mr. Ross said my hands were too beautiful to need adornment." And she laughed gayly. Harding gazed intently at the flushed face.

"Where are your rings?" he commanded roughly. The uncertainty made him cruel. "Tell me."

"Is that your affair?" she asked imperiously.

"Yes," he said tensely, "it is. If you have sold them for me it means—Heaven, Madeline—darling, don't you know how I love you?"

"You love—me!" she cried in a voice Duncan had never heard before. "Me? Oh, Duncan! Then—then why have you always been so—so fault finding?"

"Because I did love you," he whispered remorsefully. "I wanted to punish you for not loving me."

"Then—then that's why I was always so cross with you too," she cried, with sudden understanding.

He gathered her in his arms. "It was our selfishness," he said humbly.

"'Ours!' not mine alone, this time. Duncan, you truly do love—me!"

Rapturously he kissed the pretty fingers.

"My unselfish darling," he murmured.

"But it was selfishness," she cried hurriedly. "I didn't—want—you—to go."

"I don't mind that sort of selfishness, my precious," he said.

Mother Elephant and Her Baby.

A remarkably intelligent elephant working a few years ago on a new bridge in Ceylon had a young one to which she was devoted. It died, and she became inconsolable.

Formerly the gentlest of creatures, she grew irritable and even dangerous. One morning she broke the chain which confined her and escaped into the forest.

One night about ten days after her escape the officer who had been in charge of her went out to lie in wait for bears at a pond in a jungle at some distance.

As he and his native attendant were returning early in the morning the native silently nudged him, and they saw in the dim gray light an elephant with her calf making their way toward the camp. They both sprang behind trees, and when the elephants had passed the native insisted that the older one was their old friend the inconsolable mother.

When they reached the camp they found that the truant had returned and had gone from one person to another, touching each with her trunk, as if exhibiting her adopted child, which she had evidently begged, borrowed or stolen in her absence.

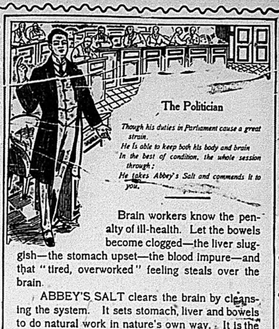
Her good temper and usual docility returned at once, and her owner blessed the good fortune which had enabled her to procure a baby elephant.

Tipped Himself to a Boat.

They were talking of catboats, when the host said: "Until I began the thing myself I never knew how many men who affect to despise small economies get up early or stay out late to get shaved in the 10 cent barber shops. They never go near them in the middle of the day, because they are afraid of having the fact known. I have met acquaintances in Second avenue, Third avenue, Eighth and Ninth avenues and all the way from Harlem to Grand street who patronize these cheap barbers, sometimes one shop and sometimes another. The majority of these places are clean. They are open from 7 in the morning until 10 at night, and no tips seem to be expected. I have been to the same shop a dozen times, and, although I never gave a tip, I always was well treated. For 20 or 25 cents you can get as much work done as would cost 40 or 50 cents in a first class shop, exclusive of the tip. Of course a fellow feels foolish to be seen coming out of one, but he must take that risk."

"Why did you interrupt a talk about your new catboat to tell me that?" asked his friend.

"Because," was the reply, "it is the way I saved money to buy the boat."—New York Press.



The Politician

Though his duties in Parliament cause a great strain,
He is able to keep both his body and brain
In the best of condition, the whole session through;
He takes Abbey's Salt and commends it to you.

Brain workers know the penalty of ill-health. Let the bowels become clogged—the liver sluggish—the stomach upset—the blood impure—and that "tired, overworked" feeling steals over the brain.

ABBEY'S SALT clears the brain by cleansing the system. It sets stomach, liver and bowels to do natural work in nature's own way. It is the ideal blood purifier—the perfect stomachic—the unfailing liver regulator.

JAPANESE SUPREMACY.

RUSSIAN PROPHET PREDICTED IT NEARLY 100 YEARS AGO.

New York Times.

That the Japanese would one day be rulers of the ocean coast of Asia is the prediction made almost a century ago in the book of a Russian naval observer, whose prophecy seems not unlikely of fulfillment at the present time.

In 1811 Capt. Vasili Golawin, of the Imperial navy, was instructed to cruise among the coral archipelagoes of the Pacific to ascertain which of these were inhabited by the Japanese, and accordingly he set sail from Odessa in the Diana, arriving some two months later off the coast of Yezo.

But one or two copies of Capt. Galowin's book are extant, one of them being in the library of the Winter Palace at St. Petersburg.

Published in 1815, "Capt. Galowin's Captivity in Japan," throws an interesting light upon the physical and moral characteristics of the Japanese nation at a time when little, if anything, definite was known by Europeans — particularly in Russia—of the traits of the Mongolian island people.

Of the observations contained in Capt. Golawin's book, the following are of curious interest: "I praise the Japanese for their skill. They will one day be, probably, rulers of the ocean coast of Asia. And what can Russia do, being so far away from this border? Should the Japanese introduce European civilization and European political systems, the Chinese would be obliged to do the same, and these two people could then give to Europe "another face." Happenings such as the Cehwostow raids (1792) would give suggestion to them to build European warships, and a small fleet could be raised to begin with. Many European inventions could be reproduced in Japan—and without the brains of a Peter the Great—simply by the combination of circumstances and of the natural advantages of Japan.

Certainly, with European models, Japan could build men-of-war very easily and man them quickly with brave sailors. The population is peculiarly adaptable to naval requirements by reason of the insular position of the country. The people comprehend easily, and, given adequate instruction, would supplant Europeans as navigators.

The Japanese lack only one quality, namely, terrestrial bravery; but their deficiency in this respect is only because of the peace-loving character of their Government. After a very long time they lose all capacity to shed blood. I think an entire people, not timid, however, whose forefathers were the terrors of the whole world.

Collectively, Europe has bigger brains than Japan, but individually the Japanese have clearer ideas and are spiritually higher in fundament, particularly when the lower classes of the territories are compared. And many of their ideas are correct, as, for instance, a simple soldier demonstrated to me the spherical shape of the earth upon a round-bottomed tea cup."

THE FIRST AND BEST.

"Foot Elm" was the first foot remedy sold in Canada. It has stood the test of years, both here and by the troops in South Africa. No remedy to-day can equal it for giving prompt relief to aching, sweaty, sore, tender, blistered, chafed feet. 18 powders 25 cts.

THAT WORD "FOREIGNER."

CORRESPONDENT OF TORONTO PAPER SAYS IT IS NOW USED IN ENGLAND AS A JEST.

Writing to the Toronto News a gentleman signing himself R. S. Neville, says:

I have been living in London, Eng., for about a year, and was there when the cable informed the British people that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had spoken of Lord Dundonald as a "foreigner." This was considered an unfortunate expression, and was to some extent resented. But the English have a sense of humor, and soon turned their resentment into humorous retaliation by calling the Canadians "foreigners." This was always in jest, and by way of chaffing the Canadians, who must, of course, be foreigners in England if Englishmen are foreigners in Canada.

This is the real explanation of the incident reported from Henley, where it is said the expression was used, "The foreigner wins," in speaking of Mr. Scholes' success. Those Canadians who, in England, after Sir Wilfrid's speech, were saluted by their best friends jocularly with "Good morning foreigner," will fully appreciate the spirit in which the term was used in a good-natured crowd enjoying the sports at Henley.

There are no better sports in the world than the English, nor are there any more hospitable people, and Canadians get the full benefit of their hospitality. Mr. Scholes testifies to this; so do the Canadian bowlers, and it has been the experience of other Canadians and Canadian teams, who have gone to England to take part in various British and international sports. I happen to know the master of Magdalen College mentioned in the despatch of the Canadian Association press correspondent, and I know there is not a more genial man in England, nor one more friendly to Canadians.

In the Parliament and political councils of Great Britain, Canadians are taking a prominent part, and several new candidates for the next election to the British Parliament are Canadians. As in public, so in social and business affairs, and I do not hesitate to say that a Canadian has a better chance of success in London than an Englishman from the provinces. Our country is fully appreciated in the Mother Country, and the present great movement towards a closer union of the Empire is largely influenced by appreciation of the Imperial and commercial importance of Canada.

FROM DOWN UNDER.

AUSTRALIAN LADY STILL RETAINS PLEASANT MEMORIES OF CANADA.

Extracts from a letter received yesterday by Col. Ponton, one of the Belleville delegates to the Chambers of Commerce of the Empire, from a lady in west Australia, wife of one of the Australian delegates:

"I am always very pleased to renew pleasant memories of the Canadian trip. The Australian drought has long since broken up, and last season was one of the best the country has ever had. Our part (the west) luckily has had fine seasons for the last ten years. You look to the end of your winter, but with me, at least, it is always the summer that I pine to bid good-bye to. We have been having cool weather for a month or more, and have had some fine riding and hunting. My husband has been very busy since his return, but never too busy to enjoy talking of Canada, and the kindness and hospitality of the Canadians. It was a splendid experience for us, from the other end of the world, and it has created a new sense of interests for us which we hope one day to renew, either by meeting our friends here in Australia, or by again visiting a place so full of happy associations. Be sure that we wish you and all our Canadian friends, success in the future and every good wish."

CHARMING HOME WEDDING IN THE CITY THIS MORNING

NUPTIALS OF MR. EDWARD B. IRELAND AND MISS ELNA M. ROBINSON.

A pretty home wedding took place at 10.30 this morning at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Robinson, Bridge street, when their daughter, Miss Elna M., became a bride. The groom was Mr. Edward B. Ireland, who is connected with the Canadian Bank of Commerce at Ottawa. The drawing room, where the ceremony was performed, was prettily decorated with ferns and sweet peas. Rev. A. H. Drumm, pastor of the John Street Presbyterian Church, officiated. The bride was handsomely gowned in a dress of Chantilly lace over white chiffon and taffeta. She wore the traditional bridal veil and orange blossoms and carried a shower bouquet of white roses. Her sister, Mrs. F. Reynolds, of Denver, Col., was matron of honor, and assisted the bride. Mrs. Reynolds was attired in a gown of cream lace and taffeta, and carried a bouquet of pink sweet peas. Mrs. Robinson, mother of the bride, was most becomingly attired in a gown of black crepe de chene. The groom was Mr. Frank E. Dench, of the Bank of Commerce at Victoria, B.C.

After the nuptial knot had been tied and congratulations extended the guests partook of the sumptuous repast which had been provided.

That the bride was exceedingly popular was evidenced by the numerous presents which she received, they being both handsome and costly. A cheque from the bride's father was among the chief presents.

Amongst the guests were Mrs. Harding, Brockville; Miss Muriel King, Kingston; Mr. Kenneth Ireland, Kingston; Dr. Farley and wife, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Foster, Mrs. Jas. Grant, Miss Ida Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Caldwell, Mrs. Wm. Sutherland and Miss Della Sutherland, of this city.

The groom's present to the bride was a beautiful diamond and opal cluster ring and to the matron of honor a pearl turquoise pin.

Mr. and Mrs. Ireland left at noon for the east and will, besides visiting many places of interest, enjoy a stay at the seaside before they go to Ottawa to take up their residence. The bride's going away costume was a brown silk shirt waist suit with hat to match. Her many friends in this city will unite with The Intelligencer in offering congratulations and wishing for the estimable young couple a happy and prosperous future.

Physical Culture.

We are pleased to hear that the lectures on physical culture and hygiene, given by Miss C. F. Shaw-Hellier, of London, Eng., in the Council Chamber on Monday and Tuesday last were well attended, and were listened to with deep interest by the many ladies present. A great many ladies also availed themselves of the opportunity of a personal interview with the lecturer, who, we hear, is establishing classes for the further instruction of the ladies of Belleville. Miss Margaret L. Wright, of Toronto, has been appointed manager by the Toronto Vinvl Co. for this county, and will be pleased to communicate with any one who would like to know more of this excellent system of treatment.

Safeguard the Children.

Notwithstanding all that is done by boards of health and charitably inclined persons, the death rate among small children is very high during the hot weather of the summer months in the large cities. There is not probably one case of bowel complaint in a hundred, however, that could not be cured by the timely use of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. Mr. Frank Riggs, of Franklinville, N. Y., in speaking of this remedy said: "I have found it expedient to have a supply of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy on hand. It has been a family safeguard and wh especially beneficial to children, it is equally good in adult case. I recommend it cheerfully and without reservation." For sale by all druggists.

Literary Notes.

THE CANADIAN MAGAZINE.

There are people in this country who are great readers, but who are not overly fond of heavy reading. They want their information in small pellets, well sugar-coated. They seldom evince any hot taste in their gathering of knowledge, being content to do this part of their life's work slowly and well. For such persons, there are parts of the August Canadian Magazine which will please them and parts which will fail to attract them. They will not object to the five short stories, charming bits of fiction as they are. They will not be averse to examining the two well-illustrated articles on "Japan In Time of War" and "Japan's Leaders." They will turn readily to "Idle Moments" and "Oddities and Curiosities." Yet when they come to examine the other articles they will probably pass them by. They do not desire to know whether the first North American settlement was in Massachusetts, Nova Scotia or Quebec, or whether De Monts or Champlain really discovered Canada. They will probably declare "The Settlement of Nova Scotia," by Dr. Hannay, and "Annapolis Royal," by Judge Savary to be "historical rubbish." Perhaps they may wade through the sonorous sentences written by that eminent historical scholar, Dr. Reuben G. Thwaites, of Madison, Wisconsin; and perhaps through Mr. Bradley's splendid description of the Battle of Ticonderoga and the famous charges of the Black Watch. They may read some of the breezy poems. Yet, on the whole, they will probably say "A Magnificent Number; I'll send it to William; he always did want to know about things that were no earthly use to him in business."

McINTOSH BROS.

POLICE KNEW OF A PLOT

Had Watch Set on Assassin's House Night of July 14, But He Did Not Return Home—Identity of the Slayer of Minister Von Plehve Still a Mystery—His Accomplice Was a Jew—M. Witte Offered Vacancy.

St. Petersburg, July 30.—The police have not yet established the identity of the assassin of M. Von Plehve or his accomplice, though it has been ascertained that the former is a little Russian, which accounts for his noticeable accent. The accomplice is a Jew. It has developed that the police for some time past have been aware that a plot was maturing against the Emperor and notified one of the ministers that a party of fifteen anarchists had arrived in St. Petersburg. Several arrests were actually made some days before the assassination of the Minister of the Interior and the police had the assassin's house marked and a trap set for his arrest on the night of July 14, but he did not return home.

Bomb Was Foreign Made.

The bomb which the accomplice dropped in the canal after the assassination has been recovered by the police. It is foreign made, though it is believed to have been loaded in St. Petersburg. It is small and melon-shaped, and is believed to be fully as powerful as the one that killed M. Von Plehve.

The requiem service at M. Von Plehve's house last night was most impressive. The house was beautifully decorated with flowers. Madame Von Plehve and her son were present at the ceremony, as were also many officials and diplomats. A nun in the habit of her order knelt before the coffin intoning prayers for the dead. These prayers will be continued without interruption until after the interment.

The Emperor was not present at the requiem last night, but he will attend the funeral Sunday afternoon.

M. Witte It Is.

London, July 30.—The Daily Telegraph's Berlin correspondent says that Emperor Nicholas sent a telegram to M. Witte, president of the Russian Council of Ministers, asking his advice, and offering him the post of Minister of the Interior with the title of Chancellor.

What Russian Papers Say.

St. Petersburg, July 30.—All the newspapers this morning agree that in the assassination of Minister of the Interior Von Plehve, a great personality has been taken off in the midst of his work.

The newspapers print unusually full and free accounts of the crime, having been officially notified that no restriction will be placed on news or comment, save as they might interfere with the work of the police in unravelling the conspiracy back of the crime, which work is already well under way.

King Sends Condolence.

London, July 30.—King Edward has telegraphed to Emperor Nicholas his sympathy with him on the loss of his distinguished Minister, Von Plehve, and has received a very appreciative reply.

Anarchists in New York.

New York, July 30.—Five thousand persons cheered themselves hoarse over the death of the Russian Minister of the Interior, Von Plehve, and shouted praise for his assassin in Cooper Union last night. Many anarchists, who waved red bandannas, were present.

Killed in a Gallery.

Winnipeg, July 30.—Jack Gold of Milwaukee was shot and instantly killed by a shot from a revolver in the hands of B. Huffman, a boy from Minneapolis, on the Pike at the Dominion Exhibition grounds, yesterday afternoon. They were both employed in a shooting gallery. Huffman, who is only a boy of 17 years, was handling the revolver when it was accidentally discharged, killing his friend. Huffman was placed under arrest, pending an investigation. Gold was only about 21 years old, and the two were on the best terms of friendship.

A Second Visitation.

Toronto, July 30.—Warwick Bros. & Rutter did not exhaust their bad luck in the big fire last April, but were visited again yesterday evening in their temporary premises on the south side of East Queen street near Yonge. The fire brigade did prompt work and prevented what might easily have been a disastrous fire. Mr. Rutter stated that it was impossible to give an estimate of the loss, which was over $5,000 and might run to $10,000.

PERISHABLE PRODUCTS

Government Criticized Re Inadequate Facilities.

Sir Richard Cartwright Shifts Blame to Hon. Sydney Fisher, But Dr. Sproule Showed That He Made the Contracts and Thus Was Responsible—Mr. Smith's Motion Defeated on a Vote of 62 to 38.

Ottawa, July 30.—On the opening of the House yesterday Sir Wm. Mulock introduced his bill to consolidate and amend the acts respecting alien labor. At the request of Mr. Borden, he explained the measure at some length.

Of Interest to Farmers.

For failing to give adequate facilities for the shipment of the perishable products of Canada the Government was vigorously criticised by E. D. Smith of Wentworth, in the House to-day. Mr. Smith concluded his speech with a motion asking the House to condemn the Government for not securing for the farmers of Canada "a safe and speedy transport for the perishable products of the farm and competitive low prices for freight."

Blames Sir Richard.

Dr Sproule showed that the contracts with the steamship companies in the matter of cold storage and ventilated chambers were loosely drawn. They did not impose hard and fast conditions on the steamship company. For this state of affairs, Dr. Sproule blamed the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It was Sir Richard Cartwright who made the contract, and he was responsible for the defects in them. Provision should be made for a thorough system of inspection. The Government appeared to be indifferent to the interests of the producing class. Though professing great concern for the farmers, the Government was not sufficiently interested in their welfare to give them a good system of cold storage.

Guilty of Neglect of Duty.

Mr. Broder of Dundas, passed severe censure on the Government for its failure to make proper provisions for the shipment of butter and cheese. Its indifference to this important question could only be characterized as guilty neglect of duty. The Government claimed credit for assisting the butter and cheese industry.

"Vote for Laurier and 11½c. cheese," was one of the Liberal campaign cries in 1896. The 11½c. cheese had not materialized. In the past seven years the price of cheese had increased by only three-tenths of one cent a pound. Mr. Broder expressed the opinion that this increase in the price of cheese would not be maintained if the Government continued its policy of indifference towards the dairy interests.

The House then divided on Mr. Smith's amendment, which was negatived on a vote of 38 to 62.

As to Ben. Russell.

Col. Sam Hughes called attention to the report that B. Russell, M.P., for Hants, was to be appointed chief justice of the Nova Scotia Supreme Court.

Mr. Fitzpatrick replied that nothing had yet been decided on in regard to this appointment. He thought, however, that it would be hard to get a better man for the office than Mr. Russell.

Mr. Borden wanted to know the reason for the delay in making the appointment. He understood that the position was being kept open for reasons of political expediency. To this Mr. Fitzpatrick answered that the appointments of the chief justices and the judges of the Supreme Court are not included in the patronage of the Minister of Justice. They are left to the Prime Minister. Mr. Fitzpatrick promised to give his attention to the vacancy of Nova Scotia as soon as Parliament prorogues.

To the Exchequer Court.

Col. Hughes asked if it was the intention to appoint a second judge to the Exchequer Court.

Mr. Fitzpatrick replied that it might be necessary to make such an appointment, but there was no intention of making it at the present time.

Praise For the Army.

Mr. Fitzpatrick stated that an appropriation of $2,000 to pay for the supervision of paroled and discharged prisoners was put in the estimates at the suggestion of Superintendent Archibald of the Salvation Army, who had done an immense amount of good in connection with the prison gate work of the army. The Salvation Army had men to attend at the prison gate, knowing through information given by the police department when prisoners would be liberated. The liberated men are taken hold of, employment is found for them, and they are given all possible opportunity. It was absolutely necessary, Mr. Fitzpatrick said, to give a man a chance if he has fallen into trouble, and the best way when he gets out of jail is to let him see that society does not turn its back upon him.

The reading of the vote was changed to include traveling expenses so that it would be possible to buy a kit for a discharged convict or anything to enable him to earn a living. The item passed.

Canada's Sovereignty.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier gave the House an interesting account of the measures taken by the Dominion Government to assert Canada's sovereignty over the waters of Hudson Bay. The question came up in connection with an item of $200,000 for the purchase, equipment and maintenance of vessels to be employed in patrolling the waters in the northern portion of Canada; also for establishing and maintaining police and customs ports at such points on the mainland or islands as may be deemed necessary from time to time.

A Row at Midnight.

An item of $60,000 for a wharf at Seven Islands developed a rather nice little "job." Last session $25,000 was voted to build a wharf at Seven Islands, on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, but the fact was elicited by E. F. Clarke that the money was reall, paid over to the North Shore Power Company, for its own benefit.

Although the Government engineer did not recommend the deal, the Government took over the wharf at $24,000, and allowed the company $21,000 for "material on hand." The statement was read that doubtless a portion of this $60,000 was required to help Mr. Girard of Chicoutimi and Mr. Fitzpatrick to secure their elections.

Mr. Fitzpatrick in an excited manner declared that his law firm had nothing to do, as alleged, with the purchase of the pulp limit, which, he said, was bought at public auction, and that he would willingly grant a commission of enquiry in this matter.

Mr. Taylor insisted that a commission, untrammed by limitations, should be granted, in which event the author of the statement would prove his assertions.

Finally, Mr. Taylor moved that the $60,000 item be struck out.

His motion was defeated by 35 to 21.

The House adjourned shortly after midnight.

COLONEL LAKE SUGGESTED.

As Probable Chief of Staff of the Canadian Militia.

Ottawa, July 30.—(Globe Special.)—Sir Frederick Borden has taken the initial step toward the reorganization of the Canadian militia in accordance with the new Militia Act. He has applied to the Imperial authorities for a suitable officer to fill the position of chief of staff, one of the most imporant positions in the new militia council. The position of general officer commanding no longer exists, but Sir Frederick deems it advisable to obtain the services of an experienced Imperial officer of the militia, and would be well pleased if he could obtain the services in that capacity of Col. Lake, chief of staff of the first army corps, under Sir Evelyn Wood. Col. Lakes is well acquainted with the Canadian militia, having at one time been quartermaster-general of the militia, and on several occasions he acted as general officer commanding temporarily. He is a thorough soldier, who well understands and appreciates the conditions which prevail under the Canadian system. He was decidedly popular with all ranks, and on leaving Canada was highly recommended by Sir F. Borden to the Secretary of State for War. If his services can be secured, his appointment will no doubt meet with general favor among the militia.
